The Project-A-Lite transformer is absolutely dependable for motion picture projection purposes. It Saves Money for YOU. Accurate in its performance and dependable in its services. A positive regulation of amperage is guaranteed. This is very important. One transformer is sufficient for two motion picture machines. Takes proper care of voltage ranges of from 90 to 130 volts and gives you either 20 or 30 amperes on the secondary side. Made standard for 60 cycles. Special transformers made on request for any voltage or cycles. Use Project-A-Lite transformers and Adapters for Mazda Projection of Motion Pictures and be satisfied. Saves Money.

opinion regarding the conditions of the operating or projection rooms in general and how they can be improved from a sanitary-equipment and physical standpoint. A lengthy treatise might be written under each of the foregoing heads in order to thoroughly do the subject justice. For the sake of brevity I would like to take the question of room sanitation first.

As we all know, owing to the inflammable nature of our commercial film, the various legislative bodies, both municipal and state, at the request of fire underwriters, fire chiefs, and building inspectors, enacted legislation which necessitated the surrounding of motion picture apparatus by booths or enclosures. This of course was done to protect life and property. It is interesting to note that most of this legislation was enacted many years ago when undoubtedly this safeguarding was necessary, still with the constant application by machine manufacturers of fire preventatives to the projectors resulting in the almost fool-proof machines of today, coupled with a higher grade of projectionists, there has been no relaxation on the part of authorities to their determination to confine the projectionist to the smallest possible area.

In many cases, the size and proportion of these booths or projection rooms as many of them are now termed, were adopted by states and communities with but little regard for the health or welfare of the occupant, but simply because the state from which this particular statute was taken happened to be using this size room. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts was the first to enact projection room legislation, which called for an enclosure 8 x 8 x 6.

Other states were quick to follow, and in many cases instead of working out the best possible legislation for themselves, conveniently adopted the Massachusetts statutes in its entirety, regardless of whether it was good or bad. This to my mind, is one of the reasons why so many of these small, badly ventilated, and entirely unhealthful "torture chambers" are spread throughout our land.

My experience in appearing before legislative committees in different states for various unions of projectionists, has taught me that it is almost impossible to repeal bad legislation, unless one has the popular support of the public or the press behind him, and it strikes me as I write this, that the trade papers of our industry might well take up this matter of unsanitary projection rooms, and through their columns show the exhibitor how booth efficiency can be increased by improving conditions in these booths. It will be necessary of course to enlist the help of the projectionists themselves, which would be an easy matter, as I know.

At the present time, with the majority of booths placed as near the roof as the architect could possibly place it, with a suction fan, the function of which is to draw all the dead and second-hand air from the ceiling of the theatre, into the booth, the position of the projectionist from a health standpoint is not an enviable one. If the breathing-in of the various germs that rush at him through the look-out hole do not "get" him, he is indeed fortunate.

Add to this, the close confinement of both the operator and his assistant in a small, overheated, space for a certain number of hours each day or night, and one does not wonder, in addressing an assemblage of these men, at the lack of rosy cheeks and the apparent inattention which is nothing more than a sort of stupor produced by the lack of real oxygen.

One of the real reasons why the motion picture projectionist as a class is subject to pulmonary or lung trouble is from constantly breathing in the fine particles of carbon ash, or deposit which is so common in lamp houses, where it very often accumulates to the depth of an eighth of an inch wherever the hand of the cleaner cannot reach it, and which also is found in all exposed parts of the booth in layers upon which one can write his name with the finger tip as upon a frosty window pane.

Attempts have been made in various states, where the Workmen's Compensation Act is operative, to have lung troubles of all sorts among projectionists listed as "occupational diseases," on account of this condition.

In view of these facts, it certainly behooves the manager, in planning his new theatre, to include in the projection room as many sanitary features as the law will allow him to squeeze into it, in order to protect the health of his projectionist as much as possible. Many managers wonder why their man dashes out of his booth as soon as the "Good-Night" slide has been taken off the screen, when they themselves will avoid going near that same booth for days at a time on account of the stifling and intolerable conditions prevailing in it.

When the managers as a whole will learn, that by installing the right sort of ventilating system, a wash bowl, a drinking fountain, and other little conveniences, then will they find out that the efficiency of their men will be at the same high point at the end of the show as it was at the start of the day's work. Statistics throughout the industry show us that the majority of booth accidents occur after a man has been rendered drowsy and heavy toward the end of the day's work, by the various elements in the booth, and an earnest perusal of these same statistics show one, that the majority of projectionists are carried off by pneumonia and consumption.

A movement to increase booth areas would meet with the hearty approval of health and life insurance companies, by whom the projectionist is today considered a "bad-risk" not so much on account of the hazard of his calling, as the great demand made upon his vitality by the unhealthful conditions under which his working hours are spent.

I feel, however, that the constantly increasing size of projector will gradually increase the size of the room, but so far the increases have been grudgingly given by the authorities and the architects. I have a very interesting story to tell you of a progressive western manager who asked the co-operation of one of our executives in laying out his projection room which as he says "is the heart of his theatre, and he's going to build his theatre around it." You may rest assured that when this room is completed it will be a model in every way, not only from an equipment and electrical stand-point, but from a sanitary viewpoint as well. There is yet much that I would like to say upon the subject of room sanitation, but space will not allow, but I would like to say in closing, that until many projection rooms have been made a bit more comfortable, there is little incentive for the man in charge to stay after his show is over in order to give extra attention to the maintenance of his equipment.

A New Mazda Adapter

A NEW and very logical device for adapting the present carbon using lamp houses to Mazda projection has recently been designed by W. R. Rutledge, of Rutledge & Company, Chicago. Mr. Rutledge has long been engaged in electrical development in the Northwest and for the past year has devoted his time to devising suitable means of placing the present 30 volt 30 ampere and the 20 volt 30 ampere mazda lamp, in the type of lamphouse so generally used for carbon lighting. His experiments have resulted in the Project-A-Lite devices now in use in many theatres. These devices consist of an Adapter, which is placed in the lower carbon jaw, simply by removing the carbons and changing the incoming wires so as to attach them to the Adapter instead of to the carbon holder, as at present used. All adjustments and regulation of the position of the lamp, in relation to the rear condenser mounting, are made as though carbons were being used. It is simple to operate and accurate in its results.

An ampere regulating transformer, designed to insure accurate regulation is used in connection with the Adapter, thus making a complete unit that insures accuracy in both regulation of current and projection of the film, resulting in a perfect definition of the pictures shown. While the Adapter just placed on the market is a new device, the transformer has been used for motion picture projection for the past two years and has given excellent satisfaction to many exhibitors who have used it.

In the future both the transformer and Adapter will be manufactured and sold under the Project-A-Lite trade mark,

The Crystal Bead Screen

Most of the screens now in use may be placed in one of three classes: those with a calcimined finish; with a metallic surface; and the mirror screens. Now comes a screen which had its beginning across the water but which has really been perfected in this country—the Crystal Bead screen.

Before any tests are made on this screen its appearance is striking. There is a richness about its surface which attracts the eye. On closer examination the surface is seen to consist of thousands of minute pearls placed as close together as it is possible to get them. The material which serves as a backing for the screen and on which the pearls are stuck is itself a clear white. Needless to say, to produce a perfect screen it is necessary that the beads be applied evenly all over the surface and it is in this feature that the patent lies, a method known only to the owners and inventor.

One advantage of the crystal bead screen is its applicability to any house whether it be narrow or wide. The light rays striking the small beads are reflected in such a way that the reflection at the sides is as good as at the center. This feature obviates the necessity of having a different surface for houses with different dimensions.

One other advantage of this screen is that it may be cleaned at any time with soap and water. The surface will not dry streaked as happens so many times with other screens having patented surfaces.

This screen is in use at many of the finest theatres in Cleveland and the pictorial results in these houses speak volumes of words for the excellence of the beaded surface.

Carbon Sizes

A. M. Barton asks: "Would like information as to the amount of current required for projection. At present, I am using 30 Amp. for 91' throw and ¾" soft carbon and ½" hard core carbon. I am building an addition to my theatre which will give me a throw of 121'. If I increase the amperage, say to 40, what size carbon will be required?"

Reply: Assuming that you are using direct current your present carbon sizes are already slightly over-size. For 25 to 50 amperes you should use a ⅝" upper cored carbon and a 5/16" lower solid. From this you will see that even though you change from 30 to 40 amperes there will be no need for changing your carbon sizes, except to reduce them as we have suggested. With a carbon too large for the amperage your light will be inferior due to the fact that crater will not be heated to as high brilliancy as is demanded. Try the smaller sizes and let us know the results.

Pathescope Improvement

After much experimenting the incandescent lamp which has been used in the Premier Pathescope has been superseded by another lamp perfected by the Edison Lamp Works. The new bulb operates at 14 volts and 4 amperes and gives a screen brilliancy several times greater than the old style lamp.

The Waltz in Pictures

THE only legitimate field for dance compositions is the dancing floor or a film scene distinctly portraying a certain dance. The one-step, the fox-trot, etc., have no place in the film drama (except the comedy) unless employed as a direct cue. The waltz, however, is the only dance composition which also can be used successfully in other capacities such as society gatherings, garden scenes, outdoor scenes, neutral situations, love themes, etc., but not every waltz is suitable for the above purposes.

The strict and stiff dance rhythm predominating in most waltzes, renders them unavailable for anything but the dance. There is only one kind of waltz that can be considered a very valuable addition to any musicians library playing for pictures, and that is a waltz with that dreamy melody possessing the quality of lulling the audience into silence or the waltz with that haunting melodious trio stealing its way into the peoples' hearts, such as the following example:

There is no question that waltzes are as essential for picture playing as incidental and dramatic music. Several readers of this column have approached us for lists of good motion picture waltzes, and believing that such a list is in general demand, and would benefit all musicians employed in this particular phase of the motion picture industry, we herewith quote the following waltzes as suitable for musical film interpretation:

1—Mystery Waltz ..... Baynes
2—Adieu Waltz ..... Friml
3—Valse Pathetique ..... Lake
4—Velvet of the Rose ..... Barnard
5—Kisses ..... Zamecnik
6—I'm A-Longin' Fo' You ..... Hathaway
7—Valse Annette ..... Baxter
8—Valse Elaine ..... Baxter
9—Valse Fascination ..... F. H. Grey
10—Valse June ..... Baxter
11—Mia Cara ..... Hammerstein
12—Heartstrings ..... Vegsey
13—You and I ..... Langey
14—The Charmers ..... Vegsey
15—Sleeping Rose ..... Borch
16—Golden Youth ..... Rosey
17—Valse Moderne ..... Rosey
18—Mysterious Nights ..... Berg
19—Famabella ..... Grimm
20—Blue Rose ..... Logan
21—Moonlight ..... Logan
22—Mammy's Lullaby ..... Roberts
23—Baby Jim ..... Archer
24—Juno Waltz ..... Ford
25—Nona Waltz ..... Vandersloot
26—Naomi Waltz ..... Vandersloot
27—Sunlight Love ..... Lincoln
28—Shadows ..... Lutter
29—Myra Waltz ..... Vandersloot
30—Valse Divine ..... Rosey
31—Kentucky Dreams ..... Henry & Onivas
32—That Naughty Waltz ..... Sol P. Levy
33—Thoughts of You ..... Briers
34—Dream Girl ..... Harlem
35—Debutante ..... Harlem
36—When You Hold Me In Your Arms .. Klickman
37—Valse Divine ..... Rosey

The above mentioned numbers are not a complete list of waltzes suitable for motion picture work and MOTION PICTURE NEWS will free of charge furnish its readers with a complete list and names of publishers upon request.

Review of Latest Musical Compositsons

1—"Tents of Arabs," by Lee David. A one-step intermezzo of fire and melody. (B. D. Nice & Co.)

2—"Roses of Picardy," by Hadyn Wood. The great ballad featured by John McCormack in all of his concerts. (Chappell & Co.)

3—"Dear Heart," a sensational waltz by W. C. Polla. It is one of the biggest hits of the season. (C. C. Church & Co.)

4—"Kiss Me Again," by Victor Herbert. A melodious waltz and the exact arrangement of the Victor record. (Carl Fischer-Whitmark.)

5—"Sweet Yesterdays," by Arthur A. Penn. The waltz sensation of this generation. It is the greatest American waltz published and proved a tremendous success. (Carl Fischer-Whitmark.)

Max H. Manne, drummer Rivoli Theatre in New York

6—"Mercedes," by T. H. Rollinson. On themes from Dissane's celebrated overture, "Mercedes." A march of exceptional musical merits for military bands. (Oliver Ditson.)

7 "Lyric Suite," by E. Greig. The originally and fascinating charm of this composer's music has never been demonstrated as forcibly and convincingly as in the four movements of this Suite. Each number in its own particular way is a gem and the arrangement suitable for either large or small orchestra. (Carl Fischer.)

8 "Polonaie," by Glazounow. A fine stately number irresistible in its brilliant orchestral setting and stirring melodic material. Equally effective and serviceable for either concert stage, theatre or the motion picture. (Carl Fischer.)

9—"Hunkatin," by Sol P. Levy. A half-tone one-step. Mr. Levy is also the composer of "That Naughty Waltz." (Belwin, Inc.)

10—"Budding Spring," by E. Platzman. A romance of exceptional music merits unique in the annals of musical literature. (Belwin, Inc.)

11—"Ching A Ling," by Gold and West. This beautiful oriental song and fox-trot breathes the lilting, tilting, intoxicating atmosphere of the East. (Chas. K. Harris.)

"A Knight of Western Land"
(Capitol—Neal Hart—Two Reels)

THIS short "western" introduces Neal Hart after a sojourn in feature length pictures. Formerly identified with Universal he has now taken up the banner of the Capitol Film Company and he bids fair to be heard from in his interpretation of the western cowboy. The picture does not depart from the beaten path in regard to its plot material, it being simply the familiar theme of righteousness routing villainy through the aid of the hero's horsemanship, his six-shooter and his lasso.

There are no soft passages discernable although the element of pathos makes a bid for expression. Some of the scenes are rather crude, particularly that one which shows an old man fighting hard for life. But there is plenty of western action unfolded in the shape of hard riding and gun toting.

Mr. Hart cannot be called an actor in the widest stretch of the imagination. He is simply a "native son" who looks natural in the saddle. And his best moments are achieved when he is in repose. He should capitalize his physique and his horsemanship and leave the "emoting" to the so-called Mansfields of the screen. Adequate support is given the star by Joe Rickson and Janis June, his leading lady. The locations are colorful and send forth a photographic appeal. Not a big two reeler but a satisfactory one for the average program.—Laurence Reid.

"Sound Your 'A'"
(Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon—Fox)

MUTT and Jeff will have their hands full for the coming screen year since they have contracted with their creator, Bud Fisher, to turn out fifty-two cartoons at the rate of one a week. These popular comedians are seemingly tireless since they are contented to suffer all sorts of indignities—indignities which would kill any two men in the flesh. Jeff suffers the most because he is a little fellow but he doesn't mind it because he is built close to the ground and his injuries would not figure so much as with Mutt who is something of a beanpole in physique.

The two freaks have launched their fall boom with "Sound your 'A'" and this time their artistic temperaments are given expression. The theatre is packed from pit to dome—the audience is in a suspensive state of mind awaiting the golden notes of the great Mutt. Little Jeff is in the orchestra pit wielding the baton. And the tenor opens the pages of his pathetic ballad and his huge mouth at the same time. And how that freak can sing.

Will he ever stop? No—he has the floor and there is no stop-watch on his act. His warbling is so dramatic, so full of pathos that tears flow spontaneously from every eye in the house. But the gallery birds are lucky for they are saved a ducking. Their tears grow into a small ocean and spilling over the railings flood the helpless ones below. Oceans of tears travel down the aisles and nearly wash away the theatre. And when Mutt is through the house is emptied. The audience simply had to leave the place for safety.

There is a real idea behind this cartoon and it is extravagantly conceived. It is said that an attache of the Rivoli suggested it. He should be encouraged to co-operate with Bud Fisher again. A genuinely funny cartoon in every sense of the word.—Laurence Reid.

"Fate's Frame-Up"
(Capitol Picture in Two Reels with Al Jennings)

THE Capitol Film Company has launched its two reel Neal Hart and Al Jennings pictures and from the meritorious quality of the latter star's first Capitol venture, it should be a concern to be reckoned with in short reel subjects. The notorious reformed outlaw is one of America's most colorful figures. He carried on the Message of Jesse James and outlaw that he was more than anyone else kept alive the glory of the pioneer days of the wild and woolly west—the west of hold-ups and robberies. And now that he is in pictures he is telling us how he became a bandit.

The feature is depicted in narrative style with Mr. Jennings talking in the subtitles. And because his days of outlawry were crowded with action from the time that he departed from the "straight and narrow" the picture is rich in this element. There is an intensity to the scenes which grip the spectator and the action carries a force which is always cumulative. Al Jennings was not a bad man from the start but he became one because justice was so grossly violated.

It is a stirring drama which is found in "Fate's Frame-Up" which is only natural when one considers the active life of the star. The picture is thoroughly engrossing and offers an entertaining account of a bandit—a real one and not the figure of some scenarist's imagination. Its authentic quality and the elements of action and suspense should make it an ideal short subject for any exhibitor's program.—Laurence Reid.

"Photoplay Screen Supplement"
(August—Educational—One Reel)

THE Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement for August shows Mary Pickford, Bryant Washburn, Enid Bennett, Monroe Salisbury, Helen Eddy and Harry Carey. "Tea for Three" introduces Mary Pickford in and around her Hollywood home and the tea for three incident shows her being entertained by her little niece with the third guest a cute pet dog who quite understands table manners. There are some very pretty scenes calculated to bring the home life of the star close to the fans.

Bryant Washburn, his wife and "Sonny" are shown in pleasant home environments, as is also Enid Bennett and her husband, Fred Niblo, directing an "at home" comedy.

Monroe Salisbury and Helen Eddy are shown at ease, and then later on a Universal stage. Harry Carey is shown with numerous others on his own ranch just to prove that the star is a "regular" cowboy.

The entire reel should prove very entertaining to the many desirous of seeing their favorites outside the roles they are generally cast for. It is a refreshing and distinct novelty.—Tom Hamlin.

"Chop Suey and Company"
(Harold Lloyd Comedy-Pathe)

HAROLD LLOYD and his company have journeyed to most every conceivable place to obtain "locations" for their comedies but it is the first time in our recollection that they have picked on Chinatown for their latest breeze. The fun in "Chop Suey and Company" is not so spontaneous nor sparkling as in some recent releases. Which may be accounted for because the stunts are executed more or less seriously. And most of them are labored.

Harold Lloyd is a cop here and his chief assistants, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels a copper and "wild woman" respectively. The two members of the force are pounding the pavement in front of a chop suey joint when they see what is to all appearances, an innocent girl being led to chow mein. They raid the place and the action starts—action which is measured by the ability to duck and swing and slide and spank and gargle noodle soup. Harold and Harry spy the girl being led to the opium joint in the rear but the wily Chinks fool them by turning over the tables, and glued underneath are plates of chop suey, chow mein, and all the other dishes you get in a chop suey restaurant.

Finally they are propelled through space and land out on the sidewalk. And a fade-out shows each swinging his nightstick over the other's head. There is nothing new in this picture. Lloyd is such an original comedian that this fact is brought home.—Laurence Reid.

"Dabbling in Society"
(Sunshine Comedy—Fox)

"DABBLING in Society" is a broad satire on the art of winning a beautiful girl. Her fame has spread broadcast with the result that a false Russian nobleman and a soulful individual are desirous of marrying her. The girl runs an advertisement in the paper for a maid and the Count bedecks himself in feminine attire and has no trouble in getting the job. The soulful one on the other hand is a fortune hunter and the girl plans to learn his pedigree by having her maid—the false Count—exchange places with her.

Now enters the detective who is hot on the trail of the Count. And the soulful one also puts in an appearance. He is not taken with the fat masquerader at all but the detective is. The discovery comes when the false Count loses his wig. And then it is an exciting chase by the three men to win the real beauty. The soulful one wins.

The comedy is moving all the time and it generates a goodly number of laughs. Ethel Teare is the girl in the case while the three suitors are played by Paddy McGuire, Frank Coleman, and Dave Morris. In all a pleasing bit of foolishness. Roy Del Ruth directed.—Laurence Reid.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 4, 1919.

"THE WORLD AFLAME"
(PATHE)

Keenan Lends Vitality to "Talky" Subject

THE age old discussion of Capital versus Labor is expounded in the Frank Keenan Special, "The World Aflame." Expounded looks like the right word, since dramatic action is largely subordinated for Mr. Keenan's word pictures concerning the ever present vexing problem quoted above. Such a theme cannot be worked out with full dramatic sweep and power for phrasings must be incorporated to drive home the salient points. But any way you look at it, Mr. Keenan will set people thinking for his solution, if practised, would create a Utopia for the working man.

It is a vital theme, but he lends more vitality to it as an actor than as an author. The fore part of the drama builds with a cumulative force and it is only in the anti-climactic development of the finale that it loses somewhat in strength. The star is elected mayor upon the slogan, "Better Service," and it is a long and bitter fight to realize upon the expression. Strikes must be put down, and a spirit of benevolence must be instilled in the minds of the capitalists, all of which necessitates an expenditure of dramatic conflict and contrast. But the subtitles are far too "wordy," and tend to lessen the intensity of the scenes.

Director Warde has taken advantage of every suggestion, every value. His strike is decidedly realistic. In all the picture carries conviction not only for its theme, but for the convincing manner it is interpreted by the star and his players. It is a thing right up with the times.—Length, 6 reels.—Released August 7.—Laurence Reid.

George Knox.....Joseph McManus

By Frank Keenan.
Scenario by Frank Keenan and Jack Cunningham.
Directed by Ernest C. Warde.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the most vital subjects of the day will be presented when the Frank Keenan special production comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The name of the picture is "The World Aflame" and Mr. Keenan is the star. The age old problem of capital versus labor is unfolded here in a manner which will give food for thought. And it is a feather in Mr. Keenan's cap that he is the author as well as the star.

He appears as Carson Burr, a financial power, whose one dream is the millenium when the brotherhood of man will become a reality. When his own servants and those serving the public make him lose a snug fortune in their inefficiency he concludes that he will run for mayor on the platform, "Better Service." Of course he wins, but his term is not a bed of roses by any means. A vicious group of alien "reds" have hatched a city wide strike to tie up all industry. But Burr is a fighter and he employs the soldiers and armed men to run a street car through as he promised he would do. And he breaks the strike because of his doctrine of fair play. He urges with several financial powers to institute a form of profit-sharing with their employes. And they accede to his suggestions.

Indeed the city seems a decent place to live in for the workingman because of Burr's high sense of honor and the poor man's rights. Interspersed with this dramatic depiction of capital versus labor is a counterplot of love. Burr's daughter realizes that she loves her father's secretary. He wins her over because he brings out that he is only trying to be a good servant for a bigger servant—the servant of the people.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a good many angles to feature here. First off you have a tremendous theme—a theme which has vexed the country for a good many years. It is the theme of capital versus labor. Mention that Mr. Keenan has turned author with striking success. He has solved the millenium for the working man by making his idea pregnant with the words, "Better Service." Bring out that the figure enacted by the star is elected mayor on this slogan. He holds the idea that the brotherhood of man can be reached by closer harmony between employer and employe. And use questions—leading ones—how does he bring it about? This will excite curiosity.

Then send out teasers—red teasers of the title announcing that Frank Keenan will be at your theatre in a vital play of today—a play that will set every one thinking. Mention that he is the author.

An exciting moment in "The World Aflame" a Pathe feature starring Frank Keenan

PROGRAM READER

This is the age of democracy and the salvation of the working man in vexing the ablest minds in the world. How to make him contented. How to bring him into more harmonious relations with his employers. This momentous theme is presented in "The World Aflame," the Frank Keenan special production which comes to this theatre shortly. Mr. Keenan earns his laurels here because he is not only the star, but the author. And his theme will set you thinking. The poor man will see his Utopia—the rich man will realize the spirit of benevolence. And Mr. Keenan has enlarged his theme by showing the curse of Bolshevism—the antagonism toward America by foreign paid agitators.

You will see a powerfully dramatic story enacted with keen understanding. The actor-author has his finger on the public pulse. Who knows but what he may have solved the problem of capital versus labor? His idea is sound. He expounds dramatically in a series of absorbing scenes the ideal state—the brotherhood of man. His slogan as mayor, the part he interprets here, is "Better Service." Come and see how he makes use of it.

CATCH LINES

Wherever he turned men were decidedly independent. They concluded it didn't pay to treat the public kindly. So he caught the idea of running for mayor on the platform, "Better Service." What came of his experiences? See "The World Aflame."

He was a fearless mayor and his whole ambition was to bring the working man in closer harmony with the capitalist.

Travesty on Melodrama Will Amuse

A BROAD burlesque on Western melodramas with Dorothy Gish, inimitable in the principal comedy role. This is very funny in spots and mildly amusing all the way through. It will satisfy generally as light summer entertainment and is novel in getting away from the stereotyped offering. Some of the wild riding stunts are thrilling and the photoplay registers as a good travesty on the much overdrawn western melodramas.

The direction, continuity and sets answer all the purposes of the very slight story found necessary for a satire. The cast is adequate. In this we see the city chap, the band of outlaws, the sheriff, and all the other characters that go to make up a wild west story. And ever present is Dorothy Gish in her role, "Nugget Nell." An old miner whom she once befriended left her his "child." The baby proved to be a six feet tall girl when it arrived. But "Nugget Nell" proved to be a good mother to the "child" even though she found it more convenient to sit in the "baby's" lap instead of trying to hold the "child's" weight. And Nugget Nell shoots up bandit bands and holds up stages and is the leader in all sorts of daredevil western stuff.

This picture should draw very well at the first run theatres and the high class neighborhood houses. And it will generally please these audiences as a refreshing picture. The draw will be averaged at the popular, family and labor class theatres and they will be generally entertained by the picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 13.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Gish will shine as "Nugget Nell" her newest Paramount picture at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

This is described as a mirth-provoking travesty on the wild and wooly western melodramas that patrons of many theatres are accustomed to see produced seriously.

The screen production, "Nugget Nell" is broad burlesque and highly amusing but at the same time shows thrilling rides on the upper decks of plunging horses. It shows the regular bandit gang of desperadoes and the sheriff who is both a hero and a lover. Of course the stage is held up not once but several times.

Dorothy Gish as Nugget Nell is the two gun girl who keeps a modest eating house where the stage coach stops. And she meets the city chap and admires his beauty. Then she saves him from the bad bold bandits. Bullets bounce off Nugget Neil like peas from out a pod. She has a charmed life but fails to charm the peachy city chap.

She rides a horse right side up and then head down. She wears chaps and plunges through the five reels like a regular western daredevil. And she finally wins the sheriff and they are tied for life. But not until after he rescues her from the perils of the burning cabin where she and the now thoroughly scared city brother is surrounded by the bandit gang.

The bold sheriff is compelled to lasso the bandits one by one and drag them from their prey. It is wild and thrilling but it is travesty all the way through. It was intended as such and made chiefly to amusingly entertain the wise ones and the blase ones who are said to be surfeited by the regular line of melodramatic productions.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you should feature the star's name and also that it is a Paramount Picture as this brand is well advertised. And "Nugget Nell" is a title that you can have a great many catch lines for inasmuch as the picture is a travesty and the lines should bring many laughs and therefore attract the required attention.

For a lobby a wild western arrangement of guns, robes, saddles, etc., etc., would attract attention. Cowboy outfits for girl ushers would be worth while as the girl character dresses in such an outfit. Advertise this broadly as a travesty on Western melodrama and anounce that all the regular thrills are injected that ever occurred in any five other melodramas.

Dorothy Gish is star in "Nuggett Nell," a Paramount release

PROGRAM READER

She was surrounded by bold bad bandits. And she was in a burning cabin with only one bullet left in her gun. But did she despair?

No indeed. For this was Nugget Nell, the two gun woman.

Bullets bounced off her like ideas bounce off a German's head.

And she had a heart as big as all Wyoming. And she was in love with Big Jim the Sheriff.

Hark;—the sound of galloping horse shoes.

There must be horses accompanying these metallic effects. And sure enough there were horses. And one by one her big hero lassoed the vicious bandits and she was saved.

Danger had no terrors for Nugget Nell. She thought nothing of holding up a stage coach for breakfast money. And she was somewhat of a daredevil rider herself.

But the sheriff was mounted upon a charger spurred by Cupid and he caught her.

This thrilling melodrama comes to this theatre next week and is one big broad burlesque on the present day Western melodramas. This Paramount picture is a laughable satire starring Dorothy Gish and will be well worth seeing.

She was a two-gun woman and a riding daredevil. See "Nugget Nell" at the ——— theatre.

"COAX ME"

Love Has Its Innings in World's Latest

OCCASIONALLY a picture comes along which is based solely on the love motive, without its attendant dramatic conflict. Such a picture is World's latest June Elvidge release. And because the familiar elements are missing and in their places is substituted " the give and take " of a gentle love affair, it stands to reason that a simple picture like this one should please, for it balances the customary pictorial fare.

There is nothing big about " Coax Me," since it depicts in the simplest manner possible the fundamental requisite of all drama—the love element. And it is to the credit of the scenarists that they have been able to extend the theme through five reels and keep the spectator fairly interested. The heroine is not sure of herself nor her father, a widower, until the concluding scene. And she must put the young man in the case to the severest test before she decides to answer " Yes." And daughter gives father permission to marry again because she has grown charitable through her own love affair.

A faint suggestion of suspense emerges occasionally when three detectives, who are supposed to be crooks, carry on some mysterious business concerning a certain maid. " Coax Me " is exceedingly gentle of theme and action, but it is fragrant with spring time and love. Miss Elvidge's charm and grace of style will carry it by. Earle Metcalfe and Arthur Donaldson lend strength to the picture. Gilbert Hamilton directed.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 4.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

June Elvidge, the charming and talented World star, will come to the ———— screen on ———— of ———— week in her newest photoplay entitled, " Coax Me." Miss Elvidge has had many delightful subjects since her advent upon the silver-sheet, but it is doubtful if she has ever appeared in a play which carried such a fragrant love theme as " Coax Me." It is adapted from an old play and relates the heart adventures of Nancy Lovejoy, the character interpreted by the star.

Nancy is one of those confident girls who takes love affairs lightly. The men of her circle don't interest her to any extent, her moments being occupied with finding expression in healthy outdoor sports and keeping her father away from marriageable widows. Rather than see his daughter unhappy, Colonel Lovejoy gives up his latest conquest. But he, knowing something of the feminine heart, interests Jim Wildman, 'a manly fellow, in the girl. He feels certain that when Nancy falls in love with the chap she will be willing to forgive and forget her father's latest love drive. And so it happens that Nancy falls head over heels in love with Jim, though she manages to keep him guessing for a time. And naturally she has no objection to her father marrying his latest choice. The picture sparkles with delightful love episodes and the interest mounts as you see Nancy playing her cards for the right man. The play is made real because no girl is ever sure of herself. And balancing the theme is a counterplot of comedy incidents which are calculated to keep one thoroughly amused. The story is well constructed and is charmingly set in a series of enchanting scenes. Miss Elvidge gives a spirited performance and is a fine selection for the part. Her support is capable. Gilbert Hamilton directed.

SUGGESTIONS

The strongest angle to feature in this photoplay is the star. June Elvidge has forged to the head through sheer ability. And this talent coupled with her charm has made her one of the favorite actresses on the film horizon. So feature her strong. Get a hold of all the stories that World has published about her and mention that she is one of the best dressed actresses on the screen. There are no outstanding points in the story to play up—but tell that it is a most interesting play of love and adventure. Mention that the heroine plays a game like all modern girls do in affairs of the heart. Then tell that she is forced to give up and marry. Her heart controls her mind in the matter.

June Elvidge, starring in " Coax Me," a World feature

PROGRAM READER

Nancy Lovejoy was an independent girl and she had a mind of her own. This was often proved in the manner she led her father around. And the men of her circle—why, she didn't care about them at all. They were all nice boys, but—

Then Jim Wildman came into her life and somehow he was different. He had her heart a-fluttering from the start. Yet she was clever enough not to let him think for a moment that she cared for him. She would lead him on. Ah—that was the right way.

But Jim had a game of his own. He was irresistible and he could make love—make it so strongly that girls were swept right off their feet. And so they were married. Nancy didn't care for the woman who was to be her stepmother and she made father promise to give her up. But when Nancy fell in love she was more charitable. That's the way love works. And so papa was made happy. You will see this delightful love story when it comes to this theatre next ———— afternoon and evening. The charming June Elvidge is the star.

CATCH LINES

Did you ever have a girl coax you into marriage? You never understood her and she wasn't quite sure of herself and she was clever enough not to let you know that she wanted you as her husband. Such a girl you will meet when you see June Elvidge in " Coax Me."

Her father's fancy in the springtime lightly turned to thoughts of widows. And daughter didn't like his selection. So she pouted and he promised to remain a widower. But he had his second day when the girl fell in love herself and measured the whole world with eyes of love. See " Coax Me."

"CHECKERS"
(FOX)

A Big Draw for Any Theatre Anywhere

A VIVID melodrama containing all the thrills generally found in serials. It touches the sordid as well as the fashionable side of life and portrays love, tragedy, romance, pathos and comedy. Realistic sets show Chinatown, train wrecks, gambling houses, cabarets, race tracks, a southern home, New York hotel, etc. A chase and running fight underground, the automobile race with the train, the seaplane rescuing the rowboat occupants, etc., are calculated to give lovers of melodrama the real thrills.

It is skillfully directed and the continuity is easy to follow after the first two reels. Previous to that time it lags somewhat in order to properly unfold the story. The hero, the heroine, the victim, the villain and the many other characters are all interpreted by an efficient cast. Jean Acker, the little leading woman, registers charmingly. The daughter of the old southern gentleman loves the New York race-track follower and finally rides her horse to an exciting victory which leaves the villain broke and brings her lover a fortune.

A big draw for any theatre anywhere. The length of the run, of course, depends on how your audiences like melodrama. In the first run theatres it should register a big hit. The high class neighborhood audiences generally will enjoy this picture. The popular and labor audiences will enthuse over this picture more than the other class audiences. With the family audience it should also prove very entertaining.—Length, 7 reels.—Released in August.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

" Checkers," the big spectacular melodrama, has been screened by William Fox and will come to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

Henry M. Blossom, Jr.'s great racing play was a tremendous success on the legitimate stage for many years and the Fox screen production directed by Richard Stanton is said to contain fast action and situations that was found impossible to even attempt to inject in the stage production.

Jean Acker, Thomas J. Carrigan and Ellen Cassity have the three principal roles and there are fifty other prominent parts in addition to the many hundreds of extra people used in the massive production. The great racing scene at Belmont race track; the smashing train wreck on the Jersey Central Railroad; Chinatown and its followers; festive moments in New York cabarets; thrilling action, and the chase underground; all combine to support the producer's contention that " Checkers " is the greatest melodrama ever filmed.

" Checkers " is the race horse follower who has allowed himself to become broke. " Remorse " is the name of a horse owned by a southern girl who is disowned by her father because she looks with favor upon " Checkers " suit.

And in the finale she rides the horse to a victory which spells love, happiness and wealth for the hero and heroine. But all the plottings and counter-plottings and all the dramatic situations and thrilling episodes that ensue before this satisfactory climax is reached is declared to fairly lift the spectators to their feet.

One of the many thrills provided is the rescue of the hero and heroine from a rowboat. And the rescuing is done by a hydroplane which alights near them and they clasp the broad wings of the machine and climb aboard.

" Checkers " promises heart throbs and thrills galore.

PROGRAM READER

" Checkers " is coming.

This is the great racing play success of the legitimate stage.

William Fox has screened Henry M. Blossom, Jr.'s big stage success.

And you will not only see the great race won by the heroine, but you will also be thrilled and entertained by the rescue of the two principals by a hydroplane at sea; you will see thrilling action and fights in New York's Chinatown; an actual smashing train wreck with the cars toppling off the bridge into the water; many exciting rescues; Manhattan cabarets; rogues fighting underground; a chase across the roofs;—oh, well, what's the use. We cannot even attempt to describe this throbbing, thrilling spectacular melodrama.

There is a compelling love interest all the way through the fast and furious action of the production. Thomas J. Carrigan, Jean Acker and Ellen Cassity are the three principals, not forgetting the great race horse, " Remorse."

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this production you should exploit it to the limit. Aside from every exploitation aid furnished by the company you should localize every angle that will help get them in the first day. " Checkers " is a familiar title. It was a great stage success. Concentrate on the title. And this title is so adaptable that merely one suggestion will put you on the right track. Any printer can give you the white and black checkerboard effect and another press impression in red will supply you the placards or long quarter-sheets in two colors that will be strikingly attractive. The words in red should read: " ' Checkers ', the greatest racing photoplay of all time; at the ———— theatre on ————.

"ROUGH RIDING ROMANCE"
(FOX)

Tom Mix Scores with His Horsemanship

IT is "rough riding romance" all right, this new season's release of Tom Mix's. Picturegoers know pretty well what to expect when he graces the screen. They know they will be thoroughly entertained with his expert horsemanship. But where he outshines his competitors of the saddle is the manner he executes original stunts. He is not content to follow a cut and dried pattern of hard riding, but rather seeks to establish something new to the amazement of his spectators.

"Rough Riding Romance" is short on dramatic ingredients. In fact they would be superfluous, for the picture does not attempt to sound the customary notes, but is only conceived for the object of bringing out the star's peculiar talents. It embraces the most exciting thrills, all of which are established upon a humorous foundation, that have come our way in some time. To see Mix ride his horse Tony up and down a high staircase until you grow dizzy watching him, to see him take the horse in a bathroom and give him a drink from the bowl, to see him gallop into a saloon, with Tony familiar with the footrail, to see him lasso a train and swing himself to the roof while riding along side of it are events which will make one gasp with astonishment.

Tom Mix has had stronger dramatic subjects, but nothing quite as strong in the exploitation of death defying stunts. Exhibitors will provide their patrons a thrilling hour with this picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 24.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

No picture star has risen so rapidly on the film horizon as the Fox star, Tom Mix, and he makes his latest appearance at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in a play of daring exploits and love, entitled "Rough Riding Romance." It is a western story—the kind which will draw you to the edge of your seats and keep you there. And Mr. Mix takes more tremendous chances here than he has in a half-dozen previous pictures.

He is seen as Phineas Dobbs, a ranchman and something of a day dreamer. Comes a time when he strikes it rich and with his riches his dream comes true. His ideal of feminine perfection is held up at Cow Hollow by railroad trouble and Phineas rescues her from a group of bad men. She is a Balkan princess and because of his bravery she begs him to follow her to San Francisco to rescue her from further impending trouble. And the ranchman gladly accepts the opportunity not only for the love he bears the girl but for the danger attached.

In fact he just lives on thrilling stunts. And so he goes to 'Frisco and rescues the princess and her father, the king. Both are held for ransom. But Phineas rides his marvelously trained horse up and down the palace stairs and disperses the conspirators. And he does his hazardous feats so quickly that the vicious group have no time to collect their wits. With his rescue work completed, Phineas returns to Cow Hollow and to bring the story to a romantic fulfillment, the princess follows her daring knight.

It is a picture replete with the most daring thrills—all of which are accompanied with remarkable ease by this dare-devil of the screen. "Rough Riding Romance" makes screen history. It is clean, romantic and exciting in a wholesome and humorous way. An excellent company supports the star.

SUGGESTIONS

In this picture you have the best assortment of stunts that Tom Mix has ever accomplished. It is a record breaker in this respect and mention should be made of the hazardous feats that he goes through. Your patrons are familiar with his work, but mention that they will see a new Tom Mix here. Bring out that he accomplishes different things—things greatly more exciting than any he has ever attempted before. Play up the death defying incidents and don't mince matters. If you concentrate upon him you are going to have a lot of Mix followers. He is rapidly becoming one of the most popular actors on the screen.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ——— theatre are in for a genuine treat when they see Tom Mix in "Rough Riding Romance," which appears here shortly. It presents a delightful story, one that is gripping in its love interest and yet so crammed with hazardous exploits that it surpasses anything in this line ever attempted by the star or any of his screen rivals. How Mr. Mix lassoes a train in typical cowboy style, how he makes a death defying dash up and down a high stairway and up a fire escape to rescue a certain princess, how he defies the laws of gravitation on his trusty horse, how he goes through and accomplishes other feats too numerous to mention are events that make one of the most exciting and interesting photoplays that has ever played the ———

It may safely be said that the picture is a record breaker in regard to its variety of perilous stunts. Mr. Mix is supported by the personable Juanita Hansen as his leading woman. Keep your engagements open for his picture. It is decidedly worth while.

CATCH LINES

Come to the ——— theatre next ——— and get acquainted with Tom Mix and his wonderful horse, Tony. You may think you know them by this time, but—.

"DARING HEARTS"
(VITAGRAPH)

May Please Where Stars Are Favorites

A MELODRAMATIC romance set in Alsace Lorraine from 1914 to the armistice. He is the touring American and she is the Alsatian girl. She rescues him many times and he saves her several times. In the course of events he crosses several borders and incidentally shoots down thirty enemy planes from his own machine. You see many shells exploded and brutal Germans stabbing dogs and shooting women. The tiny group of principal characters seem to keep pretty well together for the whole five years and the entire six reels. Photography and sets only passable and cast is just fair.

You can mathematically follow the continuity and automatically grasp the direction. Many improbable situations develop, but this is melodrama, and the romantic story persists in keeping on the uneven tenor of its way. And those that like Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will surely be more than glad to see them again and will undoubtedly consider this picture as very entertaining. It shows them outwitting their pursuers by concealing themselves in a hay wagon and on another occasion she hides him in her bed at midnight. And there are many exciting fights with fists, revolvers and swords, until the hero and heroine are finally victorious and set sail for Hoboken, U. S. A.

The draw will be best in those localities where the two stars are favorites and should please as a picture. The popular and labor audiences and possibly the family audiences will like this best. The first run houses in the big cities and the high class neighborhood houses may not register so heavily with this one.—Length, 6 reels.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are with us again and will be seen on the screen of ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in their latest Vitagraph offering, "Daring Hearts."

Mr. Bushman portrays the role of an American on a motor trip through Alsace during the summer of 1914. He meets the Alsatian girl, portrayed by Miss Bayne. When a German soldier kills her dog and attacks her she is rescued by the young American. Of course it is a case of love at first sight.

During the four years of war which followed the hero becomes an aviator and downs thirty enemy machines. When he is finally brought down within the German lines and made prisoner, the young Alsatian girl prevails upon the German officer to allow her to visit the prison camp. She drops a note at the American prisoner's feet which describes a route for him to take to reach her chateau in case he can escape.

The German officer becomes suspicious. He is determined to win this girl for his own. Accordingly he transfers the young American prisoner to another camp. On the way a daring escape is made. The escaping American is finally traced in a series of daring adventures right to the very room of the young Alsatian girl at midnight.

He is captured and taken to be shot and the young girl intercedes for him by offering herself to the German officer. A ruse enables her to secure the written order freeing the American and during the daring escape of the hero and heroine towards the Holland border, the chateau with the German officers and his men is blown up the very day the armistice is signed.

And the two are married in an American trench by an American Chaplain and leave for the land of the free. Vitagraph announces that there are hundreds of thrills embellishing this romantic story and that Bushman and Bayne are, as ever, the ideal screen lovers.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture it may be best to concentrate on the two co-stars, Bushman and Bayne. They have been absent from the screen for some time now and no doubt many will be anxious to see them again, as they have both had a wide vogue and a big following. If your public has tired of the so-called war stuff it may be well to emphasize that there are no battles and that this is not a war picture but a romantic drama taking place during 1914 and thereafter.

PROGRAM READER

Louise de Villars loved to ride her favorite horse accompanied by the great Dane. But when two German soldiers stabbed the noble dog and she remonstrated, they used her roughly.

And this was before the great war. It was in Alsace in the summer of 1914.

A young American, motoring through Alsace-Lorraine, rescued her and romance entered her life from that moment.

The rumors of the approaching war soon became an actual fact. Enlisting with the French government, the young American was attached to the aviation corps and succeeded in downing thirty enemy planes until he was finally brought down himself within the German lines.

Then the romance started nearly five years before was fanned to life again. She was a visitor to the prison camp accompanied by a German officer. And the hero was one of the prisoners. Many adventures and stirring escapes are recorded until the armistice.

The hero and heroine then happily leave the scenes of strife and seek happiness in America. The ideal screen lovers portray the roles. Francis X. Bushman is the hero and Beverly Bayne is the heroine. And they will be seen in their great Vitagraph offering, "Daring Hearts," at this theatre next week.

"HIS BRIDAL NIGHT"
(SELECT)

Rollicking Farce Is Decidedly Entertaining

MARK up three points opposite the names of Kathryne Stuart, Kenneth Webb and Alice Brady. Working in the closest sort of harmony, they have succeeded in moulding Lawrence Irving's clever farce, "His Bridal Night," into one of the most enjoyable breezes of the year. The first mentioned has adapted this successful stage play with all of its sparkling situations intact, and Director Webb has excellently utilized them and has admirably caught the fund of humorous values. As for Miss Brady, we cannot remember when she has contributed a more finished performance than here in the dual role of twin sisters.

And now that the workmanship has been attended to let us state that this lively tale of a twin who runs off with her sister's husband on the wedding night to cure that sister of her coquettish impulses has not been surpassed this year in its mirth provoking qualities. It just radiates humor—and spice. One rollicking situation follows another with remarkable rapidity and, combined, these situations spell an entertainment the value of which cannot be gained except by seeing it. And the sparkle is there at the finish. A rare exit scene will leave you smiling—perhaps blushing, too—when you say good-bye.

It is handsomely staged and perfectly acted. Indeed, Edward Earle and James L. Crane prove themselves excellent farceurs.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the liveliest, breeziest and most entertaining photoplays the screen has had in some time will be shown at the ——— theatre when Select Pictures presents the charming and talented star, Alice Brady, in her latest picture entitled "His Bridal Night." This is an adaptation of the highly successful stage play which presented the Dolly sisters. The story revolves around twin sisters, Vi and Tiny Playfair. They are alike in personal appearance, but not in disposition, as the former is a gay, heartless coquette, while the latter is a quiet girl. The night before Vi's wedding to Joe Damorel, Vi tells Tiny that she is going to meet Lent Trevett for a last farewell. The twin is horrified at such a plan and decides to meet Lent in Vi's place.

The following day, after the wedding ceremony, Vi goes to her room to put on her traveling gowns, and there finds Lent waiting for her. He tells her that she does not love her husband and she must go away with him. She consents and just as they indulge in a fond embrace, Tiny sees them. The sister decides that inasmuch as Vi has stolen Lent, the man she loves, why wouldn't it be perfectly proper to steal Vi's husband. As both girls are dressed alike it doesn't take much to fool Joe. And so they leave the house for their honeymoon.

Vi, back in the house, has collapsed, after shrieking that she is the bride and that Tiny has stolen her husband. But she is resourceful and rushes into her car and drives to Billy Barlow's bungalow to get her husband. An exciting chase and a most astounding ending conclude this rollicking farce. Director Kenneth Webb has instilled the necesary "pep," laughs, and thrills. And he has caught the vital sparks of the original. Miss Brady is capably supported by Edward Earle and James Crane and others.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a lively and entertaining farce picture which you can exploit to the limit as a subject bound to interest your patrons. It unfolds a variety of rich situations—situations which should create a large order of merriment in your house. Feature the story as a tale of twin sisters who become brides—each of whom runs away with the other's sweetheart. Tell that it is an adaptation of the play which kept New York in gales of laughter for a whole season. And play it up lightly. Don't for a minute allow yourself to become serious. Breezy catch lines would be a good angle to work. And teasers. Send them out way in advance and arouse curiosity. Publicize the picture far in advance, advising your patrons that they will have a chance to see the breeziest picture of the year.

PROGRAM READER

Vi Playfair was in a serious predicament. She was too full of the joy of living to look on the dark side of things. At first she decided that he was not worth troubling her pretty head about—but then she realized that it was all her fault. Anyway she had promised Lent Trevett to elope with him ten minutes after she had uttered the fatal words—"I do." Didn't she tell her hour-old husband that she no longer loved him? Didn't she take off her wedding ring and, disgustingly, throw it on the floor. And if he liked her sister well enough to run away with her—well she couldn't very much blame him. Yet on second thought, she was legally Joe's wife—why should he have gone away without her.

Should she follow him and humiliate herself. Well she did just what she thought best. This brief outline cannot do justice to Alice Brady's latest picture, "His Bridal Night," which comes to this theatre on ———. It is one of the cleverest pictures Manager ——— has ever booked. Remember the date.

CATCH LINES

What would you do if your twin sister ran away with your husband on your bridal night? Would you go after him? Would you realize that he is a pretty good fellow after all? And wouldn't you want him? You will see how it is done in "His Bridal Night."

———

Did she love her husband when she was found in the embrace of another man? Or was she simply a gay, heartless flirt? What did her sister do to bring her to her senses? See Alice Brady in "His Bridal Night."

———

They were twins—and alike as two peas. Each of the men knew he was in love with one of the girls, but he didn't know which one. How were they to tell? And what were the situations they found themselves in? See Alice Brady in "His Bridal Night."

"THE WAY OF A WOMAN"
(SELECT)

Better Than Average Society Drama

A SOCIETY drama of the metropolis, with the star in a typical Norma Talmadge role and supported by a well balanced cast. While the direction and continuity are satisfactory and the sets are appropriate, the photography is very poor in many spots. The story is not intense, but provides a generally satisfactory vehicle for a better than average screen offering.

Her old Southern parents are poor, but proud on family tradition and superiority, and refuse to allow her to marry a young man because he is short on family pedigree, although long on money. He goes away and she, in a fit of pique at her family, marries a Broadway spendthrift. When he passes away, leaving her practically penniless, she borrows money from her former sweetheart's nephew, supposing he is rich. It seems that he had embezzled the money from a bank. Then her old rejected sweetheart returns and accuses her of driving his nephew to crime. Many of the best moments in the picture occur from this point to the finale, when he finds that she has been misjudged.

A good draw for the elite and first run theatres and will suitably entertain. The family and popular theatres should find this an average draw and it should please them as a picture. The labor draw will not be so strong, although it may satisfy them as a passable production.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 27.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Norma Talmadge in "The Way of a Woman," is scheduled to appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Conway Tearle is Miss Talmadge's leading man in this screen production which Select Pictures adapted from Eugene Walter's great stage success, "Nancy Lee."

The photoplay action takes place in and around New York City and opens in the South where the young girl's poor but proud parents refuse their assent to her marriage to her sweetheart because his social standing does not measure up to their traditions. So she send him away and in a fit of pique marries a New York man, who turns out to be a Broadway spendthrift and soon passes away, leaving her practically penniless.

She accepts money from the young nephew of her former sweetheart, supposing him to be rich. When the young man confesses that he had embezzled the money to loan to her she becomes frantic and tries in every manner to raise the money on the remnants of her late huband's holdings.

At this precarious moment her former sweetheart returns. He is embittered and accuses her of not only playing fast and loose with him in the past, but also declares that she has made a criminal of his young unsophisticated nephew.

He misjudges her and the presence of many of her late husband's fast Broadway friends lead him to believe that he has not painted her a bit blacker than she deserves.

Finally his eyes are opened. She has cut loose from all the old fast crowd. His nephew tells him that he had told her that he was rich and well able to spare the money when he loaned it to her. He finds her and pleads forgiveness for his unjust suspicions. And mutual love unites them and blots out all of the misunderstandings of the past.

Norma Talmadge, as the young Southern girl suddenly transplanted to the big metropolis, is supported by an excellent cast in "The Way of a Woman."

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you should concentrate on the name of the star and use her photograph in as many places as possible as well as her half-tone cuts in as many publications as your advertising appropriation will stand, "Normal Talmade" in her latest Select Photoplay, 'The Way of a Woman'."

The invitation idea on this is good if you have a good list. It is generally enough in most places to announce just the one line as mentioned.

Norma Talmadge, Select Pictures star, in "The Way of a Woman"

PROGRAM READER

"You with your treacherous entwining ways have made of my young unsophisticated nephew an embezzler. You're a heartless spendthrift.

"When you refused my hand in lawful marriage a few years ago your excuse was that your parents would not accept as your husband one of such lowly birth as I.

"But you go brazenly ahead and ruin one good man after another. In your pursuit of mad pleasure you sacrifice my nephew but by Heavens you will not account to me."

These words uttered bitterly and came from the lips of the only man in the world that she loved.

How could she refute his charges. No, it was no use trying. Far better to sacrifice everything and pay to the limit of her ability and then go away.

And she did just that.

His eyes were finally opened to the true worth of the girl he had so terribly misjudged. Then he searched for her,—and they found each other.

This is told dramatically in Select's latest screen production starring Norma Talmadge. It is "The Way of a Woman," and appears at this theatre next week.

"WOLVES OF THE NIGHT"
(FOX)

Farnum Has Heroic Role in Dramatic Subject

FOX must make them big for William Farnum, since his personality and emotional talent demand it. Once having enacted Jean Valjean in Hugo's immortal "Les Miserables," his subjects must be constructed upon a heroic mould. He makes an auspicious start for his new season with "Wolves of the Night." The offering doesn't sound anything new in plot and characterization, but the situations carry every known dramatic ingredient and they are made powerful through a sweep of well arranged sequences.

Farnum's personality can only find expression in plays based upon every element of human emotion. So the play abounds in the tender ingredients of pathos, heart interest and romance and to counterbalance them are a full quota of suspenseful scenes generated from a wealth of action. It almost seems as if there is too much plot. Yet that is Farnum's way. He is not a poseur; he works in his pictures.

And so it is a dramatic delight to see him fight for self-preservation and the sanctity of his home. The climax, which culminates in his happiness, is intensity itself. Arbitrary coincidences are introduced here and there, but they will be easily forgotten in the interesting quality of the picture. It is a typical Farnum play—big in character and action. It is well acted and staged. Exhibitors cannot ask for more.—Length, 5500 feet.—Released August 10.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Bruce Andrews.....William Farnum
Isabel Hollins.....Louise Lovely
Burton Mortimer.....Lamar Johnston
Edmund Rawn.....Charles Clary
Garson.....Al Fremont

Mrs. Benson.....Carrie Clark Ward
Juanita.....Irene Rich
By E. Lloyd Sheldon.
Scenario by E. Lloyd Sheldon.
Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Farnum, the Fox star and one of the screen's most popular figures, will appear at the ———theatre on ———of——— week in his newest photoplay, "Wolves of the Night." Mr. Farnum has never lacked for strong subjects and this tale by E. Lloyd Sheldon is comparable with anything he has done. The star is only happy when he is fighting against overwhelming odds and he is burdened with them in this story. It may safely be said that the spectator is in for an hour of the most dramatic sort of entertainment.

Mr. Farnum appears as a sheep ranchman whose property adjoins the bonanza mine of Edmund Rawn, Burton Mortimer and Garson. Fate guides him into a love affair with Isabel Hollins who is vacationing at Rawn's hunting lodge. And her friendliness with Bruce arouses the animosity of Mortimer who is an ardent admirer. The triumvirate have knowledge that Bruce's ranch is rich in ore deposits and Rawn, to get him out of the way, offers him a position in Chile as superintendent of his mines. It is a lucrative offer and the young man accepts though he is urged to keep his wife at home. The plotters have instructed their agents to get Bruce out of the way and he is imprisoned in the mine.

The news comes home to Isabel that he is dead. And after a time she marries Mortimer. Bruce in the meantime has recovered his memory and returns home only to find out that his home is controlled by the three partners who have gotten considerably rich with their mine and that his wife belongs to another. And Bruce to spare his wife agrees to go away. But events turn rapidly here and he discovers what has occurred in his absence. And always a fighter, he gains the upper hand. With Mortimer eliminated Bruce and Isabel are united. Mr. Farnum is given the support of an excellent company. The picture was produced under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a number of selling points in this latest picture of William Farnum's. First off concentrate upon the star and feature him in every bit of advertising. Send out human interest stories of him which you can obtain from the Fox exchange. Your editors will be glad to print them. Make out that he is a great, big drawing card—there are none better. And bring out that his stories are strong, vital subjects—subjects that only a man of his talent and personality are capable of interpreting. Announce far in advance that William Farnum is coming. As for the story mention that it is a play of high finance, love and vengence and that the action takes place over two continents.

Use catch lines liberally. Tell that it is a story of deep wrong righted by a strong man after years of torture.

William Farnum, starring in "Wolves of the Night" a William Fox production

PROGRAM READER

William Farnum is announced to appear in another of his motion pictures. "Wolves of the Night" will be shown at the ——— theatre on next ———afternoon and evening. It is said to be the most powerfully dramatic subject in which this popular screen star has been seen. And "Wolves of the Night" is a real Farnum picture, which means that it is rich in the elements of romance, pathos, action and suspense. It carries the spectator into the Southwest, into the Andes mountains of South America and into the maelstrom of Wall Street. The discovery of a rich vein of copper in a man's property is viewed as a stroke of good fortune. But to Bruce Andrews (Mr. Farnum) it meant the worst sort of ill-luck.

How he lost his property and his wife, how he narrowly escaped death and became insane, how he recovered his memory and returned home only to find out that his wife had married another through the belief that her husband was dead are the events that make up the climaxes of this sensational tale. Don't fail to see it.

CATCH LINES

You all like William Farnum don't you? Well you will have an opportunity to see him at the ———next——— in his latest success, "Wolves of the Night." It is one of the most dramatic pictures in which he has ever appeared. And he gives one of the finest portrayals of his career.

See "Wolves of the Night"—a Fox picture which comes to the ———on——— with the favorite, William Farnum, in a remarkable characterization. It is a real Farnum picture—rich in romance and stirring action.

"A PETAL ON THE CURRENT"
(UNIVERSAL)

A Good Human Interest Story

A DRAMA portraying the difficulties of the poor working girl after she took her first glass of beer. The star is very effective in a role that fits her style of acting and the cast is entirely satisfactory. The story is a good human interest story and will hold the attention to the last. However, the director and continuity writer did not rise to the heights demanded by the story in the last reel and this takes away from what promised to be a real smashing picture.

She was lonesome and shy but was finally persuaded to attend a party where she took a small glass of beer which dazed her. In this condition she wanders towards home and is arrested and accused of soliciting by a detective and given ten days in jail by the night court. When she emerges her mother is dead and she is refused employment at the store. She meets the bashful foreman who has just been disillusioned as to any goodness in any girl, but after a confession she finds happiness with him.

This picture should draw big at popular, family and labor class theatres and satisfactorily entertain these audiences. It should also prove a strong draw for the first run theatres and please as a picture. Not a strong draw or appeal at the high class neighborhood houses.—Length, 6 reels.—Released July 28.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mary MacLaren comes to the ——— theatre on ———of——— week in her latest Universal Special Attraction, "The Petal on the Current."

This is heralded as a typical Mary MacLaren role and the star portrays the poor and pretty young working girl who is lonesome and attends a party where she takes her first drink, a small glass of beer.

This effects her so that she is dazed and starts alone for her home. On the way she accosts a detective, repeating quite hilariously some of the choice bits of conversation which she had heard at the party. He arrests her and accuses the young girl of being drunk and soliciting.

She is convicted at the night court and sentenced to ten days in jail. The tragedy occurs when she writes her poor old mother of her plight. This sad news kills the old lady although she still has faith in her daughter's innocence.

After emerging from the jail she finds her mother dead and gets no sympathy from the neighbors who condemn her. When she applies for work again at the store she is refused because of her contaminating presence. When her money gives out she is distracted and seeks solace.

She tries in her innocent way to solicit a man in the public park. This man happens to be the bashful foreman of a factory, whom she has heard of but never met. He has heard of her, but has been just disillusioned anent the goodness or any girl and she finds it hard to convince him at first that her sorrowful story is true. Eventually true love wins and she finds shelter in his arms and he wins a wife he is proud of.

Gilbert Anderson, prominent in the cast of "Heart of Humanity," is the leading man and a well balanced cast interpret all the roles in this great human interest story.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you may exploit of course the title and the star and also that it is a Universal SPECIAL attraction. But there are many special stunts that can be arranged also. Owing to the fact that a great controversy is now on as to the intoxicating effects of 2.75 beer and this story is made possible by the fact that she became intoxicated on her first glass of beer, there is an opportunity for discussion.

"What percentage of the first and only glass of beer that this poor, pure and pretty working girl ever drank contained alcohol; —was it 2.75? See what a single drop accomplished for the girl portrayed by Mary Mac Laren in "The Petal on the Current," at the ———theatre."

Mary MacLaren in the Universal Special, "A Petal on the Current"

PROGRAM READER

She left the jail door, free, and hurried home to find her beloved mother had died from the shock of her daughter's imprisonment.

When she applied for her old position at the store they refused her on the ground that she might contaminate the other innocent girls.

Without a cent in her pocket she felt driven to desperation. All the neighbors looked upon her with scorn.

And she boldly journeyed to a public park and sat on a park bench and waited for the first man who came along.

He was a bashful man until a few hours before he met her. But he had just been disillusioned about some girls in particular and thought that all girls in general were bad and not to be trusted.

And when these two met it was not easy to reconcile the pure peaceful natures of both man and girl. But love eventually won and the girl secured the shelter that she was justly entitled to and the man won a wife to be proud of.

"The Petal on the Current" is the title of the Universal Special that shows this great human interest story on the screen.

"A SAGE BRUSH HAMLET"
(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Conventional Western with William Desmond

WILLIAM DESMOND'S latest offering may be classified as a conventional "western," since it is founded upon a variety of familiar stock situations. It is exceedingly quiet of action for a thing of its kind and except for a belated thrill tacked on to the conclusion it runs its length with scarcely a ripple of excitement. Only the emphatic personality of the star saves the picture its entertainment value, for the sole interest of the piece is realized in watching him exploit his unbounded good nature.

Indeed there had been no imagination expended in the theme or the development of it. It is based upon hard riding and straight shooting, and these western properties are mostly neglected until the concluding reel. A little suspense is felt as to just how the star will proceed to punish the murderer of his father, but for the most part the action travels a monotonous path, although here and there a few naive bits of humor come to the surface and make a bid for recognition.

The picture carries the prize subtitle of the year when the heroine, in her nightgown, scares Desmond away by the employment of the word "Boo!" The spectator when he sees these love pranks will wonder if he is not watching a visualization of the tender pastime of "Drop the Handkerchief" or "Hide and Seek." Mr. Hampton's photography counts heavily in the picture's favor.—Length, 5 reels.—Released through Exhibitors' Mutual in August.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Sage Brush Hamlet" which comes to the ———theatre on ———of——— week with William Desmond as the star, is a story of a Westerner whose sole ambition in life is to mete out vengeance upon the desperado who murdered his father. His plan of campaign is understood by no one but himself for he is seemingly "plumb loco" to his friends and enemies. His object is to catch Claude Dutton off guard. So Larry Lang with his faithful cowboys run around in circles and he apparently gets more intoxicated than the rest. It is impossible to hunt the murderer in his lair because Bottle Canyon is strongly guarded at its neck. So he abides his time.

Two Gun Dan, a henchman of Dutton's, attempts to kill him but his quick wit saves him. To complicate matters, Dora Lawrence, a distant cousin of Larry, is willed to him and try as he might he cannot get rid of her. In fact he falls in love with her. Dutton in despair of killing the son of the man he murdered raids the ranch when Larry and the girl are there alone. But the "locoed" cowboy rises to the emergency and sees to it that Dutton will not trouble him again. And with his ambition realized he takes up a more pleasing question of love.

"A Sage Brush Hamlet" is typically a Western and naturally it contains a wealth of action. The melodramatic notes are excellently blended with those of a humorous character. Mr. Desmond contributes a virile performance as Larry and he is supported by a capable cast that includes Florence Gibson, Edward Piel, Frank Lanning, Marguerita De La Motte and others. Joseph J. Franz directed the feature from a story by George Elwood Jenks.

SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit this is as an entertaining Desmond picture. The star is your best selling ad. He has a large following, and he always gives the patrons their moneys worth in the manner of his work. So play him up strong. Advise your patrons that the star of "The Mints of Hell" will appear shortly at your theatre. And remembering that excellent feature they will flock to see him in his new release. Exploit the story through its central idea which is that of a cowboy who avenges his father's death. That is where the Hamlet of the title comes in. The character from Shakespeare acted in a similar manner.

Feature the title and play it up in entertaining catch lines. We would not go in for the circus stuff to any extent. You might decorate your lobby with sage brushes or any plant that grows on the alkali plains. Use stills plentifully of the star and scenes from the play. Play up the love interest and tell how the hero was scared of the women. Feature it as a picture of love and vengence and use the superlatives in telling of the hard riding and the western stuff which it carries. As the picture hasn't any outstanding points to play up it would be advantageous to publicize it extensively in advance. Keep Desmond and the title before your public.

PROGRAM READER

Larry Lang's father was shot down in cold blood by a notorious cattle rustler, Claude Dutton. Larry never got over the cruel murder but planned to avenge his father's death at an opportune moment. He had an ingenious scheme to disarm his enemy by appearing "plumb loco." And he carried it out so successfully that the latter planned to "get" him because of his seeming carelessness. Larry was the leader of a reckless group of buckaroos. The boys weren't afraid of anything and Larry was the most fearless of the lot. He could disarm a man who had the "drop" on him by simply smiling. And that is the way he acted when Dutton's henchman attempted to kill him.

How he fell in love and very nearly gave up his plan of revenge, how Larry was surprised at his ranch by his enemy, how he succeeded in carrying out his cheme under overwhelming odds are events which compose a most interesting picture and one that contains a full quota of dramatic and humorous scenes. You will see it all when William Desmond appears at this theatre shortly in "A Sage Brush Hamlet."

Sex Drama May Have Average Draw

A SEX drama set on two prison isles near Australia, with the three principal characters, a woman and two men, carrying the burden of the drama through six reels. It starts with a preachment introductory that would lead the spectator to believe that an economic subject would be touched upon, but this angle was never brought out in the long draggy picture which followed. The introductory and seventy-five per cent of the other subtitles could be safely dropped. Neither of the three principal roles carried even the slightest appeal for the sympathy of the audience.

The woman role possessed absolutely no character. She was positively crazy after one man who scorned her and she finally accepted the renegade who looked quite like the primitive cave man. The director lost all chances to make a real feature picture out of what might have been a novel story. The high spots worthy of notice were the realistic hurricane and the locale showing the tropical verdure and the ocean.

In first run theatres and high class neighborhood houses this might have an average draw if heavily exploited. It may please a great many in these audiences as a picture. In the family, popular and labor class theatres, it may draw average and may prove fairly entertaining in many spots.—Length, 6 reels.—Released in August. —Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Alice Desmond.....Dixie Lee
John Sherwin.....Arthur Behrens

Story By E. L. Grant Watson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Two men and a woman far away from civilization are pictures in the screen production "When Bonds Are Loosed," coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

David G. Fischer, Dixie Lee and Arthur Behrens are the three principal characters and the action takes place on two prison islands adjoining Australia and belonging to the British government.

The young doctor is placed in charge of the two islands and their hospitals. One island is for men and othe other for women. The savage sexes being exploited are thus segregated. A husky primitive overseer is in direct charge of the men on one of these islands and here is where the woman enters in the eternal triangle away from all real civilization.

As the chief nurse, the young woman becomes infatuated with the youthful doctor. After she wins him without the marriage ties she become intensely jealous of him because he gives so much time to his research work.

The young doctor soon tires of the woman and takes her over to the other island where the other white man sees her and tries to win her. She rebuffs him but to no avail. When she finally tells the Doctor that the overseer is bothering her he secures a gun and the two men spend many hours looking for each other through the jungles with murder in their hearts.

When the overseer in all of his primitive passion confronts the young woman after her night's vigil and tells her that he has killed her paramour she proves that she is a very complex young woman and becomes his bride. The thrilling scenes and action portrayed in E. L. Grant Watson's famous story are brought out forcibly in the screen production, "When Bonds Are Loosed."

SUGGESTIONS

If you book this picture you should announce that it is a big departure from the general run of photoplays and that the title "When Bonds Are Loosed" does not touch on the divorce question but pictures the eternal triangle of two men and one woman away from all civilization and therefore loosed from all bonds. This is certainly enough to excite the interest anywhere and the above declaration should be displayed in as many places and as often as is possible.

A special lobby stunt would be the palms or any other decorations that would suggest a tropical isle. A big cut-out of the three characters would attract attention if you have a strip card displayed reading: "Which man did this woman finally choose 'When Bonds Are Loosed'."

PROGRAM READER

There are only two white men on the islands. She was the only white woman.

A moment in "Where Bonds Are Loosed," Waldorf production

They were away from all civilization. And she was lonesome.

Alice Desmond was a young woman. She wanted to be loved and the young doctor was too busy in his research work to care to bother about entertaining any woman.

But she finally won him. And later on she found that she hated him just as fervently as she formerly loved him.

And a new interest came into her life. The third member of this eternal triangle was a burly primitive man whom she always previously pictured as a beast. He loved her and finally claimed her by right of having disposed of her paramour.

These are some of the stirring complex situations that arise in that most unusual photodrama, "When Bonds Are Loosed," appearing at this theatre next week.

"THE LOVE BURGLAR"
(PARAMOUNT)

Crook Melodrama Has Moments of Interest

THE title of this new Wallace Reid picture, while it is decorative and fits the characterization to a dot is not exactly appropriate for a crook melodrama. It suggests comedy and does not suggest any tense line of action. The result is the play does not ring with sincerity and the spectator, if he has his wits about him at all, can anticipate the denouement of the plot. He knows that he is in for approximately forty-five minutes of mistaken identity with a subsequent fifteen minutes of clearing up the case. Indeed the original title, "One of Us" would have spelled a measure of suspense.

Yet it is interesting because of the manner in which the star cleans up the underworld. He entered the "dive" in the first place to bring out his erring brother and this accomplished, he proceeded to fall in love with one of its fair denizens. And she, to involve the situation, keeps her identity in the background until a spirit of fairness impels her to reveal herself as an author who has been in search of atmosphere.

The interesting part of the picture is contained in the underworld scenes. It would be a much stronger offering had the melodramatic notes been better emphasized. It is well worked out, however, and the slum scenes carry conviction. Mr. Reid fulfills the demands of his role and his players are efficient. The picture should satisfy.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The Paramount picture, "The Love Burglar" will be presented at the ———theatre on ———with Wallace Reid as the star. This is an adaptation of Jack Lait's successful play, "One of Us" and it is a compelling drama of high society and crookdom. Mr. Reid can always be depended upon to have a fascinating subject and "The Love Burglar" is no exception.

He appears here as David Strong who travels to the underworld to rescue his brother. Disguised as a crook it is easy to hoodwink the denizens. But in rescuing his relative he has his work cut out for him for he has to battle a small army of criminals. By the good use of his arms he makes them believe that he is the "Colt Kid" just released from prison. But he is not only a rescuer of his brother but of ladies in distress. A cabaret singer is about to be victimized by a certain "hanger-on" and David is compelled to go through a fake marriage ceremony to make her rescue certain. And they fall in love with one another. She does not know that he is an established member of high society and he is unaware that she is an author who has migrated to the slums to obtain local color. But events lead on to their identity and with this accomplished they find their true circle.

The picture abounds in action and suspense and the atmosphere of the underworld is finely suggested. The scenario has been well constructed by Walter Woods and James Cruze's production is entirely satisfactory. Mr. Reid gives a spirited performance and acts with charm and sincerity. Others conspicuous are Raymond Hatton, Anna Q. Nilsson and Wallace Beery.

SUGGESTIONS

In the exploitation of this feature you can surely bank on the drawing power of the star. He is a great favorite especially with the feminine portion of your audience. And mention that he has a picturesque role here as a crook. He isn't a crook at all but he makes himself up to look like the toughest individual who ever toted a gun. Feature him as the star who appeared here in past successes. It is always well to advertise what has gone before. For by those standards the patrons know what to expect. Mention that the picture is adapted from Jack Lait's successful stage play, "One of Us."

Take advantage of the salient situations for catch lines and your teaser campaign. You can send out circular letters announcing that Wallace Reid will be at the ——— theatre next ———. Bring out that it is a play of surprises—a play where a society man masquerades as a crook for his own safety. And mention that he falls in love with a woman of the underworld who turns out to be someone different. Use your artist to sketch a model of Reid in his tough attire. Play up the cast. And use all the advertising aids issued by Paramount.

An exciting moment in the Paramount feature, "The Love Burglar," in which Wallace Reid is starred

PROGRAM READER

The popular Wallace Reid will be here next ———afternoon and evening in what is considered the most dashing role he has ever played. He is a crook here and to see him garbed in one of those tight sweaters and handling a Colt in dexterous fashion is a sight which will arouse your interest. We do not want to outline the plot to you—that would be robbing the suspense. But we will say that it is a crook melodrama which unfolds a startling array of surprises. Just picture yourself in the heart of the underworld of New York or Chicago—suppose that as you entered a notorious place to rescue a friend, a girl appealed to you with imploring eyes. She couldn't make known her plight and then—

You will find out how this picture develops next ———. Suffice to state that it will keep you on the anxious seat with its tense line of action and suspense. "The Love Burglar" is an adaptation of the stage play, "One of Us." It is vital and vivid and thrilling in every scene. A rare entertainment.

CATCH LINES

How would you go about it if you went down into the slums to rescue a relative or a friend and fell in love with one of its denizens. Would you marry her? Yet that's what Wallace Reid did in "The Love Burglar" a picture of rich contrasts. See it.

"THE GIRL-WOMAN"
(VITAGRAPH)

Gladys Leslie Has Mild Offering Here

"THE GIRL-WOMAN," Gladys Leslie's latest offering, has quite a time getting started. It almost seemed as if the plot had been forgotten during the forepart of the feature with the anticipated study in young girlhood as its piece de resistance. Yet it gathered strength along toward the third reel and finished as a mild but satisfactory entertainment.

Miss Leslie, like the other Vitagrapher, Bessie Love, simply dotes on studies in young girlhood. Each is endowed with wistful and quaint personalities and each is highly successful in the interpretation of glad roles. So their plays are as certain as the tide. The star is not taxed to any extent here. She gives a coming-out party when she reaches woman's estate and to keep pace with her advancing years it is the object of the author to involve her in the conflict which comes when a father has not seen his child because of his years in prison. It is her duty to establish her convict father's innocence and this is arranged by the employment of scenes charged with a measure of pathos.

A slight love element is introduced and it keeps pace with the more vital action. Miss Leslie is pleasing in her role and she receives able assistance from Maurice Costello. Tom Mills directed. "The Girl-Woman" is an average program offering.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Gladys Leslie, the dainty Vitagraph star, will come to the ———theatre on ———of ———week in her latest photoplay entitled "The Girl-Woman." This is from the pen of A. Van Buren Powell with the scenario by Edward J. Montague, and it presents the star as a girl who has reached that estate where she believes herself a woman. Her debut as a grown-up girl capable of wearing long dresses is the occasion for the only sorrow in her life.

Belinda has been the protege of Judge Lee since she was a baby. She does not know that he isn't her father until an escaped convict, Sanford, breaks into the house one night. And the latter sobs out his story. It seems that the man had been employed in a bank and one of the employees was murdered. Sanford, being the only man present beside the victim, was arrested upon circumstantial evidence and convicted. And the Judge informs him that he has brought up his daughter Belinda as his own child. This measure of generosity stops Sanford's motive of revenge. So the girl proceeds to establish his innocence. And after a series of exciting situations the guilty man is brought to justice and Sanford is free. Belinda, with this task completed, finds happiness with her sweetheart, Bob.

It is a pleasing little picture—one which is chock full of pathos and heart interest. Miss Leslie is thoroughly captivating in her role of Belinda and she manages to extract a lot of sympathy from the part. Maurice Costello gives a capable performance and others are Julia Swayne Gordon, Priestley Morrison, Joe Burke, Frank Norcross and Walter Norton. The picture was produced under the direction of Tom Mills.

CATCH LINES

They kept her in short dresses, but she rebelled one day and came out attired as a woman. And because she was a woman she carried out a woman's responsibilities. What were they? See "The Girl-Woman."

She had been brought up to believe the Judge her father. But an escaped convict entered the house one night and found out she was his child. He was innocent, but he couldn't prove it. Who did? See Gladys Leslie in "The Girl-Woman."

See "The Girl-Woman"—it is a tender little play charged with pathos and heart appeal. It brings the dainty Gladys Leslie back to the ——— screen. You will like her immensely in her study of a girl-woman.

A recent photograph of Gladys Leslie, appearing in Vitagraph's "The Girl-Woman"

PROGRAM READER

Belinda had reached the dawn of womanhood and she wanted to do up her hair and put on long dresses. But the Judge wanted to keep her a girl. One night she gave a party and she surprised her guests by appearing as a woman. And the Judge was defeated and acknowledged it. But with womanhood came its responsibilities. She knew she must act like a woman. So an escaped convict entered the house bent on vengeance toward the Judge for sending him to prison. But the convict had a change of heart when the Judge acquainted him with the fact that Belinda was his own daughter. And the man, overwhelmed, sobbed out the story of how he was wrongly accused—that he was an innocent man. And Belinda took it upon herself to bring about his freedom.

How she undertook her task, how she played detective to get the evidence to establish the guilt where it belonged, how, when her object was realized, she turned to matters of love, are events that make this picture, "The Girl-Woman," a thoroughly delightful offering. It will be here next ——— with Gladys Leslie as the star.

SUGGESTIONS

Feature this as a story of a girl who wanted to grow up and who did in a spirit of rebellion. Bring out that when she put on long dresses she experienced the first sorrow of her life. Don't mention what it is, for the entire structure of the plot rests upon it. Mention it as a play rich in pathos and heart appeal and that it shows the love a daughter bears her father when he is persecuted. Play up the star and feature her as a buoyant personality—one of the most charming figures on the screen. Play up her million dollar smile and tell that it has earned her a vast army of followers. Mention that she has always been successful in "glad" parts.

Novelty One-Reeler Is Due from Bull's-Eye

Another page in motion picture history will shortly be written, according to Nat H. Spitzer of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, when the Bulls-Eye will announce a new one-reel novelty, which will be original and have far reaching results. The novelty will be advertised in the September issue of the exhibitors' trade papers, in which full publicity will be given.

Sky Is to Flash Realart Merit

Enormous Electric Sign at "Center of World" to Tell Company's Story

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION has just closed a contract with the O. J. Gude Company, one of the subsidiaries of the Poster Advertising Company, for the rental of the huge electric sign on the roof of the twelve-story Hotel Hermitage, New York. This is on Times Square, in the Broadway and Forty-second Street district. The contract covers a term of three years. The rental is the largest ever paid by a film concern for a single sign in New York. It is one of the largest electric displays in the country.

This big advertising medium is fifty-eight and a half feet high and ninety-five and a half feet wide. There is not a better location in New York, as the sign towers directly over one of the busiest corners in the world—Broadway and Forty-second Street. This section of New York, made famous in song and story, is the "capital" of the amusement world. One of the foremost photoplay theatres, the Rialto, is located just north of the Hermitage and the other leading metropolitan picture houses are close by.

In just what manner Realart Pictures will be exploited electrically has not yet been definitely decided. It is rumored something unique will be disclosed. The art department of the O. J. Gude Company is already making drawings and designs, following suggestions from Realart officials.

The sign faces North toward the busy photoplay and theatrical centre and can be seen for blocks on Broadway. It has been used for what is known as a "talking sign" for the past three years by the Rice Leaders of the World. In addition to the "talks," advertising various products, there was a small reproduction of the "Ben Hur" chariot race.

A force of laborers is now busily engaged in dismantling the old sign and work will be rushed to the limit on the new one. Realart Pictures will be heralded from this sky sign in the very near future.

The release date for "Impossible Catherine" the second Virginia Pearson production will be announced in the near future.

Huge Capitalizations Do Not Mean Better Pictures — But Do Mean Higher Rentals

In the motion picture trade journals dated May 24, 1919, but issued two weeks earlier than that date, W. W. Hodkinson said to the industry at large:

As the number of pictures that the exhibitor supports no longer can be made to carry the weak ones, economic conditions will force a rearrangement of the plans of those who have been making film to support their producing and distributing machinery. This will mean consolidations, realignments and affiliations, particularly on the part of the smaller Producer-Distributor concerns if they are to compete successfully with a larger concern.

Of greater importance to YOU, the Exhibitor, will be the fact that all of these concerns will, by the issuing of stocks or securities, place values on the basis of what they think they ought to have.

And, as usual, they will call upon you to bear the burden of carrying them.

These huge capitalizations, that are made necessary to keep going the machinery of concerns that are unscientifically growing beyond the control of their masters, do not add one single dollar to the value or the improved quality and power of the pictures they supply you.

But they do add to the burdens that YOU, the Exhibitor, are commanded to carry. YOU, the Exhibitor, are definitely put under the load of carrying these huge, fictitious valuations that are based upon little that is tangible.

Other serious developments are in immediate prospect.

Again we ask: Have you read W. W. Hodkinson's booklet, "The Next 12 Months in the Motion Picture Business"? It is packed with a message of great importance to every exhibitor in the business. Write for it now.

THE VOICE OF THE CRITICS

NEW YORK SUN: A picture that holds the interest from its start to finish. Generally awaited as the first of the author-supervised productions.

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH: "The Westerners" brings us something new. There is every evidence the picture was made with the greatest care.

NEW YORK HERALD: This breezy picture was especially enjoyable to audiences at the Strand.

NEW YORK TIMES: Mr. White did not simply sell the picture rights to his book; the story makes its main effort in pictures—and succeeds.

NEW YORK AMERICAN: Throbs with red blood. A great drama of romance and action; abetted by the best titling seen in many a day on the screen.

EVENING SUN: It is difficult to speak too highly of "The Westerners." We advise every movie fan to see it; a story worth the telling.

VARIETY: Stanton Leeds: This is a great picture. Rings a record bell every hundred feet.

TRIBUNE: Reveals infinite pains; no details neglected. WORLD: Has tremendous virility and welcomed on Broadway as first author-supervised picture.

IF as many as five persons were advising you on your career, you would be a rarity. Multiply that by 8,000 and you get the number already counseling MARY MILES MINTER. Since she has become a Realart star, the total has increased daily. Last Monday the mail brought her 1,000 letters.

When 40,000 persons overcome the inertia attendant upon writing letters and buying stamps, it means 40,000 persons are more than mildly interested in that young lady.

This is an astounding total; probably the largest number of correspondents of any star in the world.

Multiply them by those who worship, but do not write, and you find the millions of devoted adherents of this wonderful girl.

This means money at the box office when her pictures show. Those Exhibitors who look ahead and keep their houses ahead, are tying up her Realart Pictures.

Now that it's done and we've seen it—

This is what happened to a foolish old traffic cop who started to pinch her for speeding—and she, poor girl, was only fleeing from her stenographer-loving fiance.

This is the way she starts to tame the woman-hating senator she had set her cap for. "That's not the flowers that smell so sweet—it's me," she says, and proves it.

Dressed in a simple little frock that didn't cost a cent over two hundred bucks, she sets out to prove to him that she isn't like other designing women.

And to prove her sincerity she tells her maid next day, "I'm going to have that man if I have to fight all the stenographers in the world for him."

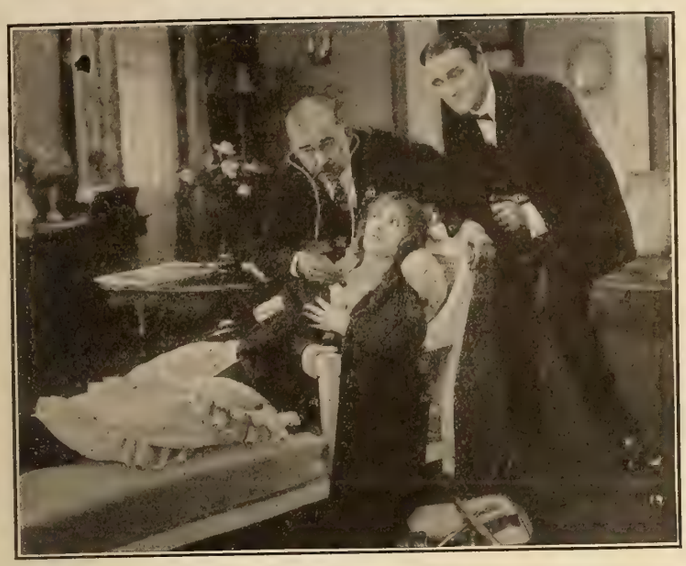
we can tell you something about it.



She really is feeling ill—very ill—her heart, you know—and besides—there's nothing like a little frame-up with the doctor when a man's slow in popping the question.

"You—You! ! !" Scene, Country Hotel; she had eloped with this perfectly lovely foreigner, but when he had innocently attempted a chaste embrace—and she only meant to spite her hubby anyway.

"No! No! No! Get out! Either give up that stenographer or give up me." She had purred and wheedled till she got him and now he, poor man was feeling her claws.

How was the poor hotel clerk, who also happened to be the town constabule, to know that her latest masculine visitor is her husband.

HERBERT E·HANCOCK Director-in-Chief

This Cast Sounds Like The Movies in Parade
MARSHALL NEILAN evidently has his eye on the kingpin stool among our most surprising movie directors. Every new picture Mr. Nellan directs has something particularly good or novel to make it stand out as a trade mark, but now the young director, who is working under the First National banner, has offered his biggest surprise. It is in the cast announced to support Anita Stewart in her new picture, "Her Kingdom of Dreams," for it might easily be mistaken for the participants in a Labor Day parade of picture folks of some sort. Here are some of the notables mentioned: Thomas Holding, Kathlyn Williams, Frank Currier, Mahlon Hamilton, Thomas Spottiswood Aitken, Robert McKim, Fred Huntley, Edwin Stevens, Anna Q. Nilsson, Wesley Barry (child), Herbert Prior, Thomas Jefferson, James Neill, Mrs. J. W. Wade, Ralph Graves, Thomas Santschi, Tully Marshall, Harry Ham, Edwin B. Tilton.

This paragraph from "The Detroit News" shows that it doesn't take the newspapers long to get next to anything big or novel about a new picture.

Never -- in all the years of my experience -- have I seen a drama of human emotions which so filled the heart to overflowing as "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS"

Tremendous tho' it is in a purely physical and scenic sense, - the thoughts and emotions with which it overwhelms you, make it the one great thinking picture of the generation.

Yet withal that it is the greatest love story ever told.

Carl Laemmle

FRANK KEENAN
in The World Aflame

I have taken the vital problem of the day and put it into a splendid story. It has cost me more than anything I have yet done. When I sketched its scenes to one of the Nation's mightiest Captains of Industry, a big hearted employer, he said: "Mr. Keenan, the Government should thank you." But let me tell you that the men of brains in the Labor movement will be behind that picture.

From Frank Keenan's speech before the Junior Chamber of Commerce in St. Louis.

FRANK in The World

If you can make the man associated with you in business make his self-interest your self-interest, and yours his, you have won. Eventually, in self-interest, employer and employee will have to get together. The outcome will be that they will be partners in business, and pledged in a profit-sharing idea that will not be autocratic and patronizing to the man who works for another.

From Mr. Keenan's speech at the St. Louis Convention.

KEENAN Aflame

In this masterly picture Mr. Keenan has struck a new and dominant note. Not only has he created a drama which is unexcelled in interest and dramatic power, but he has delivered a message that will bite into the minds of every man, woman and child that sees it.

It is the motion picture at its zenith.

Own Your Public

¶ Three weeks ago this page carried an editorial telling the exhibitor that his biggest, surest protection this year laid in his ability to advertise.

That his advertising ability was of the same consequence as his theatre investment, his location, his booking contracts. It was in fact, his greatest asset.

¶ That, through this advertising ability he held his public, and so long as he maintained this hold he need not fear producer owned theatres, nor chain theatre competition, nor unfair rental prices.

That this advertising ability gave him a strategic position in any trade war or exigency; that, above all other advantages he might have, it assured him independence in the face of any unfair aggression or imposition.

Many letters have been received. A good many exhibitors feel as we do—that the message is the most important this publication has ever carried.

The head of a prominent exhibiting concern writes: "This is the soundest advice you have ever given the exhibitor. Will he take it? I'm afraid not; and furthermore I'm afraid that many a small town exhibitor will either not get your thought or else will feel that his advertising limitations put him out of the running."

We don't believe this—any angle of it.

The small town exhibitor is often a better advertiser than his city brother—often away ahead of him; and, secondly, there isn't an exhibitor today anywhere but who has advertising avenues open to him and can get all the advertising material and help he needs on any picture.

We repeat the editorial. Its importance demands its careful and thoughtful consideration.

Does it occur to the exhibitor that his ability to advertise will prove, this year, his greatest asset, his surest protection?

Does he realize that this ability ranks in importance right along with the size and location of his house, his booking arrangements, etc.?

Let's see.

A box-office report has just come to my desk.

It reads: "Opened small but built up big through advertising. Ran a week."

There's a whole sermon in this text; or several sermons, for the text may be written many ways.

The picture was independently produced—one of the many good pictures made last spring and of which there will be an interesting number this year.

There was no star to send it off with a bang; no well-known name of a best seller book or play to advertise it in advance.

It was just a good picture, with good exploitation points in it—like the hint of a popular song, for one thing; and the exhibitor saw and played up these popular appeals; and the public was pleased and grew every day.

This exhibitor isn't going to worry greatly this year.

The market bugaboos—of high rentals, producer owned theatres, chain theatre competition, etc., look much less formidable to him.

Of course he's going to be up on his toes in all other respects. He won't be caught napping with respect to the size and comfort of his house, his projection, his music.

But he knows mighty well that in his advertising resources he is possessed of a redoubtable fortress. He isn't helpless before a shot from any quarter. He has solid ground under him. His defenses are secure.

Just so long as he can book such pictures—and his common sense tells him that plenty will be produced right along from all quarters, because there is plenty of demand for them—his advertising ability will put them over. And, secure in this knowledge he won't be unjustly dictated to by any one. He won't be cornered into submission. He snaps his fingers at monopoly. He's his own boss.

He reads about the owner of a chain of theatres, who cannot add others faster than good managers can be secured. And he smiles complacently. For he knows that the dearth of good managers is largely due and always will be due to the dearth of advertising ability.

Such an exhibitor is the mainstay of this business—and always will be.

Just as advertising is a central factor, so also is he, through his advertising ability.

He doesn't have to have pictures laid down upon his doorstep; he goes after them—with an advertising eye. He doesn't have to rely wholly upon what advertising facilities are given him; he adds his own. In a pinch he can rely wholly upon himself. His power is within himself, not in the other fellow's hands altogether; and that power is the advertising hold he has upon the public—whence comes the money that oils the wheels of this whole industry.

The producer prefers to play ball with this exhibitor; at least he will if he foresees his best interests.

Said the London manager of a string of British theatres, the other day: "A year ago I showed so-and-so pictures. They're good pictures. I wanted them. But they got uppish and told me I couldn't get along without them." The London manager thumped the desk: "That wasn't true. It won't ever be true in the picture business. You may bet your last sovereign on that!"

"I booked other pictures—selecting here and there—and advertised them. I worked harder, too—but this year we are making twice as much money as last year."

Every exhibitor in the United States—every exhibitor of pictures the world over— has this very same power.

But like any power it is not to be yielded unwisely. It is the exhibitor's protection; but it cannot be made his weapon of destruction.

Prices must be fair in this business. Good picture advertising follows upon good pictures and the man who makes good pictures deserves his share of the box-office returns of the advertising.

Good pictures must be encouraged just as good advertising must be encouraged.

You can never separate, in this or any other field the mutual interests of the makers and dispensers of the goods advertised. These mutual interests demand, exist and thrive upon mutual fairness.

Just as the editorial was written, several weeks ago, we noticed an advertising announcement made by a prominent exhibitor and directed at the producers.

What he said, in brief, was this: "I am the best advertiser in this city. I hold the public, the best public. I hold the public right along. Therefore, if you want the most profit and the best people in the city to see your pictures, see me about booking them! "

There's the thing in a nutshell.

If you—and the opportunity is open to any exhibitor—if you establish and hold such advertising supremacy, you can invite the producer to see you; you can direct the best pictures your way; you can demand fair rental prices.

It means hard and consistent work, but the exhibiting business today demands this work, this advertising work.

You can make yourself impregnable, if you——

OWN YOUR PUBLIC.

A Year of the National Association

¶Developments at the Rochester Convention indicate that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has not abandoned its plans to actively combat the screen production catering to morbid sensationalism under the guise of "Education."

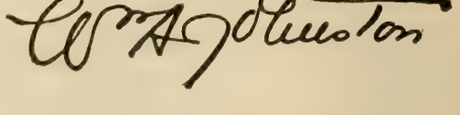
Indeed, the fight is to be carried on with renewed vigor and the aid of all branches enlisted. The cooperation of the trade papers has been asked and speedily given.

If no other accomplishments had been written into the records during the past year, the National Association would deserve the hearty support of all for the efforts it is putting forth to set the industry right in the eyes of the world.

But while on the subject it can well be said that the reports presented at the Rochester meeting gave evidence of many other praiseworthy activities.

To Messrs. Hess, Innerarity, Friend, Irwin, and others mentioned in the course of President Brady's speech, the thanks of the industry must be given. Nor must the hard-working committee members be forgotten, notably those contending with the puzzling problems of transportation and film theft.

And when this vote of gratitude has been given we are ready to rise with the rest in a standing vote and a ringing cheer for the never-tiring executive head of the Association, William A. Brady.



Dealing in Personalities

THE New York State Exhibitors' League pulled off a little party of their own at Rochester last week. Tuesday and Wednesday saw a meeting of eighty-six exhibitor members of the organization. Sydney Cohen presided.

You have to read between the lines of the bare recital of facts to get the real angle on the meeting. First of all the members discussed the matter of co-operative booking by the state exhibitors. It would seem as though New York's organization has no intention of landing its members in a wild scramble for open market features with sky-high bidding.

Exhibitors at the meeting also advocated breaking away from the National Association so as to permit independent action on internal problems. Campaigns were also planned to repeal the admission tax and against censorship.

Millard Johnson, of Auttralasian Films, will be back in New York this week from a visit to Australia. Harry Musgrove, managing director of the organization, left these shores two weeks ago on his way back to Australia.

"NOW is the winter of our discontent"—for a few weeks we are going to have very little to talk about. There will be very little news—very little gossip. Events will move along with a deathly stillness, with everyone waiting the big September rush.

It works that way every year. Throughout May and June the producers and distributors work quietly and there is little to report. In July they engage in a mad scramble to "Announce This" and "Proclaim That." The trade papers bulge with advertising, the news columns creak under the load of real news.

Honest, it's a shame the real news that's crowded into the one month of July. If we could only spread it out over the year an editor's life would be one round of satisfaction.

READY FOR WAR!

DEVELOPMENTS on Wednesday indicate that motion picture interests might soon be found lined up with the legitimate, vaudeville and burlesque managers in their battle with the Actors' Equity Association, which recently became affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Following rumors that Harry Mountford, old-time agitator in player ranks, had declared, "It will be the motion picture's turn next," a meeting of the National Association was held Wednesday afternoon. An official statement of the decision of the meeting will be forthcoming after this issue of the News has gone to press, but, meanwhile, President Brady makes the following verbal statement:

"The meeting was called by Mr. Fox and Mr. Zukor. I had nothing to do with the calling of the meeting and did not preside at it. Representatives of all the producers and distributors were present. It was decided that, if our own investigation showed that the contracts between players and managers were equitable and just, the National Association would work together with the theatrical, vaudeville and burlesque interests in meeting any situation that might arise."

But then August comes—and news is scarce enough to make a press agent weep and an editor growl. All the possible variations and changes are worked on the news that broke in July.

And the "bosses" are silent. Truth to tell, they are on the anxious seat. Money has been pouring out of the coffers like water to make the "big special productions" that have been announced, to secure the contracts that have caused all the advertising. Who wouldn't be anxious? The "bosses" are holding the bag. Contracts have not begun to arrive. Fingers are crossed while the salesmen's reports are scanned.

The end of August will tell the tale. And the beginning of September will find the story being re-written.

Meanwhile—where is the news, the gossip, the scandal? It has been a lean week, boys, or else this vacation stuff has had our nose tied too close to the desk. If we've ever had to cheat on this page—this is the week. So we have started by bringing in a beautifully large cut of the Rochester convention. Just think of all the work that cut saves us!

"Jack" Fuld, of Paramount—real name, "Horace"—says that his wife will have our scalp if we don't make it clear that he is not the Horace who returned from France a few weeks ago with a blushing bride. Seems that one is "Horace A." and the other "Horace S."—and "Personalities" has never been sure which is which.

THE Rochester convention brought a few of the Chicagoans to our fair town. Watterson Rothacker and Martin Quigley were among the representatives.

Then Sunday also saw the arrival of Louis Mayer from the coast, accompanied by a staff including Bennie Ziedman and Waldemar Young.

Louis was preceded by other visitors from the coast who made our eyes open wide with tales of the elaborate production plans under way at the Mayer plant. From all we hear this boy Mayer isn't stopping at anything—or at any expenditure.

Edgar Lewis also made his reappearance on Broadway this week. Edgar and Mrs. Lewis have journeyed half way round the world in the last few months. And arrived back just in time to listen to some very tempting offers for the services of Director Edgar Lewis.

These are surely the days of glory for the "sure-fire" director. And what the "sure-fire" man means may be seen from what George Loane Tucker has given Paramount in "The Miracle Man."

A New Page In Projection History

From Columbus Comes This Remarkable Story of the Simplex Achievement in Projecting Three Hundred and Fifty Feet on a Screen One Hundred by Seventy-five Feet

By William C. Francke

A NEW chapter in motion picture projection has just been written, the world's record for size of picture and length of throw was shattered and a new world's record involving almost unbelievable figures has been established.

In hundreds of communities after the "good-night" slide has been shown and the machine and main switches pulled in the numerous projection rooms, men whose duty it is to attend to the projection of motion pictures gather nightly in the various all-night lunch rooms, the union meeting hall, or convenient street corners, discussing the merits of the various pieces of projection room equipment, both mechanical and electrical, engaging in discussions involving optical and technical questions; in fact, talking "shop" from all of its various angles.

The question which has ofttimes been discussed is the extreme distance at which a commercial projecting machine may successfully project a clearly defined picture and to what size that picture may be extended. In all of these discussions heretofore it has been necessary to resort largely to conjecture and imagination, but the real answer to this question has been recorded through an achievement that is well worth a position in the columns of the trade and technical press.

Since the day that Maybridge in 1872, at the suggestion of Governor Leland Stanford, placed twenty cameras along the Governor's race track at Oakland, Cal., in order to catch the various movements of a trotting horse in action, this to prove whether or not a fast trotter has at all times one foot on the ground while trotting, up to the present time, various radical changes have been incorporated in the motion picture projector, each of these changes providing discussion aplenty for those intimately connected with the operation of these projectors as well as those engaged in their manufacture.

That the latest projection achievement should have been staged upon a race track in much the same invironment as the motion picture was born is truly a remarkable coincidence, but a far different gathering witnessed this projection feat than had gathered for the sporting event in 1872.

In the early part of April there appeared at the Simplex factory two leaders of the Methodist Church in New York, Dr. Christian F. Reisner and Dr. Chester C. Marshall. Both of these gentlemen stand high in the councils of their church and being keen and progressive, they are both advocates of the use of motion pictures for Scriptural teaching. Dr. Reisner is best known on account of his connection with the famous Grace Church, while Dr. Marshall, whose church activities are well known to local New Yorkers, is the pastor of the St. James Methodist Episcopal Church.

For years the Methodist Church had been planning for a centenary which would bring together the leaders and workers of that church from all parts of the world. A huge sum had been appropriated and Columbus, Ohio, was selected as the place to stage this enormous exposition, which would include exhibits of all sorts showing missionary and church activities in all quarters of the globe. Two hundred thousand delegates were elected to attend this centenary, which was scheduled to run from June 20 to July 13.

It is estimated that there are approximately forty thousand Methodist churches in the United States alone, and with quick perception to see the vast possibilities through entering the church field with their product, the leaders of the motion picture industry cooperated with the Methodist leaders in an endeavor to bring to the Centenary all that was best in the motion picture manufacturing line. Trade paper editors cooperated with the Centenary Committee and the directors of the largest film producing companies agreed to make special pictures for use at the Exposition exclusively. These men of the motion picture industry gradually awakened to the tremendous possibilities offered at this Exposition, and although accustomed to seeing big things done in their own industry, they marveled at the magnitude of the Columbus plans.

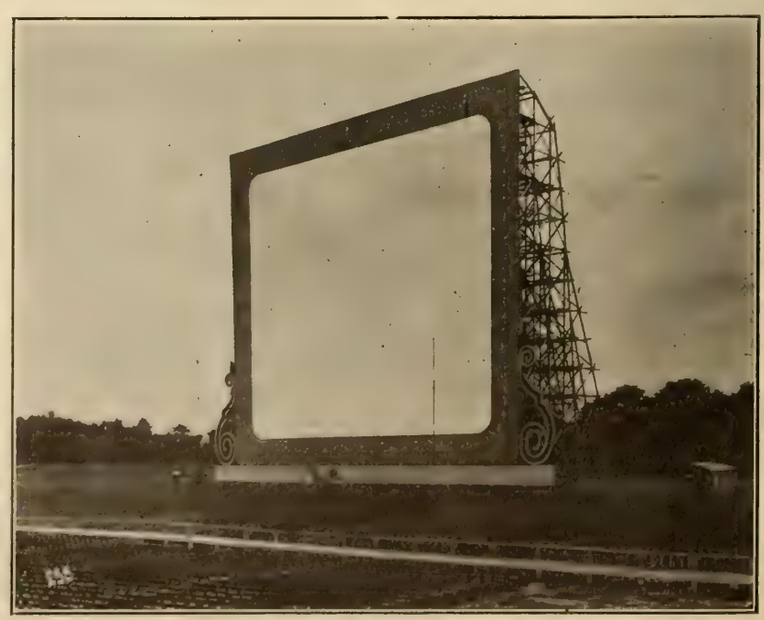
Both Drs. Reisner and Marshall spent considerable time in the selection of the large and varied program of pictures, many of them being screened and edited at the Little Simplex Theatre on Thirty-fourth Street. And then came the selection of the projectors. On account of the many Simplex machines already used in Methodist circles this was the machine chosen as the official projector for the Centenary. Nine regular commercial Simplexes were chosen and shipped to Columbus, where they were installed at the Coliseum, Auditorium and race track, respectively, under the personal supervision of Leo E. Dwyer.

The machines at the Coliseum were the regular type "S" lamp equipments. The distance here from the machine to screen was 225 feet, with a picture 26 feet in width, using 125 amperes of current. This in itself was quite a feat, but the results were not as startlingly apparent on account of the 80-foot proscenium arch, which caused the 26-foot picture to look proportionately small. An unusually good picture resulted, however, in spite of the fact that the picture was projected upon a plain white screen with noon-day projection, it being impossible to shut out entirely the daylight which penetrated the auditorium, which seated between nine and ten thousand.

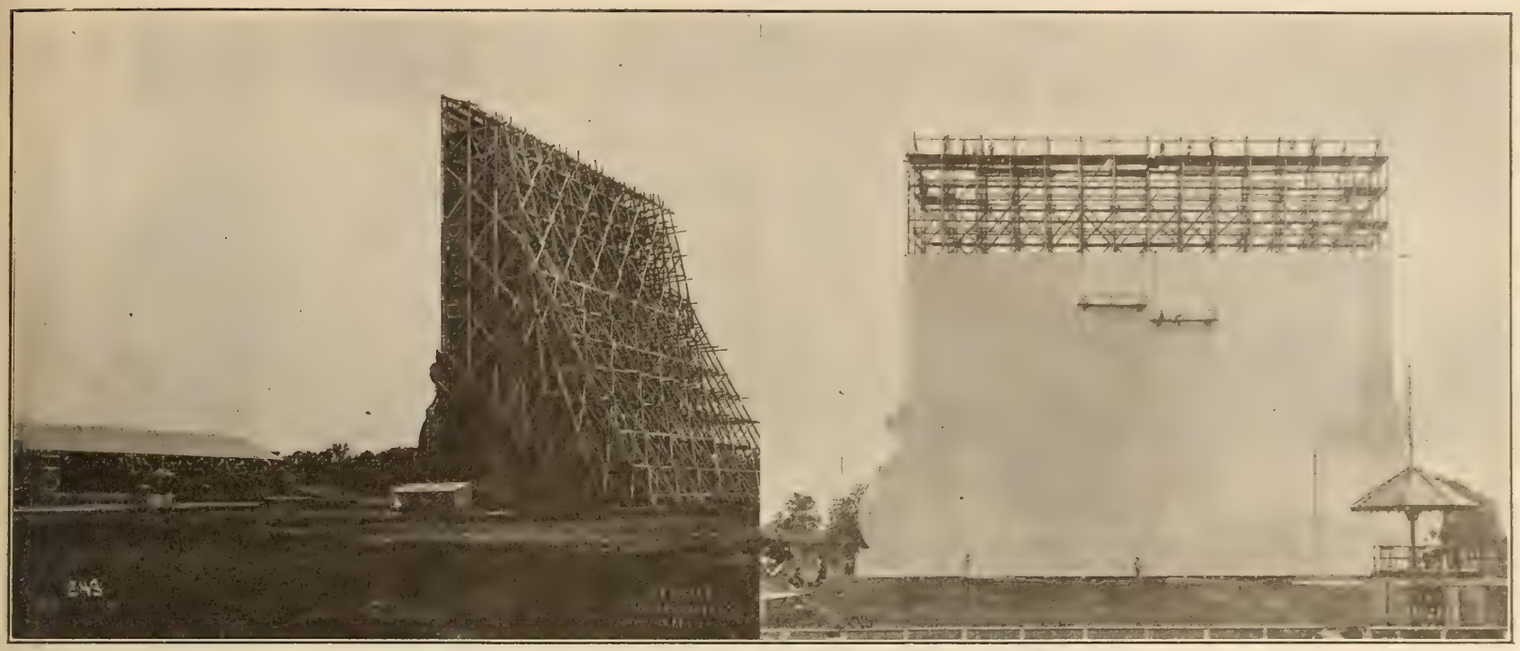
In the Motion Picture Auditorium, seating two thousand, the new Simplex Mazda Equipments were used at a distance of 90 feet, the service being supplied from a low voltage outfit. Here a beautiful picture 12x16 feet was produced upon a reflective screen. This exhibit was visited by thousands of delegates to the Centenary, their attention being centered upon the performances of this new Simplex equipment, which is especially adaptable for church use on account of its simplicity of operation and wonderful results, due to the optical system employed in its construction.

Meanwhile, at the race track, opposite the grand stand, with its normal seating capacity increased to 75,000, a large crew of carpenters had constructed a gigantic frame work which attracted the attention of all who attended the Exposition, and many conjectures were offered concerning the ultimate use to which this giant structure was to be put. It is here that new projection history was to be made, although at the beginning no one dreamed that the results finally obtained were possible or even contemplated. Gradually this framework took the form of a titanic billboard, which was thought by thousands would be used for bearing some Scriptural legend, but finally a white surface was painted upon it with the familiar round-cornered oblong. The secret was out—it was a motion picture screen, the largest ever attempted, and curiosity was still further aroused concerning the machine which would attempt to project a picture upon it that would fill this tremendous surface.

The main purpose of the screen had been to use it in connection with stereopticon slide projection. Upon its vast surface these slides would



When the monster screen was completed—One hundred thousand square feet of lumber was used.



The painters on the scaffold give an opportunity to realize the size of the gigantic screen erected at the Columbus Race Track depict to the multitudes the work performed in foreign lands by the Methodist Missionaries. Special slides 12 inches square had been prepared for this purpose and a specially built Beseler stereopticon machine had been constructed.

One hundred thousand square feet of lumber was used in the construction of this screen, which when finished towered 165 feet above the earth, with a lengthwise spread of 135 feet. The picture surface, 115 feet square, was covered with several coats of plain flat white lead. The cost of this enormous structure was estimated at $8,000.

Leo E. Dwyer, President of the Dwyer Bros. & Company of Cincinnati, Simplex distributors, and Edwin S. Porter, the well-known Vice-President of the Precision Machine Company, builders of the Simplex Projector, were the two men who conceived the idea of utilizing this large screen for motion picture purposes. After the close of the various motion picture exhibitions at night these men experimented with lenses and combinations. Starting at a 200-foot distance with a 56-foot picture, they gradually increased these figures until the final results were obtained. After the first few nights' results were observed they were confident that, even though they were working with a machine that was not specially constructed for these extreme conditions, they would succeed in breaking the world's record.

The local projectionists were also very much interested in these experiments and the big screen at the race track was the nightly gathering place of these men. Finally, after carefully checking up the closely watched results, Mr. Dwyer announced to those in charge of the Exposition that he was ready to show the world's largest picture. Unforunately, Mr. Porter had been called back to New York, but he left Columbus with the firm knowledge that the machine which he had so much to do with in regard to designing and building was to hang up an unheard-of world's record. And so, on July 4, while thousands were gathered at Toledo watching the world's prizefight championship change hands, one hundred and ten thousand others were gathered at the Columbus race track watching for the first beam of light to be shown upon the world's largest motion picture screen.

Among this audience were the leaders of the motion picture industry, many of whom were sceptical of the results. Some there were who believed it possible to fill the large space with a sort of a picture, but could not believe that a perfectly clear, sharp definition could be obtained. But when the signal was given and the title appeared upon the screen, clear, sharp and perfectly defined, their doubts faded away, and when the picture followed as steady, brilliant and sharp as any theatre picture could be, they realized that the impossible had been accomplished, for they were gazing at a picture 100x75 feet in diameter, projected at the unbelievable distance of 350 feet.

And to those who realized what this meant there came the thought that here indeed was a remarkable example of machine work, for the actual picture on the film is ¾x1 inch in size, and this was being magnified 1,440,000 times upon the screen before them without showing the slightest mechanical movement. It should be remembered that the slightest mechanical movement created by the projector itself would correspondingly be magnified these millions of times, resulting in anything but good effect upon the screen.

After the first exhibition there was a rush to congratulate Mr. Dwyer for attempting this remarkable feat, and hundreds of questions of a technical nature were asked him. For the benefit of the many projectionists interested in this performance, it would be well to state that a 2¾

Get Acquainted!

Here's the Department That Gives You a Chance to Meet the Real "Boys Behind the Guns"

IT is our recollection that George Carpenter, of the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake City, is the original "live wire exhibitor."

Before Service Bureaus were thought of and high-priced exploitation men were invented we can remember reading about clever stunts that George was pulling off out there in Salt Lake. Why there was hardly a week went by that Epes W. didn't have some Carpenter stunt to tell of.

And Carpenter hasn't stopped using his brains, for the Paramount-Empress still makes its appearance with regularity in the trade paper columns because of some unusual campaign. In addition to which Mr. Carpenter is one of the most valued members of our Exhibitors Advisory Board.

R. J. PELTIER is one of the real old-timers, having entered the game in 1906. He is now manager and owner of the Bijou and Lyric at Mount Clemens, Michigan. The Bijou seats a thousand while the Lyric is a smaller house, accommodating three hundred and fifty.

"I watch the pictures carefully," declares Mr. Peltier, "from the first time they are mentioned in your columns, studying every angle and booking accordingly. No theatre in America can boast of higher class entertainment than at the Bijou. I pick the cream for the Bijou and present the pictures in a fitting manner. I am my own censor and have the good will and support of the clergy and educators.

"There are no other theatres in town and the people are thoroughly satisfied. For the past seven years I have always paid film rentals far in advance and I am the oldest customer in the state on the books of Famous Players, Fox, Vitagraph and Pathe."

THE Queen theatre, Galveston, Texas, is at present the charge of Walter Penn. He seems to confine his activities to the biggest state in the Union, having come to Galveston from Dallas where he had been with the Hulsey shows for four years. And as Mr. Penn is not quite twenty-one years of age, he may well claim to have had an early start in the business, and believes he is now the youngest exhibitor in the state.

Galveston has not gone ahead with a big splurge as a show town according to Mr. Penn, but he sees the time coming when the southwest will sit up and take notice of this "city by the sea."

He is a constant reader of the NEWS and says he believes an exhibitor would be lost without its valuable support in all particulars.

J. E. ALFORD manages Jacob's theatre at McComb, Mississippi. Ambitious plans have been maturing in his breast for some time, however, and he is projecting a new combination theatre, to be finished during 1920 and which is to have a seating capacity of 1,500. The Jacob's seats 700. Both houses will be under Mr. Alford's direction, the smaller strictly as a motion picture theatre, the new one to handle both road attractions and pictures.

Mr. Alford reports that conditions in his territory are at present very good, occasionally slow spots being created by heavy rains which are periodical in the section.

"We are readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and have been ever since its publication, and we place it second to none" he states.

AS a busy man, W. P. McCartrey would appear to be somewhat in a class by himself. No less than four houses in three different Pennsylvania towns are under his direction. These are the Majestic and the Jefferson theatres at Punxsutawney; the Strand at Ridgway and the Rivoli at Johnsonburg.

Aside from the Majestic, which is a straight picture theatre and seats 375, these theatres are combination ones, and seat between 1,000 and 1,200. Mr. McCartrey makes his headquarters at the Jefferson theatre, Punxsutawney. He books practically all the Paramount and Artcraft productions, but is always on the look for a recognized photoplay of value which goes over big elsewhere, his policy being to give the patrons of his houses the best the market affords. Orchestras are used in all of the theatres.

Mr. McCartrey is seen above posed in front of the Majestic and Jefferson theatres. His name is another found on the subscription list of the NEWS.

GEORGE NICHOLAS is managing director of the Independent Amusement Co., Ltd., which owns and operates the Strand, Regent and Moulin Rouge theatres in Montreal, Canada. Headquarters for the three houses are at the Strand Theatre Building, Montreal, Canada.

"Last year was the largest in the history of the business," reports Mr. Nicholas when asked regarding conditions. His experience as an exhibitor goes back to 1909.

W. Lester handles the publicity department for the Independent organization.

E. H. HULSEY not only owns the First National Franchise for Texas and surrounding territory but he also has his theatres pretty well scattered over the Texas landscape.

The photograph above must have been taken within the last few weeks for E. H. appears to be "sore." And we know he has been fighting mad within the last few weeks. Someone started the rumor that the Hulsey houses had been sold out to large New York interests.

E. H. hit the ceiling, bounced back, and then dashed off to a telegraph office to wire hot denials to New York.

And then, just to go one better than a denial he added, "Not only have I not sold my houses, but I am in the market for more. Do you know of any good ones?"

inch projector lens was used for obtaining this large size picture. For illumination a 90 and a 50-ampere rheostat in the multiple series were employed, using 1⅛-inch carbon for the top and 7/16-inch silver tip lower. A 8½ and 7½-inch condenser combination was employed. On an ammeter test it showed that 180 amperes were being sent through the type "S" lamp all the time that the machines were running, and it might be of interest to note that at the end of the week's performance the carbon holders were singularly clear from burns or arcing bruises. A Simplex extralite shutter was also used.

Two members of the Columbus I. A. T. S. E., No. 386, operated the machines. These men, Charles Reed and Carl Offenderfer, helped considerably in obtaining with Mr. Dwyer the final results, and much credit is due them for the untiring manner in which they worked until the early morning hours on the task. And the Columbus Local Union, through its Business Agent, S. A. Westall, has congratulated the Precision Machine Company highly upon the performance of the Simplexes used in this connection.

While this projection feat has been conceded as being the biggest thing ever attempted, there is one element, in the opinion of projection experts, which makes it still more remarkable, and that is that the machines which were employed for this record-breaking achievement were ordinary stock machines taken out of the regular factory production, and were built in the same manner as are thousands of others turned out yearly by the Simplex people.

And during the various tests and even during the making of the remarkable record itself nothing of a special nature was used to help combat the abnormal conditions prevailing, such as moonlight shining directly upon the screen and the numerous other definition-destroying elements that usually accompany outdoor projection.

Why the Trade Paper?

Some Salesmen Aren't Sure, So "Paramount Pep" Gives a Few Reasons

PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT "Pep," the confidential house organ published by and for the employes of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, last week contained an editorial addressed directly to the sales force, on the subject of the importance of trade paper advertising. It follows:

"It's your business to know all the Paramount-Artcraft pictures, old and new, to know them by titles, what they're about and how good they are.

"But it's not in the exhibitors' daily life to know about them until you tell him, or, until—

"He reads about them in the motion picture trade advertisements.

"Trade advertising for motion pictures is an absolute essential to the sale of pictures. It is the one thing (in many cases, the only thing) the exhibitor reads. It is his newspaper and his encyclopedia. He learns to judge values by it, to appreciate and discriminate. Consciously or sub-consciously he absorbs ideas about motion pictures from trade advertising that no word-of-mouth selling argument could ever hope to attain.

"The exhibitor who buys your goods has to sell them again. That's in his mind when he buys. It's in his mind when he reads the trade advertisements. And the picture that is not worth a trade advertisement is judged by him to be a picture not worth much to his public.

"You cannot land a muskelonge with a tackle made for croppie. Small ideas are poor bait for big business. To be the representative leader of the field—to hold first place on quality and efficiency, it is absolutely essential that trade advertising dominate.

"It is our effort to make our trade advertising dominate, to put in the mind of the exhibitor a feeling and a belief that nothing can dislodge—the knowledge of the unquestioned superiority of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures—every one of them and each of them."

New York Exhibitors Upheld

Miami Valley League President Sides Against Black in Dispute Now Raging

THE following statement with regard to the exhibitors' dispute at present active is made by John Siefert, President of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League:

"I have read carefully the proceedings of the St. Louis convention and the controversy since in the trade press that has been going on between the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New State and the gentlemen who controlled the convention at St. Louis.

"We sincerely deplore the fact that at this time when the co-operation of every man interested in the exhibiting branch of the industry is so much needed to protect our investments, that the men who met at St. Louis were so short-sighted in shutting out from their councils the organization of the great State of New York, which had just finished its successful campaign in passing the Sunday opening bill and defeating censorship.

"New York's contention that in a national convention of exhibitors each state should be entitled to representatio based on the number of congressional districts within the state, I can see only an organization built on sound, fair and just basis, by this plan.

"There should be no question in the mind of the exhibitors that no organization can last that proposes to tax its members without giving them a fair representation in the passing of those taxes.

"Mr. Black, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Incorporated, cannot deny the fact that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State had no selfish motive in presenting this form of organization, as they clearly have stated in their answers that they are interested only in an organization of exhibitors in which its officers would not financially be interested in other branches of the industry.

"The Miami Valley League received the news from New York with great pleasure that they are taking a stand against any possible camouflaged organization, dominated by producers or distributors who today are showing their hand as being ready to crush the exhibitor who does not concede to the many unreasonable demands from them, and even some of them have gone so far as to threaten to build or buy theatres in direct competition.

"Our organization hereby extends to the exhibitors of New York a helping hand to further perfect a national organization on the basis and outlines of the New York State Ehibitors' League and we assure them every co-operation.

A Knock to Film Trade Board

Kansas Exhibitors in Convention Say It Is Un-American; Successful Meeting

EXHIBITORS representing fifty cities gathered at Wichita, Kansas, August 4th and 5th in the largest convention ever held of Kansas theatremen.

Committees and officers reported a satisfying balance in bank. Stanley Chamber reported upon four conferences with Governor Allen regarding the present censor board resolution drafter, appealing to the Governor to change the board and appoint someone more friendly to Motion Pictures progress in this regard was regarded as favorable.

On August 4th a banquet was held at the Lashen Hotel, with 150 exhibitors present. A. H. Cole, of Famous Players, spoke on advertising, and Dave Rogers, of the United, on the necessity of production and distribution arms of the industry co-operating with exhibitors.

The Theatre Managers' Association on August 5th invited film men to speak to exhibitors concerning the Film Board of Trade. Jack Storey, Pathe manager, and Myron Lewis, Famous Players district manager, spoke in behalf of the Trade Board. They were answered by Judge Dean, attorney for exhibitors, who declared that the film board was un-American because it set up to put its rights over the property rights of exhibitors and to make of itself a tribunal without legal authority, to assess punishment to exhibitors and to deal with the property rights of exhibitors without authority.

The association went on record as favoring drastic measures to eliminate unscrupulous exhibitors, but stated it does not recognize that they have the right as a body to settle disputes between individual exhibitors.

President M. Miller was unable to preside on account of illness and Dick Liggett, of the Gene Guntier theatres, Kansas City, held the gavel.

Advisory Specialist Is An Innovation

It is announced that Joseph Merrick, one of the most widely known men in the film industry, has joined the Robertson-Cole Company to inaugurate a special form of personal assistance to the exhibitor clientele of that firm throughout the country. Mr. Merrick will call on exhibitors in every state of the Union to consult with them and to advise them on Robertson-Cole productions.

The belief of Robertson-Cole is that much can be accomplished in the improvement of conditions in the industry by studying the needs of the exhibitor at close range and making every effort to supply those needs.

Following her tour of inspection, Mrs. Bergstresser gave the theatres a clean bill of health.

Carnival Planned on Fleet Arrival

Officers and members of the Affiliated Pictures Interests are taking a very active part in the making of plans for entertaining the officers and men of the Pacific Fleet upon its arrival in Los Angeles, Saturday, August 9, and their stay until Wednesday of the following week. In preparing the programme for this work, W. J. Reynolds is acting as chairman of the Producers Committee and Harry Leonhardt, Harry Ballance for the theatres, and D. E. Loper and A. B. Lamb for the exchange men. Arrangements have been completed whereby any of the members of the Flect's crew may attend any Los Angeles theatre free by securing tickets that will be issued to them at the booth conducted at Central Park.

Each night the Affiliated Industry will give a reception to the sailors on Olive Street, between Eighth and Ninth, where all the artists of the screen will appear and entertain the sailors. There will be dancing on specially erected platforms, with music furnished by two bands.

Coast Sees Premier of "Right to Happiness"

The first public showing of the special Universal production filmed under the direction of Alan Holubar, starring Dorothy Phillips, and given the final title of "The Right to Happiness" will be given at the California theatre, Los Angeles, on August 11th. The picture has been booked for one week's pre-released showing. Plans are now being made for special stage effects and the new film will be introduced with an out-of-the ordinary advertising campaign.

Organizes to Manufacture Film Dyes

Mr. George L. Barrows, well known among the motion pictures laboratories as the former agent for "Agfa" Products developers and film dyes, has decided to go into the manufacture of all of these products in the country thus assuring the trade of a reliable product. His compny will be known as the Sagamore Chemical Co., Inc. of 122 West 31st St., New York City.

Providence Operators Ask Wage Increases

Moving picture operators in Providence, R. I., want more money. They have presented a new agreement to go into effect Sept. 1 to continue for one year. Its main feature is the call for a substantial increase in pay. The scale calls for $40 a week of six days consecutive hours on motor-driven machines with all time in excess of six hours at the rate of time and a half. Sunday work must be paid for at double time. On hand driven machines they want 10 per cent more. Assistants are to be paid $20 a week. In houses running "production films," the rate for projectionists is to be not less than $55 a week of 36 hours.

The agreement also specifies that if at any time during the life of the contract, the management shall, by reason of running special attractions, raise the admission fee the projection room force shall receive the salary demanded for travelling attractions.

Slide Ads Finance Tax Repeal Campaign

Financing the tax repeal campaign in the state of Maryland has been successfully accomplished by Thomas D. Goldberg of the Walbrook Theatre, Baltimore, who is director of the campaign in that state. Many exhibitors believed the Cleveland plan would not work. But here is how Goldberg worked it out.

First he secured a contract with a real estate company for five weeks at a price most acceptable to the exhibitors league of Maryland. When Goldberg's associates saw the check they "were knocked out" to use Goldberg's expression. Now negotiations are on to line up other large concerns which recognize screen advertising as one of the most profitable forms of advertising.

Sherrill Takes Over Poppy Comedies

Announcement was made this week of the sale to William Sherill of the all interest of the Poppy Comedies Incorporated, heretofore held by Harry Leonhardt and Jean Perry. The Company was organized more than two months ago and has produced six reel comedies featuring Mach Swain. The reason given for the retirement of Messrs. Leonhardt and Perry is other interests; Mr. Leonhardt being Managing Director of the California Theatre in Los Angeles, and Mr. Perry having interests in the northwest.

Merry Indiana Fight for Sunday Opening

Word from Miss Dolly Spurr, President and General Manager of the Mutual Theatre Co. of Marion, Ind., indicates that the fight of the Central States exhibitors for Sunday opening has only started. Despite that an injunction asked against the police and mayor of Marion was denied, a circuit court trial is coming up in September.

"Regardless of the church element here, the public in general want Sunday movies" writes Miss Spurr. "We secured 4,900 petitions in five days which is a pretty good showing out of 19,000."

"Americanism" Keynote of N.A.M.P.I.

Successful Annual Meeting Held at Rochester; Eastman Endows Music and Film Academy; Brady Again Heads the Association

INDICATIONS that the strides that will be taken by the industry during the coming year will be of the seven league variety were plentifully in evidence at the third annual convention of the National Association, held at Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 5.

The keynote of the feeling that prevailed was contained in the resolution introduced by Charles C Pettijohn that " the Association record its determination to maintain 100 per cent Americanism upon the screens of the country as scrupuously as during the war emergency."

From point of attendance the convention was all that was to be desired. Things were started off with a bang when George Eastman of the Eastman Kodak Company told of his plan for the Eastman School of Music, to be conducted in conjunction with the motion picture—one of the most important steps forward yet made. He has donated $3,500,000 for this institution which will be run in connection with the University of Rochester.

Press Censorship Fight

William A. Brady, speaking at the banquet, complimented Gabriel Hess, chairman of the Censorship Committee, for the successful fight waged against official state censorship, acknowledging the aid given by Gabriel Hess, Lewis Finnerty, John C. Flynn, Walter W. Irwin, Arthur S. Friend and J. E. Brulatour in this and other regards. This fight is to be continued vigorously at any point where the danger crops up, while the Association will back the Board of Review and its criticisms to the limit. Bills on the subject introduced in 24 states during the past year have been defeated.

The death knell of makers of bad pictures, and their product was also sounded by President Brady, the prevalent feeling being strong that the day of salacious sex plays, and others tending to bring disrepute on the industry, has long since waned.

Sidney S. Cohen and his confreres in the successful fight for Sunday opening in New York state came in for their meed of praise, and Governor Sproul of Pennsylvania, always a hot bed state in the matter of unfavorable legislation directed toward motion pictures, was complimented on the broad-minded stand he has taken in vetoing offensive and unjust bills which have gone through the Legislature.

With the exception of William L. Sherrill, one of the vice-presidents who was replaced by Samuel Goldwyn, all the existing officers were continued in office, with William A. Brady continuing to occupy the Presidential chair.

When Eastman's musical project was first conceived it was felt the appeal would not be universal, and the motion picture was hit upon as having such an appeal to the public. A combination of the two was decided upon, and only the finest class of pictures and music will be presented. The Academy will be completed in a year and a half and will seat 3200.

TRADE RULES REACH NEW ORLEANS

EIGHT of the twelve film exchanges operating in New Orleans at a meeting held late in July took steps to eliminate the dishonest and the careless exhibitor by the formation of the Film Exchange Managers' Association of New Orleans. Considerable loss is claimed to be caused the film exchanges, not only in New Orleans, but throughout the South, by failure of small-town exhibitors to pay for their films, by slow payment of credit accounts and by the carelessness of exhibitors in failing to read shipping instructions, often returning films to the exchanges when they should have been shipped to other towns, thereby occasioning direct loss to the exchange.

The exchanges forming the associations are S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, Pathe Exchange, Inc., Select Pictures Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, World Film Corporation and the Southern Triangle Pictures Corporation. While permanent officers have not been elected at this writing, the association has adopted trade rules.

Efficient Blow on Tax Repeal

Direct Methods Taken by Connecticut Men to Focus Congressional Attention

THE effective manner in which State Director William E. Spragg of Connecticut, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of that state is handling the tax repeal campaign is pointed out as a model for other directors in the tax repeal campaign.

As a result of Mr. Spragg's work every Congressman from his state and each of the two Senators knew what the exhibitors and their patrons wanted. That is what 100 per cent really means.

Here is a sample letter sent out by Mr. Spragg to his district leaders: Walter Murphy, of New London; C. L. Martin, of Waterbury; A. J. Morrison, of Hartford; M. A. Henue, of Bridgeport and L. M. Sagal, of New Haven:

"First of all, Have You Attended To the Matter of Pledges concerning which you have my letter of yesterday? If not, won't you please do it at once and let us register 100 per cent.

"Now, for your information, which I likewise trust you will pass on to each exhibitor in your district, the following are facts:

"With the exception of Congressman Lonergen, all the Connecticut Congressmen are Republicans and will attend a Republican caucus of the House probably next Wednesday, July 23. This caucus will decide whether the tax repeal is to be put through at this session.

"To get the exhibitors' position before that caucus I wish that you would have each exhibitor beside yourself in your district at once send the four telegrams to the four Congressmen. I am enclosing an outline of the telegrams. I do not mean that all wires should conform to this copy, but they should all contain the same meaning. I prefer that they would not all conform. Understand that each exhibitor is to send four telegrams, one to each Congressman, as night letters, paid, and you hereby have authority if any exhibitor so desires, to have the bill forwarded to this office for payment of the telegrams."

Handling Griffith's Picture on Road

Irvin M. Lesser, who has just been discharged from the navy after almost a year's service following his voluntary enlistment, is leaving within a few days for Chicago, where he will take the active management of the several road companies of the D. W. Griffith film "Hearts of the World." Mr. Lesser will have his office in Chicago and will supervise the midwest "Hearts of the World" Company. Offices are located at 1205 City Hall Square Bldg.

Irvin Lesser has been identified with the motion picture distribution business in San Francisco and Los Angeles, for the past five years.

Eastern Film Co. Rises Above Fire Losses

Herman Rifkin, president of the Eastern Feature Film Co., which sustained heavy loss by fire on July 24, has issued a statement that the concern is still in position to take the best of care of its patrons. New prints of subjects destroyed have been ordered and are being rushed.

Many new subjects which were held for later release will be put on the market immediately, and the market is being raked over to procure additional new films of quality.

Carpenters and masons are at work on the plant and in a short time all traces of the fire will have been effaced.

Eugene Strong in New Picture

Eugene Strong, who has lately been seen in "The Vengeance of Durand" and more recently still in "The Power of Women," a Burton King production, has now been engaged for an important part in a Gaumont production to be directed by Joseph Levering. Mr. Strong very modestly attributes his rapid rise to popularity to the excellent management he has been given by Edward Small, who is his personal manager.

Assistant Comptroller of Realart Named

C. C. Danehy, well known in accouting circles of the film world, has been appointed Assistant Comptroller of Realart Pictures Corporation. He will be chief assistant to Dario L. Faralla, the comptroller.

Add Field Exploitation Men

Universal Augments Publicity Staff in Many of the Larger Exchanges

ONE of the most interesting and important announcements of the week is that of the enlargement of the field publicity and exploitation staff of the Universal company. The announcement was made by Tarkington Baker, Universal's general manager.

This announcement is more than interesting from the fact that the Universal company claims to have been the first company to introduce and organize a field publicity and exploitation department which plan was later followed by many other large producing concerns. The enlargement consists of placing assistants in many of the larger exchanges of Universal. This action has been contemplated for some time because of the great amount of work the exploitation men are doing among exhibitors. Under the new plan wherever an assistant is put on, it will allow one of the two men to be in the exchange office permanently and give the other exploitation man freedom to cover the exchange territory. The equipment of the traveling representative will include an automobile in which to visit every town in the territory.

In making the announcement Mr. Baker said: "Since having organized our unique and large exploitation staff last year Universal has seen the great need of the exhibitor for the help of the producing company in exploiting a picture. We have received many letters from exhibitors throughout the country thanking us for our assistance and we believe that the successful producer of the future will be the one who realizes that the exhibitor not only buys a film but in doing so buys the right to a service which will make the showing of that film profitable to him."

Films Aided Election; Against Tax

Congressman Melvin O. McLaughlin of Nebraska, former minister and president of York College, York, Neb., was elected to office by the largest majority ever given to a candidate of his party in his district. He used motion picture machines of his own and the screens of movie houses in his district.

He believes the tax on movies, for which the exhibitors of the country are seeking the repeal, should be removed. He says:

"The provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918, which impose a tax on motion pictures are based on the false assumption that motion pictures are a luxury. They are a real necessity; they afford the privileges of education, entertainment and recreation necessary to health and improvement.

"It is unfair to our citizens, all of whom are paying taxes on their incomes, as well as on the food they eat and the clothes they wear, to confront them with an additional tax at the theatre, whither they repair for relaxation, information and recreation after the long tedious day of toil."

Late "V" Release "Different"

of Ex-Convicts, with Stewart Starred "Shadows of the Past," a Stirring Tale

"SHADOWS of the Past" an unusual story of three ex-convicts, with Anita Stewart in the leading role, is the current Vitagraph release. The picture is "different." It is not a crook play although the three central figures, a man and two women, served a year each in prison. It is not a play of the underworld. It strives to demonstrate the difficulties surrounding the ex-convict when he does his utmost to "go straight" after his release from prison.

"Shadows of the Past" is not an attack on the police or police methods. Time was when the police, and those of New York in particular, were accused of placing every obstacle in the way of the former convict. They went on the assumption of once a crook always a crook. But this premise has been proven to be a fallacy. Hundreds of men and women, who have served prison terms, have become law-abiding citizens. There is even a chance that many, like the three ex-convicts in "Shadows of the Past," were not guilty in the first place. The New York police now point with pride to the reformation of several gang leaders whose name brought terror to all and who apparently were hopelessly bad. Yet they reformed, and after the police realized that their change of heart was sincere, they were not molested.

But the ex-convict still has a real enemy—a strong deterring factor in his attempt to go straight. He is the blackmailer—the shadow of the past—who trails his victim to his new home and puts a price on his silence. It is this class of human vultures with which Miss Stewart's new play has to do. In this case it is not money that is sought by the blackmailer, but the aid of the three ex-convicts in besmirching the reputation of a young man, a candidate for Governorship, who is also the admirer of Lucy, but a lovable and strong character, as played by Miss Stewart. Her two companions weaken under the threats of the blackmailing political ward leader to expose their past, but Lucy holds out successfully and thwarts the villain.

Vitagraph has given "Shadows of the Past" a production in keeping with the excellence of the story and has provided a superb cast. It includes Harry T. Morey, E. K. Lincoln, L. Rogers Lytton, Julia Swayne Gordon, Rose E. Tapley and others. The play was written by Marguerite Bertsch. Ralph Ince was the director.

Universal Comedies at Coytesville Studio

It has been definitely announced by a Universal official that the production of a special series of comedies will be begun at Universal's Coytesville studio within the next ten days.

George Cochrane, former director of comedies and Western productions at Universal City has been elected to direct the new comedies. Mr. Cochrane served with the Marines in France and returned to this country last June.

Announcement is made that the new comedies will picture the humorous side of the soldier's life. The incidents and scenes will be taken from stories submitted by ex-soldiers. Universal some time ago asked that soldier's submit humorous articles regarding their experiences and many have been received already by Mr. Cochrane. The first production although not titled will feature George Brown, an Irish comedian, formerly with the U. S. Marines in France and who was a popular Marine entertainer while overseas.

According to Mr. Cochrane a number of ex-soldiers and Marines will be used in the casts of the new comedies. This series of comedies will depict humorous events in a soldier's life from the time he enlists to his return from battles overseas.

Knoles vs. Mayflower in Court Action

An action of interest to motion picture directors and producers will be tried in the United States District Court in New York City this Fall as a result of a suit brought by the May Flower Photoplay Corporation against Harley Knoles in connection with the production of the photoplay "Bolshevism On Trial."

The complainants are seeking to recover the sum of $5,200, six and one-half weeks' salary, which they claim was paid to Harley Knoles over and above the sum allowed for in an agreement made with him for a certain number of weeks' salary at $800 per week.

Harley Knoles in his answer makes a flat denial to all charges.

"Virtuous Men" Sales

Keeping pace with the rapid distribution of territorial rights for "Virtuous Men" in this country and Canada are the sales being made for the S-L Production by J. Frank Brockliss, Inc. for foreign countries. This organization, which controls the entire foreign rights for "Virtuous Men," announced this week the sale of Switzerland, Italy, Holland, Spain and France for the picture.

In distributing "Virtuous Men" for foreign countries, the Brockliss organization has placed in effect an innovation which is meeting with strong approval from their buyers. Special scenes, filmed during the making of "Virtuous Men" by the S-L producers, which in atmosphere and action carry a direct appeal to foreign audiences, are inserted in each print. This plan was worked out by Sydney Garrett, President of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc. and Herbert Lubin, prior to the production of "Virtuous Men."

A. H. Woods on Affiliation with Goldwyn

A. H. Woods has issued the following statement in connection with his recent alliance with the Goldwyn Picture Corporation:

"The time has come, as I knew it surely would come, when the great motion picture concerns would have to come to the legitimate producer for the bulk of their material. The theatrical manager has become the manufacturer, so to speak, for the screen company. The better material comes to him first and he reaches the public more directly with that material. He is able to establish an intimate relation between the play and the audience which can later be capitalized when the play enters upon its screen career. In my own career, I have tried to bring into the legitimate theatre, in the plays I have produced, the "punch" and action of the cinema, and for that reason I believe that my plays are particularly adapted for motion picture reproduction. I chose the Goldwyn Corporation because of its splendid record and splendid facilities."

Lee Kugel Controls "Old Lady 31"

"Old Lady 31" the successful stage play, is not controlled by the Goldwyn organization as inadvertantly stated in a story printed in last week's issue of the Goldwyn-Shubert combination.

Lee Kugel owns and controls the rights to this play and states that there is at present no thought of presenting it in pictures, the piece still being a marked success on the spoken stage.

New Orleans "Shot" for First Time from Air

First motion pictures of New Orleans ever made from an airplane were taken during the week from July 21 to 28 for exhibition by the Harcel Film Company, Inc., of New Orleans, for exhibition all over the country in travel weeklies and to advertise recruiting for the U. S. navy.

Vita Entrenched In the English Market

Smith Announces Purchase of Ruffell's System of Exchanges in Northern England, Strong Trench in Foreign Competition Battle

VITAGRAPH, in pressing forward in the growing competition for business in the foreign field, last week announced the outright purchase of Ruffell's system of exchanges in the North of England, one of the oldest exchange units in Europe and virtually controlling the film business in Northern England.

The purchase indicates a radical evolution in the process of distribution for a vital portion of this section of Europe and adds a chapter to the world history of films.

George H. Smith, head of Vitagraph's English branch, and brother of Albert H. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, negotiated the deal which throws this concern's European and American interests into new competition.

In northern England, practically all American films have had to make their way through Ruffell's, it serving as a general exchange for the various companies, giving priority to none

An Exclusive Asset

Vitagraph, which was one of the pioneers among American companies to establish branches on the other side, has had agencies well scattered over the south of England and France, but up to now has operated in the northern part of the United Kingdom, as did the other companies, only through Ruffell's, the giant among the distributors.

Ruffell's has operated under a routine peculiar to itself. The method has stood for years as a testimonial to the canny traits of the Scotch and Welsh exhibitors. These latter film men have the quality of Missourians. They have to be shown every picture they take.

It was upon this unbreakable fact of North British character that Ruffell's existed. The system provided regular trade showings of all American films, without fear or favor or regard for shipping exigencies, at its various exchanges. The trade showings occurred on certain days, and at no other time.

The exhibitors were invited to attend these showings, and make their bookings on the spot, for blocks of films covering the whole range of American offerings. Films that arrived too late from the American side, missed their chance of exhibition for a month.

American producers long have cast eyes full of envy and desire upon the English exchange.

Vitagraph proved to be the lucky company to finally gather the system to its own exclusive uses. Hereafter none but Vitagraph pictures will be shown in the one-time Ruffell's exchanges. The American company will take over the system on October 1.

The acquisition of Ruffell's is in fact only the last of a long record of trade extensional steps effected by Vitagraph under the guidance of Albert E. Smith, its president. It recalls how this company has spread the horizon of its influence first to London in 1905, next to Paris in 1906, and thereafter by gradual advances to all other parts of Europe.

BRADY PREPARING FOR FOREIGN PRODUCTION

WILLIAM A. BRADY will shortly commence the production of a big motion picture in England. This will be a picturization of "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," one of the most successful of the Drury Lane melodramas and one which is said to offer exceptional opportunities for successful transference to the screen. Many of the famous London thoroughfares and buildings will be used as locations in the filming of "Cheer, Boys, Cheer."

Mr. Brady also will shortly start work on the first of the six motion picture productions to be made in Paris in association with the Film D'Art, recently announced.

George Cowl will sail soon for Paris to undertake the direction of this picture, the story of which has been written by Henry Kistemaeckers, the French dramatist. Fannie Ward will appear in this picture, as yet unnamed. This production will be followed by one from a story written by Henri Bernstein, in which will appear another American motion picture star.

Interesting Court Decision

Verdict Favors Powers Co. in Action Brought by the Eastman Kodak Company

A DECISION which is regarded by many as the opening gun in a legal battle between the raw stock giants of the motion picture industry was handed down this week from the Supreme Court of Monroe County. The suit was brought by the Eastman Kodak Company of Rochester to restrain the Powers Film Products Company from employing one of their workmen named Harry Warren. It was alleged that Warren was an expert film coater and that he had signed a contract in which he agreed not to work for any similar concern for a period of two years after he left the employment of the Eastman Company. He received $26 a week. He sought employment at the Powers plant which is also in Rochester. He was engaged at $50 a week. The Eastman Company then secured an injunction against the Powers Company and Warren, seeking to establish their contract, with Warren and seeking to deter the Powers Company from "soliciting their workmen" and seeking to prevent Warren from "divulging the Eastman secrets of trade."

The case attracted a great deal of attention from lawyers and judges dealing as it did with the contractural rights of labor to seek its own market. Judge Ingraham of Ingraham, Sheehan & Moran conducted the case for P. A. Powers, who is the President of the Powers Film Products Company.

Judge Rodenbeck reserved decision and it was only this week that the decision was handed down. It was awaited with interest by the film industry generally and by many employers of labor, as it dealt with several undecided questions in regard to labor relations which are now uppermost in the public eye.

The court failed to find that the Powers Company had committed an unlawful act in employing Warren or that Warren had divulged any of the secrets of manufacture to his new employers or that he had any such secrets to divulge. It called attention to the fact that Warren had worked ten years for the Eastman Kodak Company and that "it is hardly to be presumed that a man who has been employed in a factory such as the plaintiff's for a period of ten years and receives such compensation (a salary with some allowances which brings the amount up to $30 a week) is possessed of many secrets of manufacture of which the plaintiff claims to be the sole owner."

Kane Seeks Phila. Exchange Location

For the first time since Realart took the plunge on June 9, Arthur S. Kane, has been away from Manhattan Island with the exception of his nightly voyages to his country home at Sound Beach, Connecticut.

Philadelphia was the object of Mr. Kane's visit which occurred Wednesday, July 30. The preliminary work of opening an exchange in the Quaker City was the occasion for the trip. Mr. Kane found the trade bubbling over with enthusiasm over the advent of Realart Pictures, and after spending the day in Philadelphia, returned to New York considerably pepped up for his countryside labors.

Add to Theatre Chain

Ruben and Finklstein, owners of the First National franchise in the Minneapolis territory, have added a new theatre to their chain by purchasing the Lyndale at Lake Street and Lyndale Avenue, Minneapolis, from Jack Martin. This makes the tewnty-second theatre under their control in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

TAX REPEAL PETITION

THE Committee on Legislation and Tax of the M. P. E. L. A. urges that exhibitors take steps to have their patrons sign tax repeal petitions on the order of the following:

To the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned residents of ————, urgently appeal to your honorable body to repeal Sections 800, 908 and 1001 of the Revenue Bill of 1918, which sections we consider an inequitable, discriminatory and unnecessary burden imposed upon motion picture theater patrons and the owners of motion picture theatres. We urge your honorable body to repeal these sections at the present session of Congress.

Leah Baird Elected Artco Officer

Closely following the announcement of the purchase of the entire stock of Artco Productions, Inc., by Arthur F. Beck and the installation of Mr. Beck as President of that concern, comes that of Miss Leah Baird's election as Secretary and Treasurer of the Artco Productions, Inc.

Miss Baird is one of the few screen stars to be thus honored and in placing her on the director's board, the officers of Artco Productions, Inc. feel that not only is the signal distinction due Miss Baird for her notably artistic work in their two recent productions "As a Man Thinks" and "The Volcano," both of which are released on the W. W. Hodkinson program, but with her wide knowledge of the motion picture business, her balanced judgment and her instant and sure grasp of all important questions, she will be indeed an invaluable asset.

Marketing Hall Room Boys Films

AS soon as the news reached the state right buyers that the Hall Room Boys' Comedies had been a tremendous success at the Strand theatre, New York, offers for territory began pouring in and within a few hours after the second of the comedies had appeared at the Strand the Eastern Pennsylvania and California territories had been sold and a number of other territories protected under options.

What seems to be most unusual is that the state right's men who have purchased these comedies so far have paid higher prices for them than for any two reel comedies offered to the state right buyers and that these buyers who have protected their territory by options have not requested the comedies to be forwarded for inspection. In cases where the options have not already been exercised the state right's buyers are simply holding up completing the transactions to determine the amount of territory desired.

Rush of State Right Buyers After First Run

This is probably due to the fact that these pictures have been made by the National Film Corporation of America, who have so successfully produced the Smiling Bill Parson's comedies, released through Goldwyn. The popularity of Flanigan and Edwards who are being featured in the Hall Room Boys' Comedies, and who have appeared in all of the big vaudeville houses as headliners together with the publicity given the Hall Room Boys' cartoons published for over fifteen years, in over seventy-five of the largest metropolitan newspapers is undoubtedly responsible for the rapidity with which the Hall Room Boys' comedies have found popular favor. Joe Brandt, until recently Assistant Treasurer of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., and who is now associated with the National Film Corporation has taken active charge of the sale and exploitation of the Hall Room Boys' Comedies. Brandt's reputation for square dealing has influenced a great many of the state right buyers to buy these comedies without inspection.

Mr. Brandt upon being interviewed, stated that Mr. Wm. Parsons, President of the National Film Corporation was determined to make the Hall Room Boys' Comedies the best high class two-reel comedies offered the state right buyers. Mr. Parsons will not release a single comedy that is not of the standard necessary to compete with the best two-reel comedies on any of the programs of the big manufacturers.

Mr. Brandt further stated that he had made arrangements whereby the syndicate handling the H. A. MacGill cartoons—Percy and Ferdy—the characters in the Hall Room Boys' comedies will place these cartoons in the columns of every worth while newspaper in the United States.

Wharton to Have New Studio in Ithaca

A week ago Theodore Wharton set for himself a task that other producers would have approached with some reluctance, it is declared. It was the construction and equipment of a studio which was to be ready for the reception of a company inside of six weeks. Now the accomplishment is assured, and the forthcoming Wharton serial for the Pathe program, "The Crooked Dagger," starring Jack Norworth, will be started on August 18th.

The new Wharton studio will be located at Ithaca. A week ago it was a skating rink, but the producer's army of electricians and carpenters moved in overnight and today it is rapidly approaching the appearance of a fully equipped motion picture plant.

When finished the studio will be an all-steel supporting structure, twenty feet high inside. A rotary converter to supply direct current has been installed, and the lighting equipment, including the latest successful devices available, is ready for installation.

Mr. Wharton has surrounded himself with a staff of experts in photographic, mechanical and electrical lines and will personally direct and supervise the making of "The Crooked Dagger."

Novel Trend to Fairbanks' Film

THERE is very substantial evidence that Douglas Fairbanks has gone at the making of "His Majesty, the American," United Artists' Corporation's initial release, scheduled for September first, after the manner of a man who is going to "show the world" something.

The picture, which is now in the final stages, has been in the making since April. Still pictures bespeak a production of magnitude and costliness; and the many exhibitors of national reputation who have visited the Fairbanks studios while the picture was in course of production have stated without reservation that Fairbanks will have to his credit the biggest film of his career.

It is a picture that abounds in novelties and sensations. As the story opens, Fairbanks is shown in the midst of a nightmare and the variety of stunts, and the novelties in set construction and photography that are introduced in this part of the picture represent an outlay which is said to rival the total cost of a great many productions.

The action of the story begins in New York City and some remarkable fire scenes are shown in which Fairbanks does some hair-raising stunts with the ladder, the hose and the lifeline. Another feature of the New York episode of the story is a big police raid, for which a cross-section of an underworld dive was constructed.

The action of the story is then carried to the Mexican border, where Fairbanks "mixes it" freely with the bandits. Then the story jumps across the Atlantic to a mythical kingdom in Europe and Doug takes a hand at upsetting a revolution.

Big sets, many of them of unusual beauty, are employed; one alone cost in excess of $40,000. There are mob scenes, fights and a riot of action throughout the film.

The scenario for "His Majesty, the American" was prepared by Director Joseph Henaberry with the assistance of Elton Banks. Mr. Henaberry devoted eight weeks to this work and also was in charge of the direction of the production.

The feminine lead was played by Marjory Daw and the supporting cast included Frank Campeau, Albert McQuarrie, Sam Sothern, a younger brother of the famous E. H. Sothern; Lillian Langdon, Jay Dwiggins, "Bull" Montana, Will Gillis, Phil Gastrox and other notables.

The film has cost a fortune, but Mr. Fairbanks has aimed to turn out as the first release for the "Big Four" an epoch-making production that would fully justify the long runs for which the picture is being booked the country over.

First United Artists Picture to Set a Standard

Wiley Organizes Serico Co.

Serials by Big Authors to Be Produced; First Is by the Williamsons

WITH the incorporation last week of the Serico Producing Company, of which George N. Wiley, who has long been prominently identified with the industry as a producer, is named as President, it developed that the present demand of the market for the works of famous authors has extended to the serial field.

As an introduction of prominent writers to this field, the Serico Company has secured C. N. & A. M. Williamson, regarded by many as foremost among writers of stirring mystery stories. The most widely read of Williamson's novels, "A Woman in Grey," has been selected by the Serico Company as its first production.

Of added interest is the fact that the serial is to be produced, according to the officials of the new organization, with the same care and discrimination used in the presentation of the best class of special pictures. James Vincent, whose latest special production "The Spirit of Lafayette" was generally credited with having been one of the most finished offerings of the year, will direct the picture, which will be in fifteen episodes. A cast of exceptional calibre, headed by a favorite young female star, has been selected. A detailed announcement of the personnel of this cast will be made next week.

The adaptation of "A Woman in Grey," the title of which will probably be changed for the screen, has been made by Walter Richard Hall.

The actual production of the new serial will begin next week. Arrangements are now being completed for its distribution, a statement regarding which will be made in the immediate future. In discussing his new producing activities, Mr. Wiley, whom it is understood has associated with him banking and industrial interests of prominence, said:

"The actual filming of "A Woman in Grey' will follow five months of as exacting preparations as has ever been given to a screen production. It was Mr. and Mrs. Williamson's demand, and our desire, that their novel should be presented in a manner that would win the approval of the highest class of audiences.

"The most scrupulous care has, therefore been taken to insure this production measuring up to the very best standards of the screen.

Schwerin Buys "Hushed Hour" for South

Charles F. Schwerin, one of the most prominent operators in the independent field, announces that he has acquired from Henry I. Garson the Southern rights to "The Hushed Hour," starring Blanche Sweet, supported by an all-star cast, including Milton Sills, Wilfred Lucas, Rosemary Theby, Mary Anderson, Gloria Hope, Harry Northrup, Wyndham Standing, Ben Alexander, L. T. Steers, Winter Hall, Lydia Knott and Edward M. Kimball. Mr. Schwerin announces that the picture will be ready for release the first week in September.

Mr. Schwerin's territory comprises the States of Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama. Mr. Schwerin controlled practically the same territory on Mr. Garson's production of "The Unpardonable Sin." He will leave New York next week for a trip to all the important centres of this territory. An elaborate press book and other accessories are now being prepared.

Plays Important Part in "Eyes of Youth"

William Courtleigh, one of New York's most favored actors, will play the role of Paolo Salvo, the Italian impresario in Clara Kimball Young's forthcoming production "Eyes of Youth." The role of Salvo is said to be one of the best character parts to which the screen has fallen heir in several years. It was a sensation in the New York production, it is declared, and Mr. Courtleigh should afford excellent support to Miss Young in this part. "Eyes of Youth" is now being taken at the Garson Studios in Los Angeles, and should be one of the real feature sensations of the fall season. It will be the first of four big productions to be released by the Equity Pictures Corporation.

It will be remembered that Vitagraph was the pioneer among companies from this side to plant its agency in London. This occurred when Mr. Smith made a special trip for the purpose in 1905. He next made personal trips to Paris, and laid the foundation for an agency that came into being there in 1906. Ronald A. Reader was placed in charge.

The Vitagraph then conceived the idea of establishing a laboratory near Paris. He made another trip for this purpose, and in 1908, with the aid of J. Bernard French, engaged a location at the little suburb of Paris called Gennevillier. A few months later a larger plant was established at Courbevois.

August Wenz, special mechanic for Vitagraph, directed the installation of complete facilities for developing and printing films. The plant now covers eight acres of ground, and is one of the most ambitious film laboratories in Europe.

It is believed largely due to the good influence procured by Vitagraph through its employment of French workmen and craftsmen in this foreign laboratory, that the company has been able to transact business through the troublesome times that caused other American concerns to quit.

Vitagraph's plant is one of the show places around Paris. Its chief executive building was once the dwelling of a mayor of Paris. During the war the Vitagraph laboratory at Courbevois was turned over to the French Government, engendering a cordial relation between the company and the officials of the nation.

Export business for producers of America suffered almost a total lapse during the progress of the war. The cessation was so complete that Mr. Smith recalled Vitagraph's Paris representative, Mr. Reader, in 1915, and appointed him studio manager at Brooklyn. Mr. Reader returned to Europe recently, establishing new offices at Marseilles, Bordeaux, Dunkirk, Havre, Lyons, Nice, Rouen, Toulon, and other French cities, in addition to re-opening offices at several important trade centers.

In acquiring the Ruffell's system, Vitagraph has established contact with more than 800 new theatres. This market completes a distribution field that includes all the principal cities of the British Isles.

Pat Dowling Taken Ill

Pat Dowling, Director of Publicity for the Christie Comedies was taken ill in Seattle last week, and underwent an operation for appendicitis. Reports from Seattle are to the effect that the operation was very successful and that Mr. Dowling will shortly be in condition to return to Los Angeles. Mr. Dowling accompanied Fay Tincher to Seattle to be present at the Northwestern Film Pictures Convention and the screen ball.

Enlarging Theatre

One of Cincinnati's most modern movie houses, Gift's Theatre, is to be remodeled. The seating capacity in the balcony is to be greatly increased.

Meeting of Ad Club Division

Big Preparations for Session of Film Division of the Associated Ad Clubs

THE Motion Picture Division of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World will have complete accommodations, with everything provided for the comfort of the motion picture men and for the full use of all their machines and the exhibition of all their films, when the ad clubs meet for their huge convention in New Orleans, September 21-26. In contrast to the reported lack of accommodation given the film men at the San Francisco and St. Louis conventions of the ad clubs, two large rooms, one of them in the convention hall and the other adjoining that hall, on the twelfth floor of the Grunewald Hotel, have been obtained for the motion picture producers by A. Harrison, Jr., who is in charge of the motion picture work, industrial and commercial films for the New Orleans Ad Club. In addition to this, other exhibition space for public showings has been obtained, and there will be at least four projectors, with as many curtains in place, at the constant service of the visiting film men, of whom at least 200 are expected.

These accommodations will be open to all film companies affiliated with the Motion Picture Division of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, and will be provided at a nominal cost, barely sufficient to cover cost of power, etc. Industrial, commercial and advertising films only will be shown, and the Harcel Film Company, of which Mr. Harrison is president, will have on hand a complete line of films showing the southern lumber industry, from tree to ship; cotton from planting to shipside; $25,000,000 industrial canal, now being dug across New Orleans to connect Lake Pontchartrain and the Mississippi river; candy, from growing sugar cane to girl packers; industrial banking as the death of the loan shark; developed and undeveloped oil resources of the Southwest; films of the myriad fraternal organizations which have held conventions and conclaves in the Louisiana metropolis, and other scenes of industrial New Orleans at work.

Harry Levy, manager of the industrial department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was the first New York manufacturer slated to be represented at this meeting, at which something like 10,000 delegates and guests from the ad clubs are expected.

Features of Red Cross Films

Art Titles Strong Point in Pictures Soon to Be Released by Educational

UNUSUAL art titles are to be a feature of the new productions of the Bureau of Pictures of the American Red Cross, soon to be released through the exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation of America. Vice-President E. W. Hammons makes the announcement that the titles and general construction of the new releases will be unusually fine, and will mark the beginning of a new era in the production of short subject material, which is to include all Educational releases.

The new Red Cross subjects are being compiled with the idea of providing scenic pictures of deluxe quality, that will be as desirable in five years or ten years as they are today. Thousands of feet of negative are utilized to supply the necessary vim and vigor of one of these new single reels. Every foot of film that has no unusual and permanent interest is discarded, thus insuring purely scenic subjects which have the extra virtue of having been made in the most interesting period of the world's history, and at a time when all other cameramen have been excluded. In most locations the Red Cross film is the first to be made since 1914, and in numerous instances the name of the American Red Cross has been sufficient to secure permission to film subjects never before photographed.

The new plan of using art titles is intended to illustrate the high spots of each single-reel story. This will produce a better effect than a continuous succession of art titles, and will give the illustration a better opportunity to make the desired impression. The art work has been placed in the hands of an artist who is undoubtedly the best in his line in New York, and the success of the new scheme is practically based on the idea of using only the finest quality of material and workmanship—and taking elaborate pains to avoid overdoing any detail beyond the point necessary to insure the best effect.

The cutting and titling of four of the Red Cross subjects has been completed and the new prints are now being finished at the laboratory. A regular releasing schedule will be started to begin with the Fall season.

Shifts in New Orleans Exchange Personnel

New Orleans film exchanges and agencies are losing their managers and getting new ones at a rapid rate. The latest to leave is Lee Crandall, Jr., manager of the Goldwyn branch, who has resigned to return to the East. Mr. Crandall has put Goldwyn productions into a number of new Southern houses in his brief stay in New Orleans and has made multitudinous friends among the exhibitors. It is understood that he will make connections with a large eastern exchange.

Arthur Lucas, division manager for Goldwyn, will replace Mr. Crandall temporarily.

Mr. Crandall is the third of the film exchange managers to leave New Orleans in a few weeks.

Mr. Eastman was elected an honsociation for life, and a vote of thanks extended him for the hospitality displayed the visitors.

A significant statement was made in an address to the convention by Dr. Rhees, president of the University of Rochester, in which he said he some day expected to see an opera founded on the pictures-music combination.

Upon the arrival of the visiting delegation in Rochester they were immediately conveyed to the Hotel Seneca for breakfast following which they were motored to Kodak Park, and then personally conducted through the Eastman plant by George Eastman, where the process of making raw stock was observed in its entirety.

The annual meeting was held in the afternoon, at which the stringent set of resolutions against censorship, prepared by the Producer's Division and the National Board of Review, was unanimously adopted.

Following are the directors for the various divisions elected for the coming year:

"Sahara" Breaks Summer Box Office Records for Finkelstein's Minneapolis

FINKELSTEIN and Ruben, foremost among showmen of the Northwest, have further cause to congratulate themselves on their choice of Julius Johnson, formerly musical director of the New Garrick, Minneapolis, as managing director of the biggest house in their chain of theatres in the Twin Cities.

The tremendous success scored the past week by "Sahara," J. Parker Read, Jr.'s magnificant production, starring Louise Glaum and distributed by W. W. Hodkinson, is responsible for the firm's newest vote of confidence in the enterprising young manager of the New Garrick. "Sahara" which broke all Finkelstein and Ruben summer attendance records and incidentally equalled many of their biggest winter weeks' engagements, proved an instantaneous success, due undoubtedly to the big exploitation campaign Mr. Johnson had mapped out weeks in advance and which he put into operation ten days before his presentation of "Sahara."

In his campaign on the C. Gardner Sullivan production Mr. Johnson deviated somewhat from the usual Finkelstein and Ruben custom of bending all energy to the exploitation of the current production. Grasping the wonderful possibilities for window display advertising in "Sahara," the manager had lined up scores of prominent Hennepin Avenue merchants for an unprecedented window-display splurge a week in advance of the "Sahara" opening date. On one street alone three big department stores featured displays on "Sahara," Mr. Johnson, of course, seeing to it that cards telling of its presentation at the New Garrick had prominent space in all store window showings.

Nor were Mr. Johnson's window display operations confined to department stores alone. Perhaps the finest and most atractive display of the lot was the one in a thirty-foot window of the largest downtown confectionary store in Minneapolis. There the manager arranged a big desert scene, its chief ingredients being white bon-bons and chocolates. And with the same kind of sweets Mr. Johnson designed the word "Sahara" in a circle, placing a portrait of Louise Glaum in the centre and in fifteen ro more letter spaces "still" scenes from the production.

His window display activities completed, Mr. Johnson turned all available time and attention to newspaper advertising and publicity. Next to his first love, music, he finds keenest delight in arranging layouts and writing advertising copy that are distinctly different. His advertising on "Sahara" was more forceful and on a larger scale than any he has ever turned out since taking the reins at the New Garrick, it is said.

Mr. Johnson got a ream of "readers" from newspapers on "Sahara" many of them running half a column. Ever since Mr. Johnson assumed the management of the New Garrick he has made it a point to keep in close touch with his newspaper friends. Time was when the Tribune, the Journal and the Daily News fought shy of giving free notices on productions to picture advertisers. It's different now and many of his fellow exhibitors are frank enough to give Mr. Johnson credit for bringing about the change.

Another feature of the New Garrick campaign on "Sahara" was a specially devised herald which was mailed to 10,000 residents, Mr. Johnson having added 7,000 names to his regular mailing list for this special attraction.

Mr. Johnson composed a special orchestration for the production and another for the remarkable prelude he staged, consisting of a beautiful setting of Cairo, the feature on which was a skilful simulation of the Palace of the Dawn one of the most imposing and luxrious scenes in the picture.

"Joe Martin, himself"

Etelhertz Claims a Rival for Chaplin

Harry Etelhertz, manager of the Hamilton theatre of Brooklyn, N. Y., used one of the cleverest ideas in putting over a show recently that any exhibitor has yet tried. He is said to have succeeded admirably.

He had booked the two comedies, "Monkey Stuff," and "The Jazz Monkey." "Monkey Stuff" was first on his list. The problem before him was to introduce Joe Martin, the famous monkey comedian, to his people.

Mr. Etelhertz has handled much advertising outside of the motion picture field, so he brushed up one of his old stunts—the accumulative advertising idea—and worked on it. He ran a series of slides, i. e.:

"Who is the greatest comedian in the movies? Think it over and leave a note at the box office."

The notes left at the box office included about every comedian in the world, both in and out of the movies. Chaplin got the most votes.

The next day the slides began again, thus:

"Most people think Charlie Chaplin is the greatest comedian. Do you?"

"That puzzled them," said Mr. Etelhertz, and their astonishment was even the greatest at the next slide.

"We don't."

And the next.

"We think the greatest comedian in the movies is Joe Martin."

"Did you ever see him?"

"Joe Martin will appear in a comedy written and directed by himself July 27."

These first 7 slides were all of Mr. Etelhertz's making. For the denoument he used a stock of slides obtained from the Exchange. It was the eighth and last slide and showed Joe Martin just as Joe is.

The audience roared. The idea of Joe writing and directing his own comedy when they had been led to expect some new male or female wonder of the movie world tickled them.

Mr. Etelhertz said right there: "If they laugh like that when Joe really appears in 'Monkey Stuff' it will be all right."

They did. They were all ready for him. Those slides had teased them into an expectant humor and so had several speeches. The manager had let no opportunity slip by and when the Knights of Columbus used the stage to make a little appeal for an athletic fund being raised in Brooklyn, Mr. Etelhertz had the speaker say at the end of his speech: "Do you know Joe Martin."

When Sunday came the crowd was there. They know now in Flatbush who Joe Martin is. Mr. Etelhertz played Joe Martin as big or bigger than he would a six reel feature and it went over like one.

Atmosphere for the Production "De Luxe"

Hays of St. Paul Stages Elaborate Prelude for Nazimova Feature—Musical Director Nelson an Artist

A MOST artistic presentment of the Russian actress, Nazimova, in "The Red Lantern," was given by Manager Theo. L. Hays on the occasion of the recent showing of this feature de luxe at the New Garrick theatre, St. Paul.

The lobby, through the generous use of lanterns and other characteristic decorations, was given a Chinese atmosphere of much faithfulness in compliment to the locale of the action of the picture. Suspended overhead and extending from the main doors of the lobby to a point beyond the ticket office, a false ceiling or canopy was erected. This construction, severely Chinese in design, with numerous lanterns of grotesque shape, in vari-colors, with red predominating, proved most attractive.

In the centre of the foyer, a pedestal of unique design held the conventional joss-sticks which carried an odor of Oriental incense to all parts of the auditorium.

The girl ushers and ticket sellers were garbed in Chinese dress, wore their hair in Chinese style, with floral decorations to complete the effect. In guiding the patrons to their seats they carried lanterns of typical Chinese type. The door tender and chief usher wore Mandarin coats.

The scenic prelude carried out a distinct Oriental effect. As the velvet curtains masking the picture sheet opening were drawn, a scene was disclosed representing a Chinese ceremonial hall, with a large Buddha in the background. Musicians seated upon a platform in the setting played upon typical Chinese instruments the characteristic music of the Mongolian. This music prelude, especially written for the occasion by William Warvelle Nelson, musical director of the New Garrick theatre, served as an introduction for Rita Cassillis, a danseuse, who made a novel entrance from a large cauldron, while fire and flame effects from off stage played upon the cauldron, the dancer emerging, as it were, from out of the flames.

To the accompaniment alone of the Chinese musicians, Miss Cassillis gave a typical Chinese dance, which completed the prelude.

The lighting effects of the set were especially novel and effective. The Buddha painted on the back drop of the set, through the use of a spot with a green medium, brought out most effectively the outlines of the idol, while the blinking eyes of the pagan god added mystery to the scene.

William Warvelle Nelson

Stage setting at the New Garrick during the run of "The Red Lantern"

Musically it is doubtful if "The Red Lantern" received a more elaborate setting anywhere than was provided for this picture by William Warvelle Nelson, who not only composed the music of the prelude, but composed as well short selections for other parts of the picture in order to cement the various numbers of the setting.

To make faithful the representation of the Chinese orchestra, special instruments were manufactured, and the effect secured was very realistic, especially as the instruments were actual reproductions of those shown on the screen.

For the incidental or interpretative music, Mr. Nelson composed a "fate" theme, which was used whenever reference was made on the screen to the heroine's questionable parentage. Owing to the variety and extent of publications in his library, particularly of Chinese and Japanese creations, Mr. Nelson found it possible to confine his setting almost entirely to Oriental selections. Even the scenes of dramatic emotion were successfully fitted with characteristic Chinese airs.

The three principal themes used in the setting were a "fate" theme, a "love" theme; and a theme for "Sam Wang."

The general effect secured was dramatic and greatly intensified the action of the picture without detracting in the least by its prominence.

Director Nelson, to whom much of the artistic success of the New Garrick's presentation of "The Red Lantern" is responsible, is a musician of exceptional ability and experience, whose unusual talents have been instrumental in placing the New Garrick musically in the lead among the theatres of the Northwest. As solo violinist, orchestral director, band leader and composer, Mr. Nelson has earned a well deserved prestige. His schooling in music embraced the study of violin with Leopold Kramer of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and of harmony, composition and orchestration with Samuel A. Baldwin and Frederick Grant Gleason at Chicago. Mr. Nelson was, for a time, director of the Minnesota State Band and later directed the Municipal Park Band at Lake Harriet Park, Minneapolis. He then organized his own band, featuring "Nelson and His Band," which he developed as the leading brass organization in the West. Mr. Nelson was the musical director of the Metropolitan Opera House in St. Paul for six seasons and served as first violinist in the symphony orchestras of both Minneapolis and St. Paul. As a composer he has written many selections for both band and orchestra. He arranged the incidental music for Charlotte Walker in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" for the original production of that popular play. Mr. Nelson has brought the music of the New Garrick to the point of admitted superiority. He has not only proved a wizard in setting the music to fit the picture, but he has been most happy in his selections. His past experience in directing theatre orchestras, his symphony orchestra experience, combined with a natural appreciation of the ideal musical background for a photoplay, along with his talent for composing and arranging, equips him to provide, with a decided artistry and distinctive appropriateness, musical settings for the most complicated of photo dramas. His library, the largest in the Northwest, a collection of many years, represents an investment of over $5,000.

Your Idea and Ours

We are seeing this one of the Liberty theatre, St. Louis, for two reasons:- First, to show you a small display which so far as the border and top portion goes is mighty artistic and attractive. Second, to ask when all this list of stars played in "Martha's Vindication" which if we remember correctly, is a Triangle release of about three years ago? Now this ad certainly leads us to believe that the Liberty is advertising these people as members of the cast of "Martha's Vindication."

And too here is a case we do not believe it is policy to book a re-issue. This was a fair picture, nothing wonderful, only fair, and in showing it now, you will have the "clothes" three years behind time.

You may not know the difference but the women who come to see this picture will and you get credit for running old stuff. Now when you play a re-issue bill, if as such and tell why you have booked it. But first be sure you pick out one that is worth re-issuing. If the Liberty was a small house we should say that they evidently wanted to get a Norma Talmadge picture at a price and this was the best they could do but the Liberty is a good house, one which can afford to pay regular money for its features. This is all that is wrong about this display but it's enough. The Liberty ad was just the size you see it here, one column by four and a quarter.

HERE is another "sign board" display that so far as it goes, advertising the star and the title of the production, is very good. In its use we should consider only the question of whether the advertiser is getting the most he can for his money but putting all his eggs in one basket.

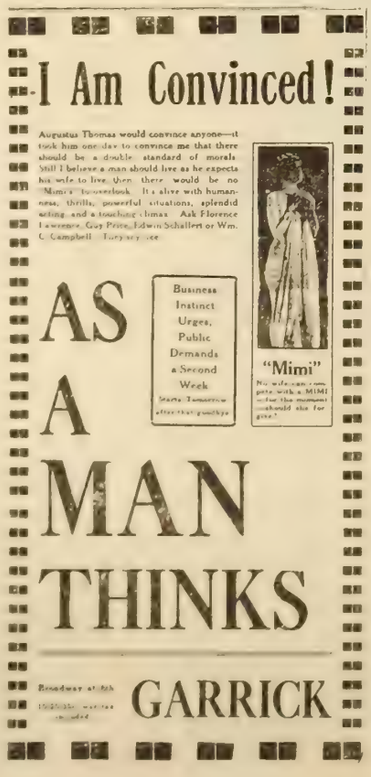
Personally we are not in favor of it, for the reason that as we have said many times before, everyone does not go to the theatre just because he wants to see the feature. In this day of good fair entertainment as a usual thing on everybody's bill, it is the little extra attraction which appeals especially that may switch the prospective patron's mind from your competitor's theatre to yours. If one can get the best of a fifty-fifty break in anything it is pretty nearly the difference between success and failure.

HERE is a three column—13 inch display which begins with a mighty good catch line for a picture of this sort and then goes to a selling talk which is in most part interest getting and a curiosity arouser.

"As A Man Thinks" will of itself give people an idea that this is a picture founded on the moral code but the selling talk fully states the lines along which the story will run. This done you may be sure that both men and women are going to wonder what the story is that is to be preached about and from curiosity will go to see it.



I Am Convinced!
Augustus Thomas would convince anyone—it took him one day to convince me that there should be a double standard of morals. Still I believe a man should live as he expects his wife to live. Then there would be no Mimis to overlook. It's alive with human-ness, thrills, powerful situations, splendid acting and a touching climax. Ask Florence Lawrence, Guy Price, Edwin Schallert or Wm. C. Campbell. Everyone.
AS A MAN THINKS
Business Instinct Urges, Public Demands a Second Week
"Mimi"
GARRICK

Even men who don't believe in a double standard, for everyone else but themselves anyway, are going to want to see what is said in defense of the double code. The title has certainly been displayed large enough to get the attention and the cut on the right is just suggestive enough to further what the curiosity of those who have been attracted to the title. We call this good from every standpoint with one exception. Just who the people are that are named as being willing to recommend this picture we do not know and will presume that most of Los Angeles' population was in the same boat.

How much money can I take in is not half so important as how much money can I keep—after the expenses are paid.

WE imagine the chap who drew this four column seven inch display intended to do something artistic but the result was a jumbled up mess which is scarcely intelligible. In the first place the Strand artist has taken the wrong type of production for this style of display. This is a melodrama which is compared to the "Whip" and when you have this sort of a story to put over, use the sort of stuff which carries a melodramatic atmosphere. To begin with you want a good descriptive cut of a scene from the production and then your display lines want to be big and black.

This display looks like it pertained to a musical comedy.

There isn't much use of criticising this display from the standpoint of what should have been done with the material used for this is not the sort of production to which hand drawn displays are entirely suited. We get the idea which the artist had in mind but he failed to put it over. The Strand is located at Scranton, Pa.

When a star begins to fade in your theatre begin searching the horizon for another.

THIS ten inch double column display of the Strand's Minneapolis, strikes us as being very good. As a rule we do not approve of advertising which does not present the mertis of a picture seriously but here is the sort of production, a light comedy, which will admit of "kidding" sales talk and in this instance it has been cleverly worded. The type selected fits in nicely with the cut and the whole display carries an atmosphere which is suggestive of the sort of stuff, "Come Out of the Kitchen" is. We might suggest that mention should have been made of the fact that this was a successful stage farce as people are beginning to appreciate the use of standard plays and books for photoplay adaptation.

We think too that the mention of Eugene O'Brien's name in this is excellent. He is a very popular leading man and has friends. This ad is worth clipping as a model along which to build your displays either for this feature or others of the lighter variety.

If your wife doesn't like the pictures you are playing, better do some thinking.

HERE is a little two column five inch display of the Madison's Detroit which announced Jack Pickford in "Bill Apperson's Boy" rather well. We can't say that the selling talk is noteworthy except that there is always sympathy for the boy who loves his mother or her memory and in telling of "Buddy's" resentment of his father's determination to marry a second time, a subject is touched upon which will interest. This sequence has little to do with the story but it does give a personal touch to the ad and will carry the idea that this is a "human" story.

If your ticket seller chews gum tell her to stick it under the cash drawer so she can say "thank you" to the people who pay you their money.

HERE is another example of pretty good type display in the ad. of the Virginia theatre, Atlantic City. The original was two columns wide and 11 inches deep.

Some people might think that the Chaplin film deserves the lion's share of the billing but the writer doesn't. Those who like Chaplin will notice the "Sunnyside" matter and that is all that is necessary on a Chaplin film.

Billing "Up Stairs and Down" for the feature helps put over the idea that it is a worth while picture. We should say this is good.

"Once upon a time" has begun many stories but history has very little place in the show business.

HERE is another display of the Palace, Wichita, Kansas, with which we don't have to find fault, for it is high-class in every way. As an example of a few words effectively used in way to make them attract the most attention, this cannot be improved upon. Two cuts of Mildred Harris have been used and both are good ones. The selling talk at the left of the upper cut is ideal. But why waste words telling you that which can be seen. You will never find a better example of good type and cut advertising than this. The display is three columns wide and nine inches deep.

WHEN a theatre has to play two such pictures or does play them, as "The Busher" and "The Crimson Gardenia" it is a pretty hard matter to say what he should do in advertising.

Personally we should say that the Strand is wrong in giving the Ray story the better end of the argument. Ray followers will be around to see his every picture and it would have been better to get the Beach story people out by giving the title of the production a larger display and playing Mr. Beach up stronger. These Beach stories are the backbone of the Goldwyn program and if an exhibitor is not cashing in on them it is pretty nearly his own fault. As far as the display itself goes we havn't any fault to find. The selling talk is good on both and the matter has been artistically set up. This was a short quarter page. The Strand is located at Providence R. I. This wasn't bargain day at the Strand but just an example of what they do up there week in and week out. The big question is where does the money come from with which to pay for film service.

However when space as big as this is used, we believe it is better to employ the use of cuts and make some attempt to gain an artistic affect.

You must remember that your advertising is bound to reflect you and your theatre and this blunt announcement would lead people to believe the "Plaza Folks" were that kind.

As far as the wording of the display goes we have no fault to find. It is mechanically were it slips unless the Plaza chose to adopt a style like this on the theory that unusual advertising is good advertising. Of course there is something in that theory, but we don't think this is an example of it.

This space also might better have been a column wider and a bit shorter in depth. This is a bad type of space to fill to good advantage.

"CHEATING CHEATERS"

THIS quarter page used by the Empress, Tusla Okla., was only one of a number sent in for our criticism. It was the best one in the lot and even at that we can't praise it to any great extent.

In the first place, the Empress is using to much matter even if it is buying big space. Next there is a sameness in layout that makes the writer wonder if the Empress ad man didn't get his training with a department store. This sort of style, using boxes and cutting a display all up is good for that sort of work where women are appealed to, and who read the heading of each box to see if there is something worn by them which they can buy "cheap," but it is not good form for amusement enterprises.

No Mr. Empress man we can tell you this is good. You have spent time and given it attention but your results are not what they should have been. Throw away all that light rule, cut down your descriptive matter by a third at least, dispense with so many superlatives many of them repetitions and you will be on the right track. Study some of the displays of S. Barrett McCormick and you will get our idea. You know we all judge everything from a standard set by some one and we know of no better teacher than the Circle, Indianapolis.

An operator who has too many excuses rarely "has" anything else.

THIS in the original was a corking good display, five columns wide by half a page in depth. It was taken from the Indianapolis Times of July 20th.

You will note how the title has been giving the lead in billing which is correct in this case with the theatre title coming in for second attention. The selling talk is well worded and in keeping with the character of the bill and the cut displacement could not be improved upon. It is too bad that every theatre can not avail itself of this kind of advertising. It would mean many dollars in profits.

We see only one thing which we think is justly entitled to criticism in this display. There is no reason why the producer's name should be so prominently displayed. Advertise your own business and let the other fellow his—at least until the time shall come when a producer's trade-mark means more in the matter of uniform quality than it ever has so far.

If you are a big toad in a little puddle don't stop to admire yourself too much or some one may step on you.

WE offer this as a sample of exchange aid which is not up to standard. Now while it is true that the person who framed this two column eight, didn't do a thing beyond adding a few words at the top and bottom, the worst thing about this display is the cut of Washburn. The face looks like one of those "kidney pill" ads that say "Don't kill yourself" or "That pain in the back" or words to that effect. For an exchange to put out a cut of this character seems about the same to use as having a suit of clothes made out of cheap shoddy material. You spend a lot of good money in the tailoring and haven't anything to show for it.

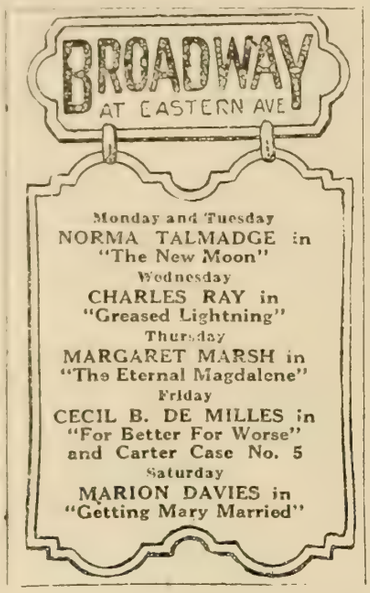
Any display is better without a cut if you are unable to get a better one than this. This display is from the Des Moines Register.

Some people don't think at all and all some people do is think.

THIS display of the Broadway was taken from the Baltimore Sun and was just the size you see it here.

We have selected it as a good example of a certain kind of advertising, where small space is utilized, where a week's bill is to be advertised in one ad and where a distinctive style is desired permanently.



We should say that this whole ad is a cut with a mortise in the center where the type is changed each week. Now there is a certain value to this sort of advertising. A patron who usually goes to a certain house has a mental picture of your ad in his mind and he can locate it quickly because he knows what he is looking for. In consequence he glances over the printed page of the newspaper hastily without any thought of finding anything but your display and is therefore not in so much danger of having his mind switched from its thought of going to your theatre as if he was inspecting all the ads and giving each individual attention.

We do not wish to infer that we especially recommend this style of display but we do think it is very good for its kind.

If you have an idea don't let it remain just an idea. Find out if it's good by trying it out.

HERE is the best ad devoted to picture exploitation we could find in a Sunday copy of a paper having its home in St. Paul and we do not call this any too good, although in the space purchased—three inches double column—very little more could have been said without crowding.

The Alice Joyce cut does not come up well and therefore does not add anything to the display.

The Princess has based its pulling power in this ad on just the name of the star and the title. It would have been better to have spent a little more money for space and told something about the story. You can't get 'em all anymore on just the announcements. Also here is another which says nothing about the balance of the program. We hate to keep harping on this subject all the time but it is for your good. Advertise your whole show not part of it.

About the time you think you have figured out just what your patrons want they will have changed their minds again.

HERE is one on "Oh Boy," a quarter page, used by the Tudor of Atlanta Ga., which just misses being very good because of too much "blackness" in the cut.

However as this isn't the fault of the Tudor ad man we will compliment him on his display.

The Tudor hasn't directly said that this picture originally was a musical vehicle which we think is pretty fair judgment. People who shop for their pictures are going to wonder what sort of photoplay a musical comedy will make, since you have cut out the music to make room for the comedy and cut out the comedy to make room for the music. So there you are.

Regardless of how good this picture may be there is no denying that every body has an idea that reduced to plot, very little remains of a musical piece.

The Tudor has side stepped this by telling its patrons that Oh, Boy, is "Sixty Minutes of Fun and Frivolity" and labeling the feature a "Merry, Rollicking comedy drama of Sunshine, Smiles and Feminine Loveliness," which is about all that could be said in the way of selling talk without getting into deep water.

The big cut has been utlized to advantage and the equal display of Creighton Hale's and June Caprice's name is very good judment. It would seem that with a bill like this some special musical program would have been prepared and if so a mention should have been made of it.

A first principle in the show business is give people what they want and make them pay for it.

FOR a straight forward announcement of Tom Moore in his latest picture, this display of the New Garrick, Minneapolis, eight inches double column no doubt answers every purpose but it is not at all artistic and much better results might have been secured if proper selling talk and some information concerning the author, cast, etc. had been added with Tom Moor's name cut down in the billing to make room for it. As you know this is from a famous Saturday Evening Post story by Basil King and Seena Owen and Aleck Francis have good parts. In fact this picture presents an unusual opportunity for exploitation. The New Garrick has failed to take advantage of these opportunities basing its appeal solely on the star and title with "Frosini," a musical attraction. The use of so heavy a rule does not add to the display although it may help to set it out on the page.

THIS is an example of advertising used by Loew's Stillman theatre, unusual. Chaplin's name and the title of the production get the eye and the cut at the left upper corner is unmistakable. With the attention attracted so far, the average person is bound to look at the smaller cuts from which he gets a good idea of the stuff going to make "Sunnyside's" story.

In the selling talk we have about the only style of picture where sentences of this sort can be used to advantage. There is only one thing we should question about this ad and that is the personal guarantee the theatres have given the production when they say: "You have'nt seen Chaplin at his best until you have seen him as the lonely overworked farm hand." We do not think much of guaranteeing that a picture is the "best ever" because that point is a matter of individual judgment and no picture ever made has pleased everyone. Here is a case where telling people that this is the best Chaplin ever made according to nearly everyone's judgment isn't true and wasn't neces-

twice and would one over the cut. Again we say that a big theatre should say something about its musical program.

However if they were all as good as this we wouldn't have to spend so much time criticizing and could devote more to praise of the samples which reach our desk.

A sure sign that an exhibitor has been in the game too long—when he tacks "don't miss it" at the end of his ad.

IF the cut in the center had printed a little better we would call this three column by seven, a mighty good display. The selling talk is from the producers press book but as it is good selling talk, we see no need of attempting to use something original which perhaps would not be as effective. Miss Stewart and the title have been given equal billing here and we think this is correct. In fact so far as the "head work" went this is as good as anything we have seen expoliting this picture. The display was taken from the Cincinnati News.

Playing sure bets is something that can't be done in the amusement world.

THIS quarter of a page of the Lyric's, Cincinnati, is one used for the exploitation of "Auction of Souls," described in an article on this subject elsewhere in this issue.

It is a lurid unartistic display with too much reading matter used for the space purchased but at the same time on a picture like this we should say that it is all right.

Miss Mardigarian's name and the title of the picture have both been lled big enough so they attract int attention and about everything ich makes this feature a business er has been mentioned. Fischer Combines Good Taste Effectiveness in

Time was when an old store was converted into a "pitcher show" and the program announced by a crudely painted sign hung out in front, reading, "movies tonight."

Later on when motion picture theatres began to have lobbies it was thought to be the latest thing in showmanship to clutter up the lobby with innumerable signs. As other improvements in the business gradually set in these signs were supplanted by artistic easels, bearing attractive announcements. Good frames with glass followed but still the idea prevailed that these easels must be arranged in a long row down the center of the lobby.

Many theatres have these same easels which bear the announcements of coming attractions but have relegated them to the side walls, leaving more space in the center of the lobby.

It was up to Manager George Fischer of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, to figure out the very latest idea for arranging attractive displays announcing his coming attractions.

With the advent of hot weather Fischer had an attractive display constructed for either side of his lobby. The display consisted in lattice work painted green and white, through which was arranged showers of imitation wisteria. Comfortable settees and box wood trees added to the effect. To the casual observer this delightful effect prevented any advertising, but to Fischer's keen eye it presented a rare opportunity for artistic displays that would be bound to attract the eye.

Consequently he had built over each settee, a miniature stage with an attractive frame and covered with glass. The background of each little stage was provided with draperies of soft colors. Figures from lithographs were cut out and pasted on cardboard and placed back of the glass. Hidden colored border lights and natural flowers were used to add to the effect. One of the accompanying photographs shows one side of the Alhambra lobby, while the other shows a close-up of a display featuring Elsie Ferguson in "The Avalanche." The displays are most artistic and have caused no end of comment.

Half page of a co-operative display used by the merchants of Shreveport, Ala., and the Saenger theatre

There is another stunt on the same order which always accomplishes results, and that is to use the newspaper want ads for the misspelled words, giving free tickets to the persons who discover the greatest number. As a rule any paper which has a good want ad page thinks more of it than it does of its editorial columns, for the reason that it brings in regular money, and in consequence is always glad of an opportunity to give the section a boost and to "pat itself on the back" concerning this page and its pulling power. Where the theatre comes in on the want ad stunt is the amount of free space they will give you in readers on their front page announcing what is to be done.

Either of these ideas are good for excellent publicity, and the cost is absolutely nothing, for you certainly do not lose what you have never had, and that is the way you can figure the free list you give out as your share of the stunt.

"Emancipation for All Worldly Cares"

So Says Fowler of the Victoria, Buffalo—His House Organ Overflows with Pithy Sayings

THE house organ has been developed to an unusually high degree of success by many big houses throughout the country, and one of them is the Victoria theatre, one of Buffalo's neighborhood screen palaces, which under the management of Bruce Fowler has become a real family institution. Manager Fowler calls his house program Victoria Views, and it is published semi-monthly. It is a twelve-page sheet in which the attractions for the two weeks are attractively set forth and illustrated with scenes of the play or cuts of the star. Mr. Fowler writes the copy for the amusement section himself, and some delightfully original and refreshing word pictures are contained in the booklet each issue.

In a recent edition we find some of these pithy sayings as follows:

"Tuck away your newspaper and come join the throng who are seeking salve for spirits wounded by a day of hard work, in the home of better film plays."

"Don't desecrate Sunday with meanness. Troubles skip when the movies begin to skim before you."

"Emancipation for all worldly cares—the Victoria creed."

"When you have the 'I want-something-I-don't-know-what' feeling you need brain refreshment at the Victoria."

"Monday is a sort of a blue day. We promise to take the grumpy element away. We'll substitute So and So (star's name) for sunshine."

"As a machine needs oil, you need entertainment to make the organisms of the think works run right, and here is royal entertainment."

"Don't let the rust accumulate around the house on your rest day! Lack of pleasure makes mother and dad dull folks."

And so on through a long list of optimistic observations.

Victoria Views is not only popular with Victoria patrons, but it is generously patronized by a long list of neighborhood and downtown business houses, who find it an excellent medium of reaching the home folks with their wares. Thus we find the house organ not only a self-supporting proposition, but one in which a profit reverts to the management.

Manager Fowler advertises in the newspapers, of course, but he places just as much faith in his house organ as a publicity medium as he does in the press. This is perhaps justified in a neighborhood such as the Victoria caters to. Victoria Views goes to everyone for miles around the theatre and to many patrons in all parts of the city who like the Victoria way of doing things, and who come long distances in their automobiles or on the street cars to see how Mr. Fowler is presenting his program.

In the lobby of the theatre is a striking frame with an insert calling attention to the Victoria "Herald of Happiness" and inviting patrons to hand in their names at the box-office so that they may be put on the mailing list. In the illustration showing this program is also seen two attractive Victoria panels in which the cut-out and hand painted idea is well worked out. The head of the star is taken from a one-sheet, pasted on a piece of beaver board, and the artist paints an attractive sign around it.

Mr. Fowler says that he is deluged with requests for Victoria Views several days in advance of each publication, and each month he increases his order. The circulation is now away up in the thousands and going strong.

The Victoria, Buffalo, believes in making its lobby artistic

A Promotion Campaign Which Hit Home with a Loud Bang

SHOWMANSHIP that turns exploitation into gilt-edged security is the contribution of A. Kramer, manager of the Yale theatre, Cleveland, to the "Progressive Order of Live Wire Exhibitors all over America."

Kramer's medium of preferment was remarkably inexpensive and at the same time effectual. But let him tell it—how he made, "Daddy Long Legs," a byword on St. Clair-av on which thoroughfare his theatre stands and from which section of Cleveland he draws his patrons:

"The average method seems to be to use one card to a block," said Kramer. My method was not to skip a single store. Thus a person walking by a row of eight stores instead of being met by my card only once, was confronted with it eight times. This repetition very naturally lent considerable emphasis to the card and in many places led to is being noticed whereas the other way, it would have passed without attracting attention.

"Furthermore I was sure of getting careful attention for my sign from every class of men, women and children. Supposing I had only used one sign to every nine or ten stores. In one block my sign may have been in a hardware store. Most passersby would have given it a casual glance but the only ones to notice it carefully would have been the particular class who are in the habit of stopping to look in hardware store windows. This, to a large extent, is limited to the mechanic class.

"By my method, signs were in candy stores where children would see them, dry-goods stores where women would see them, and in short, every sort of a store that handled every sort of merchandise."

But the window card feature was only a part of Kramer's exploitation campaign. Probably the most striking element in his success is that he called upon the trade-mark of his theatre to become a box office asset. He put on his trade mark that he had conscientiously worked to uphold on a high basis of good attractions, to draw large crowds for him.

The trademark of the Yale theatre is a penant with the word Yale on it. This word is painted in white letters on a blue back ground. It is painted in conspicuous places about the front and lobby of the theatre. It is a part of every newspaper ad and was printed on all posters.

"The use of a distinguishing mark of this sort is highly advantageous," says Kramer. "It serves to fix the location of the theatre in people's minds and makes them immediately connect up the theatre and the advertisements. Besides it often attracts attention in cases where the ordinary use of type would fail.

"Besides five hundred window cards, I used one thousand vest-pocket editions of my weeks' program. These served the double purpose of heralding the coming of the picture and gave my various programs at the same time. Their small size was a decided asset as it lessens the possibility of looking at a circular and throwing it away.

That Kramer scored a success is shown by his box office record. That he aroused interest in terms greater than during any previous exploitation of an attraction is shown by the fact that Kramer has promised more than a score of patrons to return "Daddy Long Legs," for a longer showing at the earliest opportunity.

A Plea for Under Advertising as a Confidence Builder

THE show business has always been one where the superlative was used at every opportunity and in consequence most people have come to look at a theatre advertisement, with his mind made up to discount the claims made for the attraction by about 100 per cent. This department has always believed this practise is a bad business policy, so it is with pleasure that we publish an interview by one of our correspondents, with Manager William Ainsworth of the Orpheum Theatre, Fond Du Lac, Wis., which treats this subject.

"I would like to spend more time on my advertising copy than I do," declared Manager Ainsworth. "I find it a fascinating study and discover that the more time I devote to it the better results I get.

"I believe in conservative advertising. By that I mean that I make it a practice to under-advertise a picture rathen than over-advertise it. I read Motion Picture News and find a lot of good value in its Exhibitors Service Bureau. I usually make two trips to Milwaukee each week for the purpose of seeing the pictures I am to put on and get an idea of their worth. I must first be 'shown' myself. I like to have surprises for my patrons—like to furnish them a bit more than they have been led to expect rather than a little less. To illustrate, I recently enlarged my orchestra by the addition of a saxaphone. Did I advertise it or let it get into the 'readers?' Not a bit of it. I let my audience make the discovery, and you would be surprised how many came to me and mentioned it.

"When I am asked over the phone about my pictures, as I am frequently, I make it a point to answer in a way that leaves the inquirer expecting a little less than he will find. In this way I win the confidence of my patrons and when I tell them I have a picture of exceptional value they are with me up to 100 per cent.

"I am firmly convinced that newspaper advertising is the best form of publicity. I buy large space and buy good position, and having bought the space I am careful not to crowd it with matter.

"Take my Anniversary Week advertising for example. We had Anita Stewart in 'A Midnight Romance' for the first three days. My first announcement consisted of 45-inch display—a three column fifteen. It permitted the use of a large illustration and left plenty of white space. I picked a cut of a young couple in bathing suits,—there is always interest in youth,—there is always attraction in the girl in the bathing suit.

"I aim to have a catch line—something that will get the attention. 'A lighted match showed that she was very pretty.' There was a hint of mystery. It was a signal to 'read on.'

"On the second day we dropped to a 20-inch display—three column twenty, on the third to a four column three and a half, a two section advertisement, one being devoted to the last appearance of 'A Midnight Romance,' the other to the coming attraction, Charlie Chaplin in 'Sunnyside.'

"On Thursday we followed with a four column five on Chaplin; Friday we reduced to nine inches and Saturday we made a three section advertisement, two of the sections being devoted to our Sunday and Monday programs.

"I not only use good sized copy but good positions on the best local pages. My experience has taught me that this is a profitable investment.

"Being unable to get billboard space for my Anniversary Week advertising, I resorted to heralds, blue on white—something different. These were distributed Sunday morning.

"In selecting my illustrations I try to have them carry a clear idea of what the picture is to be. If I have a Bill Hart picture, then Bill's face goes into the ad with as much of his cowboy regalia as I can get. That tells the story to young America as nothing else could and young America rushes to see Bill Hart every time.

"As I have stated, I like the advertising end of the work. I am going to give it more attention in the future and I am counting on a lot of help from Motion Picture News."

For Those Who Say "It Can't Be Done"

FOR those who say: "It is hard to make an effective display on a western picture," we offer the accompanying cut taken from a photograph of an effective display on "The Riders of Vengeance," a Harry Carey picture which contradicts this theory.

Here is a display which anyone may copy if he will only spend a few cents for three sheets from which to cut the Carey heads and figure and hire a scene painter for about fifteen minutes.

Then some may argue: "What's the use?" Well, there is this use. Doing things a little better than your competitor does them is getting a little more business, and a little more business constitutes what old Ben Franklin said when he sent forth his famous "A penny saved is a penny earned" epigram quite some few years ago. It may be the difference between a profit and a loss. Do lobby displays pay? Ask those who use them. If they didn't pay, would these people keep on spending the time and money they do? We think not.

The Superba is located at Los Angeles, Cal., where film exploitation as well as film production is an art which is given real attention.

Big Mailing List Utilized for Latest Kennedy Feature

PLAYING Madge Kennedy in "Through the Wrong Door," at the Broadway-Strand Theatre, Detroit, Mich., placed 5,000 hangers on door knobs in the lower section of the city. The wording on the hangers, reading "Is This the Wrong Door?" attracted considerable attention. Three thousand personal letters, mailed under first-class postage, were addressed to a mailing list of stenographers and office workers. This list was chosen because it represents the pleasure loving, theatre-going class.

Special signs on all doors in the Broadway-Strand lobby, previous to and during the engagement, called attention to doors, wrong and right, and going through them.

The co-operation of one store in giving a window dispay of women's sport suits and evening gowns was secured. This plan, however, did not receive the support of most of Detroit's leading merchants. They seemed to fear establishing a precedent that would prove annoying to them.

Minneapolis Newspapers Increase "Movie" Space

IN recognition of the popular place the moving pictures have taken before the American public, especially since the advent of prohibition and responding to an appeal from exhibitors, the three daily newspapers of Minneapolis have agreed to make a radical departure from their conservative policies in furtherance of the screen.

Heretofore, they have devoted only one page to moving pictures in their Sunday issues, but the exhibitors of Minneapolis have been informed that in the future these newspapers will carry each week regular four-page sections given over to the cinema, advertising or no advertising.

Already the Minneapolis Tribune has started its four-page Sunday photoplay sections, and the Journal and Daily News have announced they would do the same early in the fall.

The news of this departure in policy is taken as a victory for moving pictures in Minneapolis.

"We have come to the realization that motion pictures are to-day among the most popular forms of entertainment and diversion for the people, and as such they are entitled to a large place in the newspapers," said Harry Wakefield, managing editor of the Minneapolis Tribune.

The Lobby Display as a Real Hot Weather Antidote

"Seeing Is Believing" in Portland, So Raleigh Carries the Ice in the Front Door

FROM time to time this department hears of the use of large quantities of ice to cool a theatre. To do this successfully, it is of course necessary to have a considerable "refrigerating plant," located in your house, and while this may be an expense which will run into rather large figures it is also one which pays big profits on the investment when the extra admissions gained from the fact that the house is cool and comfortable are considered.

Out at Portland, Oregon, Manager Raleigh of the Columbia and Liberty theatres, the two Jensen-Von Herberg houses, is using huge quantities of ice to advantage.

These two houses are famous among theatre-goers for their coolness and good ventilation. Even when the thermometer jumps to a 100 in the shade and it does that in Portland, Mr. Raleigh's theatres are comfortable.

All this however is not accomplished without effort and the "refrigerating plants" are said to need considerable attention. In fact, Mr. Raleigh himself compares them to a woman: "Because," as he says, "they have so many vagaries and I have to spend so much time and patience with them."

We are not informed concerning the "workings" of Mr. Raleigh's plants and do not know how expensive or extensive they are but we are sure that they accomplish a much to be desired end, the cooling of a theatre below the temperature of the street. All the time and attention that may be required in keeping them in running order, which if we are to judge from Mr. Raleigh's own comparison, is considerable, will certainly be well paid for, by the result.

Many theatres have tried the plan of piling ice on the stage and in other parts of the theatre with an electric fan blowing toward the audience from behind the piles, and while this method may have a good psychological effect, we have heard very few claims that the temperature of the house was lowered to any great extent. Mr. Raleigh does lower the mercury in this house and also manages to direct a current of cool fresh air into the foyer, where it greets the patron like a cool breeze direct from Labrador.

The accompanying illustration shows two hundred pound cakes of ice being carried into the Liberty theatre, for use in the "refrigerating plant." Wise Mr. Raleigh doesn't have the iceman drive to the stage entrance with his evaporative load. Not he. He takes the ice in from the main street where everyone passing can see the act. Seeing is believing even out in the West where it is said that a man's word is as good as his bond until it is proven otherwise.

Feeding the Columbia's "refrigerating plant." These cakes weigh two hundred pounds each. "How would you like to be the ice man?"

Orphans See the Show and Then Have Lunch

THE happiest exhibitor in the world was J. F. Dittman recently when he stood in the lobby of his Strand theatre, Freeport, Ill., and heard the baby voices of more than one hundred children from St. Vincent's Orphanage, cheering him, their chubby fists tightly closed around ice cream spoons.

Dittman had enlisted the co-operation of W. G. Angelos, proprietor of a cafe next door to the theatre, in an effort to have the orphans as guests at a showing of "Daddy Long Legs." Angelos was delighted to serve the children refreshments during the intermission.

The manner in which the children appreciated "Daddy Long Legs," "the love story of an orphan," provided interesting material for Freeport newspapers.

Metropolitan Booksellers Co-operate in Exploiting Picture and Novel

CO-OPERATION between the great book selling organizations and the theatre is being successfully applied with Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners," which is the bill at the New York Strand this week.

All last week, Grosset and Dunlap, the publishers of this novel, linked up the premiere showing with many of the metropolitan book stores and the book departments of the big department stores, with window displays arranged at Wanamaker's, Stern's, Macy's and the Womath chain of book stores and the leading chain of drug stores with book counters in Greater New York. Grosset and Dunlap as an organization took one thousand one-sheets of "The Westerners," prepared special printed streamers linking up the book with its current presentation at the Strand and likewise made use of one thousand sets each of the eight by ten and eleven by fourteen lobby displays on this production.

The one-sheet served as the central piece for each and every display and in no cases did the managers of book stores fail to establish the identity of the book as the picture now beginning its presentation at the Strand.

The metropolitan department stores being tremendous users of newspaper advertising space, granted the heads of book departments space in their daily and Sunday, and the seven million population in the New York city municipal sphere was invited to "Buy 'The Westerners,' Now and Then Hurry to See it as a Great Motion Picture at the Strand Theatre."

This campaign in exact duplicate is to be carried out in every city and town of more than 5,000 population in the United States.

With a Population of 800, Omark, Wash., Played This One Three Days

IT may be that "The Heart of Humanity" is history so far as the houses located in cities are concerned, but nevertheless the fact remains that out in the "tanks," and incidentally where the real profit on most pictures comes from, this Dorothy Phillips production is still playing to the same capacity business that characterized its showings in the larger towns.

From far off Omark, Wash., a town of 800 people, comes a story vouched for by the manager of the one and only theatre in the town, R. E. Culp of the "Red Apple," that this production played three days to S. R. O. business. Previous to this two days had been the limit on any feature, with most pictures having hard work to hold their own for a one day engagement.

Just what Mr. Culp did to lengthen his run on "The Heart of Humanity," or whether the production just naturally attracted people, we do not know, but one thing we do know: There is many a city of fifty thousand where the downtown houses have hard work making 'em stand up for three days, and when a town of eight hundred inhabitants can do it, something extraordinary has made the feat possible.

We are showing a cut of the "Red Apple" theatre, and while there doesn't seem to be any great rush at the box-office at the time the photograph was taken, that proves nothing. In a small town the evening shows do all the business, many small town managers not bothering to run matinees. It is a nice little house at that, and looks like it was managed by a real showman. Anyway, when they play three days it is fair to assume that the "show shop" doesn't run itself.

Window display in Jacksonville, Fla., used by the New Casino to exploit "The Red Lantern"

Inexpensive Lobby Display and a Tie-Up with a Department Store Wins for the New Casino

THERE should be an inspiration for every exhibitor to "do things" in the accompaning reproductions of photographs showing the result of the combined efforts of the New Casino theatre, Jacksonville, Florida, and Furchgott's Department Store of the same city, in co-operative advertising accomplished on "The Red Lantern," recently shown at the Casino.

The larger illustration is from the thirty foot window which the department store gave over to the use of the "Red Lantern" advertising and articles from their stock, like kimonos, Chinese silks etc.

The larger picture of Nazimova is one of the five foot portraits furnished by the producers of the feature and the smaller ones are from scenes in the production. The display was arranged by Decorator McGriff of the Furchgotts' store staff.

Now there is no question but that advertising of this sort is highly effective and can be accomplished with comparatively little expense. You will find that any progressive store is not only willing to lend you this kind of aid but anxious to do so.

The smaller cut is from a photograph taken of the exterior of the New Casino during the engagement of the feature.

You will note that what appears to be an elaborate display is really not so complicated. Over the box office is suspended a huge Chinese umbrella. These articles are neither expensive or hard to find. The Chinese characters are painted on card board or probably mount board. What these characters mean we do not know or if they mean anything but if one wishes to go in for realism, it would be easy to get your Chinese laundryman to "write" in Chinese something you think would be appropriate.

Something which does not show up in the photograph and which was very effective in this display was the use of white cherry blossoms liberally twined about the umbrella and extending in festoons down over the character cards, and about the lobby display frames.

The usual "Red Lantern" paper was used which with the Chinese lanterns hung about the lobby practically completes the job.

However the girl ushers were attired in Chinese costumes "did" their hair in Mongolian fashion, and an effort was made to carry the whole idea of Orientalism to the interior of the theatre.

The result of this extra effort to put the Nazimova feature over combined with good advertising in the newspapers and with liberal use of lithographs brought big business every day of the engagement. The Casino is more than pleased with the business done and the department store is of the opinion that it profited by the window display to considerable extent to say nothing of the publicity both received and which can not be measured in immediate dollars and cents.

Going "Fifty-fifty" with the Exhibitor

This page is what may be called "fifty-fifty." The theatres buy a half a page of space in the Macon News and the newspaper delivers another half page of reading matter.

This seems to us to be a fair proposition. Everybody gains something and the readers of the News know just where to look for the current week's picture announcements.

If your newspapers kick about giving you any reading matter and claim your asking for it isn't justified by the amount of interest there is in "movie events" cut this page out and take it to the editors as an example of the aid other newspapers are giving the exhibitors who live in THEIR town.

Jewish Newspaper Exploits Chaplin Because Chaplin Exploits Newspaper

A distinct novelty was recently accomplished in co-operative advertising, when the Jewish Daily Forward, a Jewish newspaper of Chicago, discovered during the runs of "Sunnyside" that a copy of the paper was used in a scene of this latest Chaplin subject.

The Forward immediately made a reproduction of the scene and printed thousands of cards with the cut appearing on one side and "In Reel Life as in Real Life, the Forward, a Jewish newspaper, takes part in Charlie Chaplin's latest hit, 'Sunnyside.'" Of course it is the Jewish newspaper, the Forward, on the other.

This advertising of the Forward aroused considerable interest in the Jewish sections of the city and was productive of much added business to the theatres which were using the Chaplin subject.

The photographic side of the card is reproduced herewith.

Novel Window Display on "When Doctor's Disagree"

The manager of the Majestic theatre, Detroit, Mich., showing Mabel Normand in "When Doctors Disagree," secured a special window display with the J. F. Hartz Company. An operating table and hospital equipment were placed in the window, together with advertising that included mention of the local doctors and called attention to the roaring comedy featuring Mabel Normand. Pictures of Miss Normand also were displayed in this window.

Farrar Subject Used for Extra Exploitation at Detroit

AT the Washington theatre, Detroit, Mich., the manager, showing Geraldine Farrar in "The Stronger Vow," sent 3,000 invitations, mailed under first-class postage, without advertising on the envelope, to a selected mailing list of Detroit's "best" people, those most likely to be interested in Farrar as an operatic star. Grinnell Brothers, the largest and best known music store in the city, gave a window display of Farrar records. The exchange furnished them with a framed oil painting of Miss Farrar and many stills and protographs from the production. Also, advertising cards that tied Farrar records with "The Stronger Vow" were placed in every Victor agency in the city.

Grauman's "Bathing Girls" in action. It is reported for once male patrons insisted on front seats in a picture house and all were very much awake

The Exploitation Stunt of the Week Grauman's Girls Outrival Sennett

WHAT proved to be the most successful feature to prevent falling off of business caused by warm weather, was that of a "1920 Bathing Girls Revue" staged by Sid Grauman during the week "The Daughter of the Wolf," starring Lila Lee was the feature of the bill.

The revue lasted twenty minutes, the number being a melange of instrumental music, bits of song and dancing in which twenty-four girls handsomely costumed in beach attire, represented the different motion picture studios of Los Angeles. In addition to the bathing girls, there were ten children ranging from two to four years of age, all in bathing costumes, in the act. Announcements were made by a gigantic man who personified the life saver.

The act as it opened showed a film of the ocean breakers with the orchestral traps suggesting the roar of the sea and the wide expanse of sand meeting the water line. As the velvet curtain parted and disclosed this scene, the stage lights gradually brightened and the little children, with a few of the girls, could be seen playing with pails and shovels in the sand. To the left loomed up a great light-house.

Then the scene changed. The screen went up and the spectator beheld a fashionable bathing pavilion which had all the earmarks of such watering places as Newport, Palm Beach or Coronado. Clustered in several groups, on the veranda, the steps or the sands, lay the beautiful bathing girls. The big life saver, megaphone in hand, stood on the steps of the pavilion. Then the stage darkened, the center door of the pavilion was lighted and the first of the bathing girls stood outlined in the doorway. She was then announced as Miss Louise Fortune of the Lasky Studios, whereupon she proceeded to turn to modiste's model, turning and pivoting gracefully to show off the various atractive features of her bathing raiment. Then she rushed to the center of the stage and briskly pirouetted and danced several brilliant steps.

Each succeeding girl did likewise as her name and studio represented was announced, by the life saver. However, a three year old little girl, followed by a four year old boy were the outstanding hits of the Revue. Little Jack Coogan, the four year old child who in his bathing suit "shimmied," gave a burlesque dance. On the strength of his performance at Grauman's little Jack was signed to a year's contract by Charlie Chaplin.

As a finale, all the girls formed a circle and danced through several attractive formations to the tune of "By the Sea."

This is without doubt the most expensive semi-vaudeville cast given at the Grauman theatre since its opening. Dispite the extremely warm weather the house played to capacity three shows daily and it is said that approximately one thousand people were turned away from the mid-afternoon matinee and 1500 from the night performances each day.

"A Straight from the Shoulder" Advocate of "Second Runs"

Solving the exhibitor's most elusive problem—"What About Second Runs?"—with straight-from-the-shoulder answers backed by box office successes, Herbert L. Weil, manager of four theatres at Port Huron, Mich., has seen odd experiences recently which should be not only interesting but highly instructive to every live-wire exhibitor.

"How long after its first showing should an attraction be repeated?"

"What about the price of admission for the repeated attraction?"

"What determines a logical reason for giving an attraction a second run?"

"What circumstances surrounding the advisability of a second run must the exhibitor contend with?"

These are a few of the questions which Mr. Weil was asked. He chose to reply to an unasked question:

"I'm a full-fledged advocate of the second run attraction at present," he said, "although it was formerly a steadfast policy on my part to present only first run pictures at the American Family, Majestic and Maxine theatres. But one day, my ideas on this subject were blown skyhigh. I suddenly realized that the second run was the money-maker for the exhibitor. I found out that my successes with 'Tarzan of the Apes,' 'The Romance of Tarzan,' and 'Virtuous Wives,' demanded that I cancel all program pictures and make the American essentially a second run house. I have since never had the slightest reason to regret this change of policy.

Asked what guided him in repeating a picture, Mr. Weil replied:

"Well, if I am crowding my theatre, any one of the three, with a first run attraction, I have good reason for wanting to run it again. I go by the exact opposite rule of some exhibitors who think small crowds justify repeats. They do, under some circumstances but not under normal conditions.

"For instance, during a recent week's run of an attraction, a carnival was staged in Port Huron that drew from me to such an extent that I shall repeat that week's entire program very soon. Blizzards, and weather conditions such as we experience in Michigan may upset the best dope.

"But if the picture goes over big on its first run, that is the ideal picture to repeat. And how much time do I think should elapse before an attempt is made to repeat a picture. I think six weeks should be the limit. The repeat has its greatest value when the picture is still fresh in the minds of the exhibitor. By all means an exhibitor should not announce during the first showing of a picture that it will be repeated.

"What about prices?" he was asked.

"In regard to the price scale," he replied; "bring the repeat back at reduced prices and draw right from the clientelle you failed to get before, the many who did not feel that they could afford to pay the admission price demanded on the first showing even though they were eager to see the picture.

"There is a very large element of managerial judgment to be used in solving repeat problems as to the length of the run to be allotted the repeat. If the first showing is for four days, make the repeat for two days. To make the repeat just half the length of the first showing of the attraction is a pretty safe rule to follow."

How New York Stages the Show.

It may truly be said that the current week's bills at the three big Broadway picture palaces, the Rialto, Strand and Rivoli, "circle the earth."

The locale in which the plots are laid begin in far off Turkey, land of intrigue and harems, with a glimpse of gay Paris of before the war, with England and English landscapes and English gardens delightfully viewed in your journey, and ends in the great West of our own United States, there to show you the beauties of mountains and valleys, of which no other country may boast.

Do we fully realize what an advantage the motion picture with its Seven League Boots is to us? As an example, view in your mind's eye what millions of people have seen of the actual scenes of the great war. In the time of the Rebellion no amount of money wou'd have been too great to have paid for that which, from 1914 to 1919, American people, at evening's entertainment.

Next week's offerings at the above mentioned theatres are:

The Rivoli—Charles Ray in "Bill Henry."

The Strand—An all-star cast in "Choosing a Wife."

The Rialto—Charles Ray in "Bill Henry."

Rivoli Theatre

THERE is an artistry about the Rivoli theatre which makes itself felt. Sometimes that artistry is an indefinite something which defies exact definition, but this week it can be truly said to be finding expression in the music as rendered by the orchestra under the direction of Hugo Reisenfeld not only in the overture, but in the playing for the various numbers which form the program. It is this artistry which lifts the program given at this theatre from the realm of motion pictures and places it in a class by itself. This is demonstrated by the fact that night after night one may hear expressions of positive awe at the heights to which this theatre has been able to raise the plane of the photoplay.

The Rivoli's overture for the current week is from the opera "Tosca," composed by Puccini, and founded on the famous play by Victorien Sardou entitled "La Tosca." The scene of this opera is laid in Rome and is extremely tragic in its plot, involving the murder of "Cavaradossi," a revolutionist, whose sweetheart, "Tosca," had killed the tyrant "Scarpia." The music of this composition is therefore naturally tragic and passionate in the highest degree and lends very little opportunity for lyric song. However, such opportunity as has been presented is utilized to the utmost without halting the action of the play, and these portions are rendered with the more dramatic passages by the Rivoli orchestra, serving to lighten the otherwise rather sombre harmony of the composition.

In the rendition of this number no special stage setting is used nor yet special lights, the orchestra playing, flooded in natural colors, with the house dark.

The usual Bruce scenic is this week eliminated from the bill, owing no doubt to the extra length of the feature offering, and therefore the overture is succeeded directly by the Pictorial.

This number begins with Kinograms views of the British Army leaving Germany, with much that is of historic interest being shown, to be followed by a strip from International having to do with recent baby shows at Boston, Maine and Los Angeles, Cal. It is noteworthy that these kidlets drew forth many enthusiastic "Ohs!" from the feminine members of the audience, of which the writer was one.

The third and fourth strips are also contributed by International, being views concerning the inhabitants of the New York Zoo and of the almost obsolete modeling from clay in Mexico, masterpieces of sculptorial art. International still continues as the creator of the next subject, some being views of the baby tanks demonstrating their war time worth at Seattle, Wash, and of the aeroplanes and hangars at Mineola wrecked by the recent tornado.

"Bits of Scenic Splendor," being we should judge by the tinting from the Bruce studios, and showing mountains, valleys, waterfalls and other beautiful portions of the great outdoors, follow the strips mentioned, to be succeeded by the "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon, which this week is entitled "The Jazz Instructors," and presents these comedians as instructors in a dancing parlor which secures the judicial enmity of a police court judge. It is in this section that the versatility of the Rivoli orchestra is fully appreciated. Jeff is the musician in the terpsichorean parlor, and as such performs on various cartoonic musical instruments, to which movements the orchestra renders effects little short of marvelous.

International again contributes to the Pictorial with views from Russia of the populace worshiping at shrines, with Pathe closing the number with more views from France showing war notables receiving decorations and military honors, and the triumphant march of British soldiers through the streets of London.

The musical selections for this number, with explanatory cues, are as follows:

Selection:

Sons of Britain (March) till (T) East is West.
Fairies Greeting till (T) the last of Mexico's Michael Angelos.
Spanish (Andante till (T) bits of scenic splendor.
At Evening till (T) baby tank shows how it knocked 'em dead.

March Slav—segue.
Andantino till (T) food is scarce.
Gopak till Paris, France.
Queen of Sheba till (T) London, England.
Tommy Atkins to finish.

Emanuel List, basso profundo, precedes the feature photoplay with a rendition of "Thine My Thoughts Are, Margarette," by Meyer Helmud, for which art director Wenger has prepared a stage setting of rare beauty. Mr. List, costumed as an artist and with easel and brush at hand, stands at the left of the stage, with a representation of an artist's studio roof and front wall to the building to which there is practical access, used as a background for the number. The stage is dimly lighted with the singer focused in an amber spot that spreads past him enough to bring the canvas background out from the gloom of a purple flood.

The feature photoplay is "The Dark Star," an adaptation of the Robert W. Chambers novel

The musical synopsis, with attendant cues, are appended:

Selection:

Chu Chin Chow to sign (segue) at once—Screening.
Japanese Sunset (to sign), repeat if necessary—segue.

27 (twice), segue.
Turbulence—segue.
Dream of the Flowers to sign till (D) lovers sit down at table together.

Rosa Legeis, soprano, sings the area from "Ernant" with an effective stage setting consisting of dark velvet curtains slightly parted, through which a sunrise effect is secured from the use of suitable light thrown upon an orange colored canvas.

The comedy number is a Christie entitled "A Cheerful Liar," and has to do with a young man who sends his father a telegram that he has been injured, in the hope of receiving financial aid with which to buy a car.

The musical numbers cued to the action follow: Seceltion.

Harry Fox Trot—Screening.
Sensation till (T) when father got the letter.
The Girl Behind the Gun till (T) he dreams of his young life.
How She Can Sing till (T) when Dorothy decided.
Boy of Mine till (T) the poor boy must go.
When You Look in the Heart of a Rose (Verse and chorus) till (D) Hospital scene.

The organ solo is "Scherzo in G Minor," played by Professor Firmin Swinnen.

The offering for next week is Charles Ray in "Bill Henry."

Strand Theatre

THE Strand Theatre takes you into the "wild and woolly" west this week, the west of a good many years ago when the Sioux Indians still roamed over the plains resenting the invasion of the Whiteface. It isn't so long since there just naturally had to be Indians in every picture or it was doomed to public condemnation. Now the Indian picture is the exception so it is fitting that when a big Broadway house books one that more than passing mention be made of the fact.

The Strand overture this week is from the opera, "I' Pagliacci," by Leoncavallo, the Italian dramatic composer, who became successful through this one great work almost in a night, although he had written many other works which failed to meet with any great popularity. It was in 1892 that "Pagliacci" who produced and since that time the composition has been an exceedingly popular one. Its masterful construction and compelling moving story, with an orchestration written with Wagnerian skill, Leoncavalla having been a student and protege of the "master," have made this historic subject a model of musical composition in which technique and genius have been admirably combined. The number is played with the house dark and the musicians flooded in natural light which fades to darkness as the number closes and the Review is screened.

The first number of the Review is from Kinogram's releases, showing the riders of California's recent rodeo in action to be followed by another strip from the same producers, concerning the discharge of the U. S. "Yeomanettes" at Washinging, D. C. International follows with views of the recent baby shows at Boston and Los Angeles to be replaced by another Kinogram offering, views of roosters brought from France and presented by the President to the State of Alabama.

The Topics of the Day, released by Pathe and compiled by the Literary Digest, composed the next bit with Kinograms following the views of the British troops leaving Germany after the signing of the peace treaty, and Pathe's release of the British Tommies marching through the streets of London in the "Victory Parade," "France Honoring Generals" of the great war closing the reel.

The third number offered is a vocal prelude, by the Strand Male Quartette (Elm City Four) rendering old melodies accompanied by the Strand orchestra.

The feature photoplay presented is a picturization of Edward Stewart White's popular novel of the West of a past generation, "The Westerners," with no player starred but with a cast of such well known artists as Roy Stewart, Robert McKim and Wilfred Lucas playing important roles. "The Westerners" is typically American as we have come to believe this far western country in the days of emigrants and Indians, really was, and it's melodramatic action bearing perhaps a hint of historic interest, keeps the attention throughout it's extra length.

Ethel Newton, the Strand soloist rendered a popular number in a fitting selection, "The Little Gray Home in the West."

The Strand Educational this week is a short subject released by Pathe, entitled "Baseball," and is another anylysis of motion film, this time showing prominent baseball players in action as they appear to the naked eye and then with their movements delayed until the speed a baseball is usually thrown becomes as slow as a feather floating through the air.

This number was played to the following with the action cues given on the right.

The comedy is "Treat 'Em Rough," purporting to be a rural story but with most of it's footage devoted to stunts of almost human ingenuity performed by "Teddy" the motion picture dog who has become a great favorite with fans, coming in for much of the footage.

The subject was played to the following selections, the changes being at the action cues indicated.

The organ solo closes the bill and is in two parts (a) being "March Triumphal," played by John Hammond, and (b) being "Concert Scherzo," played by Herbert Sisson.

Rialto Theatre

THE Rialto Theatre might be inferred to have gone in for sensational programs from its feature offering this week, but since the producers of the photoplay have seen fit to leave from this version any of the salacious incidents or dialogue for which its fictional original was famed or notorious, according to the viewpoint, there is nothing which is being shown at this Broadway palace which confirms this assumption. Miss Glynn's novel may be recommended "for family trade." Stripped of that which we have described it becomes a very mild, conventional drama with a strictly English plot, handled from English standards.

The overture at the Rialto is one which some people may listen too with more enjoyment if they do not read it's title "Der Freischutz." This is one of Webers most popular compositions, having lived in public favor since 1819 when it was first produced in Dresden. It may therefore be said that there is no hint of war in the music of this opera, although it was founded on a folk legend, concerning a magic bullet which was gained by selling one's soul to the Evil one. The music except the hymn like passes for the brasses at the beginning, is taken from the scenes of the opera, Weber being one of the first composers to do this and still build his overture in strictly musical form. It is a tuneful composition easily assimilated by the layman and forms one of the most enjoyable numbers on the Rialto program. It is played with special attention given the lightings, opening with the musicians in a green flood with a amber spot issuing from the side, to be later dissolved into blue and then alternating back again to the other color.

The Educational subject is one frankly stated as being issued by the Goodrich Rubber Company and is a trip through this great commercial plant's factory with much of it's footage devoted to the making of "blimps."

It was played to the following, cued to the action as described. The vocal offering is the aria from "L'Africaine," by Meyerbeer, sung by Martin Brefel, tenor, with the orchestra flooded in scarlet and the singer within an amber spot. The accompaniment is largely from the strings, thereby accentuating the dramatic power of the singer's voice. The Rialto Magazine opens with Pathe's scenes of the "Yeomanettes" being mustered out at Washington, D. C., with Gaumonts strip showing the new U. S. torpedo boat being launched in a Massachusett's bay, and Pathe again contributing with views of the Frontier Day" at Cheyenne, Wyo. The fourth strip is Educational's "Happy Hooligan" cartoon entitled "Turkey Hash," same being a story "Happy" tells concerning a time when he was an ambassador to Turkey and heroically enters a harem to rescue the fair maiden.

The selections to which it is run and the cues describing the changes follow.

2—Semper Fidelis (from drum solo), till Squantum, Mass.
Victory (2nd ending), till Cheyenne, Wyo.
Hunkatin (no. int.), till (T) The Indian Shimmy.
Red Skin (no. int.) (no repeat) (muted trumpet pp.), till Hooligan.
You'll Do It All Over Again, till (T) when I was ambassador.

Hindustan (no int.), till colored woman in bath.
Tents of Arabs, till (D) he sees harem women.

The fifth number is a violin solo rendered by Sascha Fidelman entitled "Romance Andalouse," by Pablo Sarasate. It was rendered with the house and orchestra in darkness with the artist covered with an amber spot.

The photoplay feature is "The Career of Katherine Bush," adapted by Kathryn Stuart from Elinor Glyn's novel of the same name and directed by Roy W. Neil. The cast is a large one, many of the players being more than well known. "The Career of Katherine Bush" is typically English presenting the problem of an English girl of the middle class in attempting to rise above the station in which she was born, and has been photographed amid scenic surroundings that help a long way in keeping the locals of the story in the spectator's mind.

The musical numbers used at the Rialto and the cues for their use are herewith appended.

Dialogue Make D. C.—Screening.
Simple Aveu D. C.—(D) Calvert argues with her suitor.
I'm A-Longin' for You—(T) Lord Algernon.

Live News from the Producers

Metro Has Drury Lane Successes

FIVE Drury Lane successes, all of them big, spectacular melodramas, have been acquired by Metro Pictures Corporation and will be produced with all-star casts.

The titles of the quintet of tremendous stage plays are "The Best of Luck," "The Hope," "Hearts Are Trumps," "The Great Millionaire," and "The Marriage of Mayfair." They were purchased by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., in London during his trip through England and the continent making a personal first-hand survey of the foreign motion picture field.

It is planned to have these London successes converted to the silent drama in colossal productions to be made by Screen Classics, Inc., at its million-dollar studios in Hollywood, Cal., and distributed by the Metro exchange system.

In every instance the Drury Lane melodramas are of the extravagant and spectacular quality of "The Whip," "The White Heather" and "Sporting Life," all of which created furores in England and America and after their stage presentations were screened.

Five Big Plays Bought for All Star Cast Productions

Of the five Drury Lane plays acquired by Metro for Screen Classics, Inc., production, "The Best of Luck" is the last of the great melodramas staged in the historic playhouse. It drew tremendous crowds to the stalls and orchestra pit, and royalty as well as persons in the humble walks of British life applauded its thrilling moments and bewildering spectacular effects.

"The Best of Luck" is a spectacular drama in three acts—with twelve scenes and two tableaux. It was written by Henry Hamilton, Arthur Collins and the late Cecil Raleigh, and produced at Drury Lane (The Theatre Royal) for the first time on Wednesday, September 27, 1916. This, of course, was in the midst of the world war.

Cecil Raleigh was the author of the four other melodramas bought by Mr. Rowland. This master of the action play with thrills saw "The Hope," "Hearts Are Trumps," "The Great Millionaire" and "The Marriage of Mayfair" achieve popularity over a period of ten or twelve years. He died after completing his collaboration on "The Best of Luck."

The five Drury Lane productions acquired by Metro comprise virtually the entire output of these big stage plays. They will be converted to the screen and produced in conjunction with the formidable list of stage successes and novels by celebrated authors that are to make up the entire production output of Screen Classics, Inc., productions de luxe under Metro's policy of "fewer and better" pictures to be inaugurated the first of September.

Sherrill Returns from West

On Eight-Week Visit to Coast Studios—Inaugurated Producing System

AFTER an absence of eight weeks William L. Sherrill, President of the Frohman Amusement Corporation returned from the West Coast Studios of that company. While in Los Angeles, Mr. Sherrill inaugurated a complete and new system of production. After acquiring all of the outstanding stock of the Poppy Comedies, the subsidiary company of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, producing the Poppy Comedies, Mr. Sherrill reorganized the entire staff installing a scenario department, at the head of which is Miss Frances E. Guihan. Miss Guihan is a free lance scenario writer having for some time been at the head of the scenario department of the West Coast Studios of Metro Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Sherrill also moved his entire plant of both the Texas Guinan Company and the Mack Swain Company from the studio which the Frohman Corporation had under lease on South Boyle Avenue to the Universal Studios at Universal City. This was occasioned largely because of the unreasonable demands of the laborers and workmen, who it appeared endeavored to call a strike at the Frohman Studios because Mr. Sherrill saw fit to discharge one of the help. Mr. Sherrill, with his usual tenacity refused to give way to what he believed were unconscionable demands, closed his plant and entered into a contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the use of their studios and staff of laborers.

While at Los Angeles, Mr. Sherrill supervised the making of two of the Texas Guinan productions, namely, "The Dead Man's Hand," written by Julian Johnson, Editor of Photoplay Magazine, and "The Sacrifice," a legend of Indian loyalty, and saw on its way the next release, "The Heart of Texas," in addition to which there was also produced under Mr. Sherrill's supervision two of the Mack Swain Comedies entitled "Ambrose Golf Career" and "The Lunatic."

Titles in "Everywoman" to Be Works of Art

For the Paramount-Artcraft screen version of "Everywoman,' directed by George H. Melford, with an all-star cast, Violet Heming playing the leading role, a new idea in a main title has been developed.

Willie Hopkins, who did the famous "Miracles in Mud" for the screen, designed this and the subtitles. The latter are in bas relief and are very beautiful, but the main title, showing Youth, Beauty and Modesty, attributes of Everywoman, holding a scroll containing the name, etc., is one of the finest examples, it is said, of the sculptor's art. It is done "in the round," to use the technical phraseology—which means that it is a complete group of statuary.

De Mille Feature with Many Noted Players

Babylon in all its ancient pagan magnificence forms the background for the appearance of a group of distinguished film players in Cecil B. DeMille's feature production, "Male and Female." Thomas Meighan, Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels, Tully Marshall, Monte Blue, Clarence Geldardt, Lucien Littlefield and T. E. Duncan are included in the cast of this episode of the story.

"Male and Female" is from the pen of Jeannie Macpherson, founded on Sir J. M. Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton." Miss Macpherson enlarged upon Barrie's use of the poetic line, "When I was a king in Babylon and you were a Christian slave," picturizing this idea in a colorful vision.

Thomas Meighan plays the role of the pagan king and Gloria Swanson is the Christian slave in the dramatization of this phrase. Gorgeous scenery and costumes form the setting for Miss Swanson's descent into the pit inhabited by eight lions, upon her refusal to abandon her religion for a life of luxury as the favorite of the king.

Two Ince Releases Are Programmed

Both releases from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the week of August 10th are Thomas H. Ince productions. The two films, it is pointed out, are typical Thomas H. Ince films with the standard of merit established by this producer, prominently evident.

Charles Ray in "Bill Henry," by Lois Zellner, and directed by Jerome Storm under Mr. Ince's supervision, is one of the attractions.

The other Thomas H. Ince production for August 10th release is "The Virtuous Thief," in which Enid Bennett is starred. This is a dramatic subject by C. Gardner Sullivan.

New United Picture Theatres Members

Additions to the membership list of United Picture theatres this week include Castor & Stambaugh, Shelby O.; Samuel Wolff, Fruitvale, Calif.; Anthony Langan, Syracuse, N. Y.; E. M. Prather, Americus Ga.; A. J. Wood, Brunswick, Ga.; A. L. Smith, Davis Okla.; and H. C. Smith, Purcell Okla.

J. A. Berst announces the appointment of A. C. Emery of the Emery Amusement Co., Providence, R. I., to United's Advisory Board, and of M. A. Matthews, of New Castle, Pa., to the same body. The Board is now composed of thirty exhibitor representatives.

Siam Depicted in New Holmes Travelogue

The wonders of a progressive Oriental City, about which little is known by the average American, are revealed in the current Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture titled, "Bangkok, the Royal City of Siam."

Bangkok is a metropolis more different from other cities than Siam itself is different from other countries. Everything is beautiful and colorful; the king is progressive; the women short-haired, and the men very live and wide awake. Many of the wonderful places of this wonderful country are here pictured by Mr. Holmes for the first time.

British Will Learn Our Methods

INSTRUCTION of British producers in American motion picture methods, developed during those years when Britishers were busy with the more important exigencies of the great war, will be a primary feature of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., studios in London. This announcement was made last night by Hugh Ford, Special Director, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The new company, he said, will organize what is to be substantially the first international school of motion picture art. Arrangements to pass on the newly developed arts and sciences of the motion pictures to Britishers who desire to enter this field were made at the request of English capitalists. Such an arrangement, according to Mr. Ford, offers the following:

1. An opportunity to discharged British soldiers to learn the latest methods in the most lucrative profession in the world.

2. An opportunity for the development of British dramatic talent that actors and actresses may make their way to international stardom without coming to America.

3. An opportunity for stimulating British playwright genius and making the playwright's market, now subject to international barriers, a single field where manifold profits may be reaped.

4. An opportunity for British producers to learn the American trade secrets for the development of their own motion picture industry without wasting time in experiments which have already been tried in the United States.

"It is America's duty to stand by Great Britain during the reconstruction period," said Mr. Ford. "It is only fair that America should teach her great Ally methods, both artistic and scientific, which she had the opportunity to develop while Britain was occupied with the war. Overseas, the motion picture industry is five years behind the times—not because of any lack of brains or initiative, but simply because of the war.

"This is an opportunity for America to pay off her debt. We want to give British producers every opportunity to regain the lost ground. Our experts and technical men, who have the subject at their finger tips, will pass on the information overseas. We hope, that within a period of months, the motion picture field overseas will have been broadened and new activities stimulated.

"Unquestionably there is a new field for material overseas. There is undeveloped dramatic talent. There are British plays and British playwrights that would have a future in the motion pictures.

"The Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., have entered upon this schooling project at the invitation of the British capitalists who backed the organization. It is England's opportunity to enter the modern motion picture field on the same high artistic plane upon which she worked before the war. It is an opportunity for American motion picture men to help cement international friendships.

Mr. Ford arrived in New York recently from the West. He is known widely as a director of spoken drama in such plays as "The Garden of Allah," and "Joseph and His Brethren," and as a director of massive screen masterpieces as "The Eternal City" and more recently, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" and "In Mizzoura."

Music Dealers in Tie-up on Picture

Thousands of music dealers throughout the country are now advertising, "Oh, You Women," the song published by Al. Piantadosi & Company, inspired by the Paramount picture, a John Emerson-Anita Loos Production, of the same title.

Arrangements have been made for large displays in the chain of stores handling these records in practically every city in the country, special posters and advertising material having been prepared in which the Paramount picture is given due credit.

Pioneers Bought for Coast

M & R Exchange Acquires Entire List and Forthcoming Ones for 3 States

THE rights to all the current and forthcoming Pioneer attractions for California, Arizona and Nevada were acquired yesterday by Charles Rosenthal Jr. for the M. & R. Exchange which has offices in both San Francisco and Los Angeles.

This deal coming so closely after the sale of the complete Pioneer list last week to Elliot and Brockell of Chicago, is looked upon as a forerunner to the early consummation of the plans to secure similiar outlets in every exchange centre for all of the Pioneer productions.

Mr. Rosenthal before leaving New York in commenting upon the transaction said in part "I spent several weeks in New York in my search for the best independent specials that I could buy. I looked at nearly every production on the market, and closed with the Pioneer for I am firmly convinced that they have by far the finest line of specials that I have ever seen.

"I was also much impressed by the spirit of alertness and co-operation which characterizes the entire Pioneer Organization. This was particularly true of the Publicity Department which after much labor has been equipped to give the fullest measure of co-operation, both in supplies and service to the exhibitor and exchangemen handling Pioneer pictures. This is a big factor to the independent exchangeman, and cannot be over estimated."

Grace Davison in "Atonement," a Pioneer production

The M. & R. Film Exchange have offices in both San Francisco and Los Angeles. Associated with Mr. Rosenthal in the management of the M. & R. Exchanges is E. B. Mayer, who is perhaps the best known exchangeman in his territory.

Mr. Mayer is the nephew of David Belasco, and has had an extensive training in the theatrical and film fields.

Black Face Comedy Pictures

Dintenfass Announces Monthly Releases of Special Two-Reel Comics

M. Dintenfass, who will produce the two-reel "Cuckoo" comedies

WITH the first four features already completed and a fifth in the making, the announcement this week by Mark M. Dintenfass of a series of monthly releases of two-reel comedies, the first of these to be issued in September, is of timely interest and importance to exhibitors.

There is more in Mr. Dintenfass' announcement than the mere statement of short comedy releases. The latest activity of this motion picture pioneer and producer of "My Four Years in Germany," is declared to be the outcome of considerable experiment and much thought on the part of Mr. Dintenfass and his technical directors on the subject of black face comedies in motion pictures.

"There is a remarkable psychology about the entertainment value of a black face comedian upon his audiences," says Mr. Dintenfass in a statement issued this week upon the plan of his forthcoming two-reel comedy releases. "On the speaking stage, following the vogue the old-time minstrel once possessed, there came an interval of several years in which the black face artist fell into desuetude. Then there sprang up suddenly the modern black face artist as instanced by Al Johnson and Frank Tinney whose success was as remarkable as it was instantaneous.

"It was through consideration of this recrudescence of the black face comedian," continues Mr. Dintenfass in his statement, "that I decided to make the experiment of black face comedy in motion pictures."

Mr. Dintenfass is featuring Bobby Burns, the well-known stage comedian in the forthcoming two reels which are being produced at the Mark M. Dintenfass studios, Jacksonville, Florida, and directed by Will Louis. The comedies will be named "Cuckoo Comedies," and are to be issued twelve each year.

Always Screen Villain

Ed Rosemon playing the heavy in the second Virginia Pearson production, "Impossible Catherine" holds a long standing championship for portraying screen villains. The characterization that brought him most fame was that of Runnion in Edgar Lewis' production of "The Barrier."

Players in Alice Brady Cast

Well-Known Names of Stage and Screen Found in Line Up in Her First Realart

SUPPORTING Alice Brady in her first Realart production, "Sinners," is a cast that includes some of the best known players on the screen.

"I believe the cast of 'Sinners' is the strongest that ever has been provided for an Alice Brady picture," says Arthur S. Kane, President of Realart Pictures Corporation. "The players, however, were chosen, not because of their fame, but because of their adaptability to their respective parts."

Miss Brady will play the role she made famous on the speaking stage, that of little "Mary Horton." The original production of "Sinners" had a long run at the Playhouse in New York a few seasons ago.

James L. Crane will be seen in the leading male part, "Bob Merrick," played in the stage version by Robert Edeson. The comedy ingenue role of "Polly Gary" is played by Lorraine Frost. Augusta Anderson, well remembered for her work with the old Biograph when that company was one of the biggest in the producing field, has been cast for the role of "Hilda West," the woman who befriends "Mary Horton."

William P. Carleton, for several years the leading man of the Castle Square Stock Company of Boston, will impersonate "Horace Worth."

For the role of "William Morgan," one of America's most capable actors has been secured. He is Frank Losee, who has a record of twenty-five years in the companies of David Belasco.

Craufurd Kent, Agnes Everett, Nora Reed, and Robert Schable are other well known players in the cast. Kenneth Webb is directing the play which was written by Owen Davis.

Complete Line of Accessories Now Ready for Annual National Week

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation anounces that a complete line of accessories is now available through its exchanges to all exhibitors who may participate in the second annual National Paramount-Artcraft Week, which begins Sunday, August 31.

In addition to the usual line of accessories on the productions which exhibitors wil show during the week, which may be procured at the exchanges at the regular prices, the corporation has appropriated $10,000 for special accessories advertising the week itself.

A special one-sheet carrying the announcement of Paramount-Artcraft Week will be furnished free of charge to all exhibitors.

A free six-sheet, of similar design, is also available. In addition to these, a special 24-sheet has been designed, embodying a novel teaser idea, which will also be given free of charge to all exhibitors who will use them.

Special trailers have already been placed with all the exchanges and are immediately available. These are to be attached to all feature films.

Two slides are also being issued, one announcing the week in advance and the other announcing that the theatre is co-operating in the drive.

The list of free accessories also includes calendar cuts in three sizes and styles, to be used in the exhibitor's newspaper advertisements, also free cuts for program cover designs.

In the sale of the regular production accessories to be used in connection with the pictures to be shown during the week, a bonus of 33 1-3 per cent. is offered. That is, if an exhibitor orders $30 worth of production accessories from the exchange, he will be given an additional $10 worth free of charge.

Wally Reed Signs New F. P.-Lasky Contract

Wallace Reid has just signed a five-year starring contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He attached his signature to the document on his return to Los Angeles from an eventful tour of the north and immediately left on a three weeks' vacation.

Six years ago Reid joined Famous Players-Lasky at a weekly salary of seventy-five dollars. In 1915 he signed his first contract for a period of two years. In 1917 he signed another two-year document. Each time he was given a handsome increase in salary. The contract he signed yesterday is on a sliding scale. The weekly renumeration today runs well into four figures. In the fifth year, under the terms of the contract, he will receive as much money as the highest paid male star in motion pictures.

"The screen history of Wallace Reid," said Milton E. Hoffman, general manager of the Lasky studio in Los Angeles, announcing the conditions of the signing, "reads like a romance. In reality it proves what application, advertising and stories will do toward making a motion picture star."

Paramount Star Has a Real Life Thrill

Ethel Clayton has just returned from the Orient with a story of having been kidnapped by Chinese bandits.

The Paramount star left the remainder of the party with which she was traveling to secure snapshots of some Chinese children at play.

Two Chinese grownups noticed the incident and one of them addressed Miss Clayton in pidgeon English, telling her she could secure some better pictures a little farther on. Not suspecting any danger, Miss Clayton accompanied the men a short distance, only to be seized and bundled into a hut. Miss Clayton screamed for help and her brother came to her rescue, but was too made a prisoner.

Miss Clayton's mother had remained on the train and when her children did not return she immediately reported the disappearances to the authorities.

Action was immediately forthcoming and before long the two bandits were locked up with the Chinese equivalent of an arrest haing been made.

It Is "Everybody's Business"

So Declares H. J. Shepard of W. H. Productions to Tom Hamlin in a "Composite" Interview

"WHAT'S 'Everybody's Business' is nobody's business," is an old saying.

But this phrase is an empty one and has been emphatically discredited.

The President of the United States said when he arrived from France that it was "Everybody's Business."

Every copy of the Saturday Evening Post has an article emphasizing that it is "Everybody's Business."

The national gathering of the Elks at Atlantic City declared that it was "Everybody's Business."

Organizations like the National Security League and American Defense League announce that it is "Everybody's Business."

And the writer, like all other readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, noticed that W. H. Productions is promoting "Everybody's Business."

Hence the interview with the Party of the First Part, H. J. Shepard of W. H. Productions. Mr. Shepard says that all the governors and also all the mayors of the principal cities have already heartily endorsed the seven-reel film production to be released by W. H. Productions.

"Every Senator and Representative in Congress has also endorsed the picture," he further declared. "And there has never been a picture produced that starts out under such favorable auspices, and so strongly fortified and firmly entrenched before it is actually released.

"'Everybody's Business' is one of the strongest and most topical titles and it most aptly describes the especially timely theme—Bolshevism.

"This picture fairly breathes Americanism and is without a speck of war scenes. It is not a preachment but it is propaganda to create better Americanism. And it is built around a simple human interest story of love and romance interspersed with thrilling melodramatic action and intensely dramatic incidents and situations."

The interviewer ventured the opinion that columns of free publicity could be easily gained if the theme was properly exploited.

"Well, that's just it," continued Mr. Shepard. "We have gone to unusual lengths and taken infinite pains to produce what I consider a press-book jammed full of valuable exploitation aids that suggests advertising and publicity ideas which will cost the exhibitor practically nothing to demonstrate.

"H. C. Witwer, the well-known writer and author of 'Base Ball the Boche,' 'Licking the Hun,' etc., etc., and well-known to magazine and newspaper readers throughout the country, has just completed the story of 'Everybody's Business,' and it will appear in the Magazine Sunday Supplement of all principal newspapers on the day the film is released.

"Furthermore, this same story will run in serial form in the newspapers of the smaller cities. And augmented by the endorsements of men of national prominence and supported by big organizations of national prestige can any exhibitor keep the public from forming a long line in front of his box office?"

It was at this moment that the interviewer declared that the exploitation possibilities had a strong appeal to him and that he was firmly convinced that it would be a great box office attraction. "But," queried the interviewer, "are you sure that the picture as a photodrama is strong enough to hold them for a lengthy run and will it satisfy the crowds generally after they see it?"

"The production as a picture can stand alone on its own feet minus the theme, the endorsements and the title," firmly declared Mr. Shepard, "and it would be pronounced a most excellent production. It has a story of real wholesome human interest. There is a neat little love element and many romantic incidents. There is comedy and pathos. There are heavy dramatic moments and mystery. This develops at times to intensely thrilling melodrama," he concluded.

And after this thorough description we left the W. H. Productions office firmly convinced that this interview would not only be "Our Business" but we would strive and make it "Everybody's Business."—Tom Hamlin.

American Cinema Expanding

Working Capital Increased and Stars Engaged; Mollie King's Second Begun

THE acquisition of one of the foremost male stars in motion pictures, a large increase of the company's working capital and the beginning of the second of the series of Mollie King specials, were among the interesting news items given out by Walter Niebuhr, president of the American Cinema Corporation, during the current week.

In discussing the development of his production plans for the coming season, Mr. Niebuhr said: "We have for some time planned to add to our list one of the strongest male stars in the business, and contemplated making four big specials a year with him on established play and fiction successes. Our first vehicle has already been purchased and we shall be ready to make a complete announcement regarding the star, the vehicle and the director during the coming week.

"The popularity of the stars of the American Cinema Corporation and the very strong demand for the King and Huff specials prompted us to increase our working capital by five times our original capitalization and we shall now begin on a comprehensive publicity campaign which will embrace every avenue of effective advertising, including a billboard campaign in New York City."

Mr. Niebuhr was not ready to divulge the releasing plans for his series of specials, stating that these plans had been carefully worked out and that the releasing channels would be announced before September first, when the Louise Huff special, "The Stormy Petrel," now being finished by Director Archainbaud would be ready for release.

Walter Niebuhr

Regarding "Greater Than Love," the first Mollie King series, Mr. Niebuhr announced that the rights to this feature had been sold some time ago to the Trojan Film Corporation.

The company's output for the next year has been completely sold in the foreign market to a prominent foreign buyer who will make his own announcements regarding these features in the near future.

Director John M. Stahl will begin work on the second Mollie King special next week. Miss King, who in private life is Mrs. Kenneth Dade Alexander, has just returned from a month's honeymoon on her husband's large plantation in Kentucky.

Houdini to Write Kellar's Biography

The oldest of the great magicians of the past who is still living is Prof. Harry Kellar, Dean of the Society of American Magicians, now residing in retirement at Los Angeles. Houdini is a particular friend of the famous conjurer and the latter has decided that the noted escape artist and star of "The Grim Game" shall write his biography.

Houdini is a well known writer as well as illusionist, and has published numerous books on magic and kindred subjects. He will begin at once adding to his large collection of data on the life of Kellar and will compile and arrange this material, adding the facts that he knows and will give to the story the continuity that will weld it into a delightful record of a most remarkable life.

Dazey's Works on Screen

After purchasing the serial story of "The Isle of Jewels" to be released by Pathe, from Chas. T. Dazey, the playwright, Arthur F. Beck further availed himself of the brain products of this author by adding him to his scenario and continuity writing department.

Four vivid scenes from the William Fox production, "Wolves of the Night," starring William Farnum

Eight Farnum Films This Season

EIGHT William Farnum productions are included in the William Fox program for the coming year. They cover a wide range of characterization, and must further accentuate Mr. Farnum's extreme versatility.

As the opening gun of the production program of William Fox for the new season, "Wolves of the Night," with William Farnum, naturally has fallen under the most critical scrutiny from all angles. That it is a fitting forerunner of the many great pictures which Mr. Fox has in preparation is demonstrated beyond question by the advance bookings. "Wolves of the Night" is scheduled for release August 10.

In producing "Wolves of the Night," the first of eight William Farnum pictures included in the Fox program, Director J. Gordon Edwards was given an entirely free hand. As a result, the picture is said to represent the peak of the art of this master of dramatic action besides bearing the hallmark of William Farnum's ability.

The verdict of exhibitors who have booked it, and of the reviewers, is one of unanimous and enthusiastic approval.

For this gratifying outcome there is a reason aside from the twin facts that [illegible] in appealing love and dramatic action and that the star is William Farnum. The additional reason is that Director Edwards accepted his instructions literally and went the limit to make "Wolves of the Night" the outstanding production it deserves to be.

The pictures in the season's Farnum group already announced by the Fox management are "Wolves of the Night" which will be released on August 10; "The Last of the Duanes," and "Wings of the Morning."

These give an indication of the standard which will be maintained. They show how all the possibilities have been scanned to get fitting roles for Mr. Farnum, while at the same time presenting an interesting and dramatic, stressful story.

Most of these Farnum productions will be adaptations of books and stage successes. "The Last of the Duanes," for instance, is another of the Zane Grey romances centering about the Texas Rangers. "Wings of the Morning" is Louis Tracy's popular novel. The others to be announced later will be equally notable contributions to the screen.

Like everyone else in the Fox organization, Mr. Farnum is throwing himself whole-heartedly into making the vast production program the thorough success such an ambitious endeavor merits.

"More than half the inspiration to an actor," he says, "lies in the variety of his roles. If he is kept working on similar characters he cannot but become stale. He gets into a rut, so that his acting becomes wooden, automatic. Called upon to take up an entirely different role, however, he must exert himself to fit the new atmosphere and portrayal—and thus is put on his mettle to give the best that is in him."

Fox productions chosen for Mr. Farnum give that essential variety. "Wolves of the Night" is a modern story of business trickery, love and danger. "The Last of the Duanes" is a frontier story. "Wings of the Morning" carries the breath of the sea with the storm and conflict of emotions.

Fox Provides Strong Vehicles for the Star

Blackton Retitles His First Feature

The first production of The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., Commodore Blackton's new organization, has again undergone a change of title. Instead of bearing the name "Moonshine and Shadow," as previously announced, it will be released as "My Boy."

World Tour Begun by Mutt and Jeff

Mutt and Jeff are on a world tour! This announcement from Fox Film Corporation carries with it a news value of significance to exhibitors the country over.

The funny animated cartoons are to be made still funnier by their creator, Captain Bud Fisher, who now is taking his brain-children around the world. According to latest private advices, they are having some very extraordinary experiences.

Captain Fisher, already in Europe, will have Mutt and Jeff visit Paris, London, and all the chief capitals of the world. In each they will travel around town, see everything that is to be seen, and do everything there is to do. In this personally conducted world tour the famous cartoonist expects to find fertile fields for his inimitable pair.

Ten Episodes of Duncan Serial Finished

"Smashing Barriers," the forthcoming William Duncan serial, is progressing rapidly under the direction of the star himself. Already ten episodes of the play of the vast open spaces have been completed and the remaining five are being made rapidly.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady wrote "Smashing Barriers" with every intention of making it the best serial ever planned.

Sunshine Comedies Are Scoring Successes

The enthusiastic favor which has been universally accorded the Fox Sunshine Comedies, in their reception by exhibitors and audiences alike, foreshadows a brilliant record for these two-reelers in the important place they are to occupy in the program of output announced by William Fox for the coming year.

In their conception the Fox Sunshine Comedies are designed to meet the universal appeal for light, breezy entertainment, as an offset to the serious drama. They have been phenomenally successful in the performance of this mission. But they have gone further. Wise exhibitors have come to recognize in these two-reel fun-makers an essential factor in their programmes. They are on record as having drawn crowded houses when serious productions failed to do so. Everywhere, it is announced, reports are received by the Exchange managers of the Fox distributing staff on the unusual business done wherever these pictures are shown, setting new box-office records for two-reelers.

Exhibitors Seek Booking on Fox Western

With the approach of the release date Aug. 24, for the William Fox star series production "Rough Riding Romance," with the popular Tom Mix in the stellar role, exhibitors all over the country are clamoring for last-minute bookings on this feature.

During the making of this picture announcements distributed by the Fox Company concerning the type of picture and the opportunities offered to the daring star to surpass his greatest successes caused live exhibitors in the larger cities to get in early on their contracts, with the result that most of the larger theatres throughout the country have been taken care of by the Fox exchange managers.

Gove with Realart

Further evidence of the fact that Realart Pictures Corporation intends to be in the very forefront of producing companies is contained in the announcement that Jay A. Gove has joined the exploitation, advertising and publicity department of that young but rapidly growing organization.

"Checkers" A Spectacular Feature

Fox Makes Lavish Production of Noted Stage Play

ON top of the announcement by William Fox of the release on August 31 of the spectacular motion picture version of Henry Blossom's great play "Checkers," comes the news that the pre-release bookings on this feature may set a new high mark for the Fox program.

This is regarded as a direct outgrowth of the now well-established Fox policy on all big features which enables the exhibitor to see the "goods" before purchase, in order that he may know exactly what he is getting for his audiences. It is already resulting in longer bookings on all the bigger William Fox productions, and in the case of "Checkers," the demand has been so unusual that it is probable additional prints above the regular quota will have to be made.

The all-star cast presenting "Checkers" is one of strength. It is one of those all-star companies for which William Fox is noted—in which there is no one world-famous, but in which all the principal players are well-known actors and actresses of wide experience and marked ability. A group of players of this type guarantee a well-balanced, artistic performance—and that is just what this all-star cast has given in "Checkers."

The exhibitor can announce the all-star cast of "Checkers" with the assurance that any praise he may bestow upon it will be warranted by their work in the picture; and he can give publicity to any of the principal players with the knowledge that they will be remembered for notable performances on both screen and stage.

Thomas J. Kerrigan, Jean Acker, Tammany Young, Ellen Cassidy, Ed Sedgwick, Bertram Marburgh, and Robert Elliott are a few of the well known names in the cast.

"Checkers" was made under the direction of Richard L. Stanton. Mr. Stanton gave heavily of his time and his talent in making this picture—anxious that it should stand as a fine example of his ability.

Mr. Fox provided the Director with every possible facility for the work. There was no stinting of money, and Fox Film Corporation announces that "Checkers" cost $320,000.

"Checkers" as a play was a great thriller; but in its stage version it never thrilled as it does on the screen.

Big scenes, which no stage in the world could accomodate, have been crowed into this production,—for example, a genuine train wreck, a sensational rescue by seaplane, a big gambling house, and vivid scenes at the race track.

Pearl White's Serial Adieu

Pathe Announces "The Black Secret," by Chambers, for Release on November 9

"THE Black Secret," the George B. Seitz serial production for the Pathe program, based on the "In Secret" stories by Robert W. Chambers, has been definitely set for release on November 9th by Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Double importance attaches to this announcement. "The Black Secret" is the last serial in which Pearl White will appear and the first work of the American novelist to be made into a motion picture serial. By coincidence, Mr. Chambers' "In Secret" stories and Miss White's autobiography, "Just Me," were published in book form at the same time by the same publishing house.

The debut of Mr. Chambers on the serial screen has caused widespread interest. Many of his most successful novels have been made as feature productions, including "The Common Law," "The Firing Line," "The Fighting Chance," "The Danger Mark," "The Girl Phillipa," "The Hidden Children," "The Younger Set" and "The Moonlit Way." These stories lent themselves readily to screen adaptation, being of a decidedly analytical turn and full of bright dialogue rather than thrilling action.

Credit for much of the success of "The Black Secret" must be given to Bertram Millhauser who wrote the scenario. Mr. Millhauser found it necessary to take many liberties with the Chambers' characters Evelyn Erith and Kay McKay, and to transform much of the conversation, by various means, into swift, thrilling serial action of plot and counterplot.

In "The Black Secret," Miss White is supported by Walter McGrail and Major Wallace McCutcheon. A novelty in Mr. Millhauser's screen adaptation is the fact that each episode provides a different villain against wits the heroine must match her own.

Market New Travelogue

An entirely new and interesting type of travelogue will make its appearance Oct. 1st, when the first of the L. J. Burrud "scenic legends" will be released by Bulls-Eye. Burrud is already on the first leg of his 20,000-mile journey through Western America.

Big Fox College Production

"The Winning Stroke" First September Release a True to Life Subject

THE announcement by William Fox of the release on September 7th of a new George Walsh picture, "The Winning Stroke" is a herald of the rapid maturing of the Fox plans, as previously announced, for making the year 1919-20 the greatest year in Fox Film Corporation's history.

"The Winning Stroke," has been pronounced, by expert and unbiased critics the greatest college picture ever produced. It centers round the acted life of one of the most famous colleges of the world—Yale. Numerous scenes of "The Winning Stroke" were filmed on the Yale campus and at the boat crew's headquarters, and the great Yale-Harvard annual 'Varsity race was filmed from various points and from start to finish.

"The Winning Stroke" is par excellence the photoplay of college atmosphere. College pranks and spirit, together with the manliness that an alma mater should inspire in its children, are put over with a double punch because Walsh, himself a college man, knows how to "get away" with the college stuff. He was once stroke oar—like Buck Simmons—in his college crew, and he has done in real life what he is here doing in film life. What more romantic! What better stunt for publicity.

Moreover, Edward Sedgwick, who wrote the story—well known as author and actor—also is a college product.

Lieutenant Locklear Changes Planes While High in Air; Part of Universal Film

TO the accompaniment of many ohs and ahs from a multitude beneath Lieut. O. L. Locklear the aviator, changed planes in midair above Hollywood, Cal., a short time ago.

The performance was the climax to a screen production "The Winged Trail," which Universal is producing. Jacques Jaccard is Locklear's director. It is also the climax to the first actual screen-aviation drama produced. Locklear is probably the most talked of and widely known aviator in America. He has done "stunts" that no other human has even attempted.

Locklear is the hero of the piece. The villain steals the beautiful maiden —Francelia Billington, who is Locklear's leading woman.

The hero has an equally trustworthy machine in which he starts in pursuit to foil the machinations of such a despicable character.

But the villain is foiled surely enough, for the hero clambers aboard the run-away plane while it is several thousand feet in the air, puts a revolver at the fugtive pilot's head and makes him return to Hollywood, as he would have done anyhow, camera or no camera.

The whole thing centers in Locklear's feat of changing planes in the air. There is no fake, no camera trickery, or "doubling for the hero" about it.

As the planes drew together for the hero's coup d'amour, Locklear climbed out on the lower plane of his ship and walked nonchalantly a thousand feet in the air, he swung himself to the top of the upper plane and strolled back and forth with that complete detachment from his surroundings which men have who stand on bridges at midnight.

His pilot edged up closer under the villain's machine from which a rope ladder 10 feet long hung down. As the ladder came within reach Locklear grabbed the lower rung and ascended to the landing gear while the plane he had just left dived steeply to get out of the way. The hero then climbed up from the underneath and pulled his bit of gun play.

Heavy Release Demand Recorded for Subjects, According to Rogers Report

ATTRIBUTING to Trade paper advertising the remarkable number of pre-release inquiries received relative to the forthcoming release of the series of comedy playlets featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, Lou Rogers, producer of these two reel comedies, expressed himself in part as follows:—

"The sheaf of correspondence containing enquiries for the Jane and Katherine Lee comedy playlets received since the period of their first announcement has proved highly gratifying, testifying as it does to the popularity of the Lee children throughout the country. These replies I consider splendid testimony to the value of the production we are offering and convincing evidence of the efficiency of the Trade medium used in advertising the offerings.

"From all quarters of the country exhibitors have wired or written to be listed as applicants for the series as soon as same shall be released. Not a few applicants have pointed out that the 'Lee Kiddies' are well and popularly known in their district, in many cases having appeared personally on their stages. The present plan of featuring the Lee's in two reel features is proving especially popular with exhibitors, judging by communications received.

"That these comedy playlets will fill a long felt want, to use a much abused phase, may fairly be claimed. The vehicles for the young comedians, as well as the tiny players themselves, differ entirely from the usual run of short comedies, and of course from the adult players to whom usually the comedy roles fall.

Announcement of date and particulars of release of the Jane and Katherine Lee comedy playlets will be announced shortly, states Mr. Rogers.

"Red Viper" Deals with Prevailing Menace

Matthias Radin, president of the Tyrad Pictures, says that a large amount of money is being spent in publicity, free to the exhibitor on the production, "The Red Viper." It is endorsed by America's foremost officials and notables. It is not a propaganda picture, it does not deal with capital and labor, nor does it deal with any of the argumentive discussions in such productions, nor is there any question injected in the photoplay pertaining to co-operative ownership. It is a tremendous production of Americanism, the death knell to Bolshevism in America.

It is following closely the resolutions passed by the Knights of Columbus, wherein they state that they shall fight Bolshevism to the bitter end by every means in their power and their chief means of this warfare will be education. It is on this principal that we have laid the foundation for the big production, "The Red Viper," said Mr. Tyrol, who directed Winifred Dunn's story.

"Wild Oats" May Go Out as a Road Show

While it is not entirely settled, "Some Wild Oats," the feature production recently made by Samuel Cummins may be sent out as a road attraction, as there have been several offers made by legitimate theatres at one dollar top.

"Some Wild Oats" has been produced under the auspices of the New York City Health Department and the U. S. Navy and was approved by the surgeon generals of the Army, Navy and Public Health. They claim that the picture is the best on the subject. It is in seven reels and while it touches on delicate subjects it is claimed to be wholesome and clean. William Jefferson plays the lead and is supported by Leslie Hunt, Caryl Fleming, Emily Marceau, Gertrude La Brandt and Logan Paul and over four hundred extras.

All of Goldwyn's Fall Series on Broadway

Goldwyn struck the 100 per cent booking mark last week by placing with leading Broadway theatres the first and only five pictures in the Fall season series thus far shown for consideration. This marks a Goldwyn record for Broadway houses, as the managers picked from the vast supply of photoplays on the market.

Four of the five productions offered solely on their individual merits were accepted by the Strand theatre headed by Managing Director Jack Eaton; the fourth received the unanimous endorsement of E. J. Bowes, Vice-President and Managing Director of the Capitol, and his staff. The new Capitol theatre is the world's largest picture house.

Booked for an early showing at the Strand are "The World and Its Woman," in which Miss Farrar stars; "Lord and Lady Algy," starring Tom Moore; "Strictly Confidential," a Madge Kennedy vehicle, and "Almost a Husband," with Will Rogers.

Managing Director Bowes was so enthusiastic about Rex Beach's picture, "The Girl From Outside," that he booked it for two weeks as one of the initial offerings at the Capitol.

Sterns to Produce One Comedy a Week

A. and J. Sterrn, producers of the Century and Rainbow comedies which have met with wide success have announced the policy of producing one comedy a week for the coming year.

The productions will be divided as follows: Thirteen lion comedies, thirteen dog and domestic animal comedies, thirteen Charley of the Orient features, and thirteen rough and ready comedies.

This series of comedies does not include the monkey comedies which are to be featured by Messrs. Stern. The two producers, whose comedies are released by Universal, have succeeded in obtaining the services of some of the best known comedians and comic character portrayers in the country. Mr. and Mrs. Dan Russell, former vaudeville stars; Chai Hong, the Chinese comedian; Vera Steadman, Dot Farley, Sam Kauffman and Bill Bevan are among the more prominent stars featured in the Rainbow and Century comedies.

Special Features Only Tsuri Aoki

Tsuri Aoki, wife of Sessue Hayakawa, the world's famous Japanese screen actor, who has been engaged to produce three pictures for Universal, will appear in special features, elaborately staged and costumed. It is understood she is to receive one of the highest salaries paid in picturedom.

The first story Miss Aoki will appear in is a film version of Sydney McCall's well known novel, "The Breath of the Gods," and its scenes are laid in Washington and in Tokio. All the Japanese roles are to be played by Japanese actors and it is stipulated in Miss Aoki's contract that all the accesories used in Japanese sets are to be selected under her supervision in order that every detail of the production may be perfect.

Rollin Sturgeon will direct Miss Aoki.

MacDonald With First National

Star Signs Two-Year Contract. To Make Twelve Pictures

KATHERINE MACDONALD, screen star whose portrayal of the leading part in "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," and recently who is said to have caused a storm of nation-wide approval has signed a two-year contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

Announcement of this step was made by E. P. Finehan, president of the Attractions Distributing Corporation, following a series of conferences between executives of First National, Mr. Fineman and Sam E. Rork of the Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation.

The entire output from the Katherine MacDonald company, comprising twelve pictures within the next two years will be released through the Attractions Distributing Company and distributed by First National.

Terms of Miss MacDonald's contract were not revealed. It is stated upon authoritative information that funds placed at her disposal for the production of each of her twelve pictures will enable her to bring forth a series of attractions in which the youth, beauty, personality and talent of the star will be artistically enhanced through the added advantage of the most appropriate and distinctive backgrounds obtainable.

"Miss MacDonald has completed the first two of her twelve productions for First National," Mr. Fineman said. "The consensus of opinion among those who have been invited to the screening of her first two efforts has been that Miss MacDonald's productions are destined to result in a most popular form of motion picture—the combing of a beautiful star of genuine dramatic ability with the best stories obtainable, the finest direction and capable supporting casts.

Katherine McDonald who will appear in attractions released by First National

"It will be the intention of Miss MacDonald to keep entirely away from the trite triangle drama," said Mr. Fineman. "Producing pictures that the exhibitor may feel satisfied are the most pleasing and finest that money can buy will be the chief aim of Miss MacDonald.

"Miss MacDonald's screen career has been meteoric. Beginning a year ago, producers discovered her beauty and ability. She was cast in the leading part opposite William S. Hart in "Shark Monroe." Immediately she was signed for leading parts in other productions. Following her appearance in an attraction with Douglas Fairbanks, Miss MacDonald was offered her first big chance. She was offered the leading part in "The Woman Thou Gavest Me." Her remarkable success in this production set a number of producers bidding for her services.

"Refusing three offers from large producing companies, Miss MacDonald, formed the Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation which company announced that it would release its productions through the Attractions Distributing Company."

World to Distribute Weber Film

Theatrical Man Has Produced Many Successes

WORLD PICTURES announces the signing of contracts whereby it will secure the distribution of photoplays made by the Lawrence Weber Picture Production Company. Mr. Weber's organization will produce super features of unusual character without limit to cost, it is declared. In his organization he has associated with him Bobby North.

Lawrence Weber is a prominent New York theatrical manager who has been identified with a number of successful productions. He has produced "Fine Feathers," "A Pair of Sixes," "Nothing But the Truth," "Nothing But Lies," "A Full House," "A Pair of Queens," "The Only Girl," "The Climax," "Yes or No," "The Very Idea," and others.

In the above productions he was a partner with Joe Weber, Harry Frazee and William Anderson. He was one of the moving spirits in the creation of the Columbia Amusement Company which organized a wheel controlling 40 theatres in the prominent cities throughout the United States. His moving picture experience as a producer began with the formation of Popular Plays and Players. This was one of the original companies that composed a group of producers whose pictures were distributed by Metro.

It was Mr. Weber's company that introduced Mme. Petrova to the screen in "The Heart of a Painted Woman," "The Tigress," "What Will People Say," and "The Madonna." Popular Plays and Players first put the stories of Robert W. Serviss, on the screen, when they picturized "The Shooting of Dan Magrue," with Edmund Breese as the star. They also starred John Barrymore in "Raffles."

Mr. Weber's associate in his picture career was Bobby North whose theatrical experiences cover a wide range from Ziegfeld's Follies to David Belasco's dramatic productions. When Mr. Weber began to produce pictures he secured the services of Mr. North who became his production manager and with the four years' experience in this line today enjoys a reputation as high as any other man connected with the industry in a similar capacity.

Mr. Weber and Mr. North are in negotiation, it is said, with several prominent stars of the first magnitude as well as with authors of reputation for their stage successes.

King Vidor Completes "The Other Half"

A preview of the Brentwood feature "The Other Half" was held recently, at the studio, every man and woman being given an opportunity to view the picture in which they had worked hard for four weeks, previous to its being shipped to New York for distribution by Exhibitors Mutual.

The next morning, King W. Vidor, the director, was to be seen surrounded by heads of the different departments planning and discussing the sets and furnishings for the next production and "Joe" Morgan, the man responsible for all the photographic effects with Roy Marshall, Mr. Vidor's assistant, were out scouring the country for the best locations.

Nat Spitzer Has a New Single-Reel Novelty

Nat H. Spitzer, studio manager for the Bull's Eye Film Corporation in Hollywood, announces a new single reel feature, which he promises will be a novelty on the screen. The new idea will be widely advertised in the trade papers in September and meanwhile the men back of the project are maintaining a discreet silence.

Sectional Tale Latest for Monroe Salisbury

East may not meet West according to Kipling, but in Monroe Salisbury's latest Universal starring vehicle "Sundown Trail" the West and South meet on common ground.

Salisbury is seen as "Quiet" Carter, a blue-blooded Southern aristocrat, who by a strange stroke of fate is picked up and set down in "Spanish Bar," the wildest, woolliest mining camp of the "great west that was."

Salisbury discovers that southern courtesy and procrastination of movement is not desirable around the village, where acceleration of the trigger finger is often a case of safety first.

How "Quiet" Carter beats the frock-coated bully of the camp and saves the girl he loves from a fate worse than death, furnishes the big vital dramatic situations of the story.

Foreign Competition Argued

Reports That Local Market Would Be Broken on Accessory Trade Is False

THE accessories experts of Inter-Ocean Film are now able to show definitely that American film accessories continue to hold their position in the foreign markets, despite the revival of German-made articles predicted with letting-down of war restrictions. The pessimists told of the storing up of carbons, lamps, projectors and miscellaneous devices during hostilities, all to be loosed on the foreign markets at prices anywhere from half to a third of American rates.

But if there has been such a "storing up" it has not affected the world market. American accessories of all makes are still supreme, the Inter-Ocean men find. They base this conclusion on reports from the entire export field.

Every Speer Carbon contract, due for renewal, has been renewed. Particularly in Spain was this cheering result. The Spanish agents of German carbons had been offering them at prices much under the Speer figure.

Increase in quantity is reported in the Speer orders from Japan, Chile, the Dutch East Indies and the Far East.

The Fulco accessories, manufactured in Chicago, are now established, through Inter-Ocean's efforts, in England, France, Holland and Peru—where they had never been known before. In Holland they have had a keen fight with German accessories, because of the accessibility of Berlin to The Hague, but the Fulco line is well ahead.

The American Wohl Studio Lamps have been ordered for France, Scandinavia, England and Italy, although studio lighting is a field in which the Germans were considered to lead in Europe. Copenhagen, Denmark, a city accustomed to giving preference to German goods, sent in the largest Wohl lamp order, for one dozen.

Gardiner (Detroit, Mich.) screens have been installed in England, France and Italy. One of the Italian installations is in the best cinema in Milan.

"The foreign accessory purchasers," concludes Accessories Manager Kaufman, of Inter-Ocean, "know that the kind of American article that is turned out today is just a step ahead of other brands. While that is their belief, we do not fear campaigns by competing manufacturers in other countries."

TOM SANTCHI has returned to Los Angeles from the Yosemite Valley, where many of the exterior scenes were made for "The Sporting Chance," the Fox feature in which Santchi plays opposite Gladys Brockwell.

Raymond C. Moore, location manager for the Goldwyn Studios, has returned from a trip to the Sacramento river country, where he went to secure settings for a new Goldwyn Picture.

Three Days' Rehearsal; Then Camera Grinds

Although Mary Miles Minter has been very active at her New York Studios since July 14th, preparing for her Realart debut in "Anne of Green Gables," actual work on the production did not begin until Monday, July 28th. The two weeks intervening were spent in selecting a cast of supporting players and this was no easy task as anyone knows who has read the "Anne" stories from which the scenario was made.

In starting production July 28th on Miss Minter's first Realart picture, her director, William Desmond Taylor, introduced an unusual innovation in photoplay technique. For the first three days not a scene was recorded by the camera. The reason for this was that Mr. Taylor broke away from the conventional method of direction by devoting all this time to rehearsing the star and members of the cast.

Many Foreign Sales

Mr. Wortham, of Beach, Van Siclen & Company, Inc., announces the sale of "Wild Honey," and "Calibre 38" for England, and "A House Divided" for England, France, Belgium, Switzerland, Holland, Germany, Austria Hungary, Poland, Roumania, Bulgaria, Greece and Turkey.

"Wild Honey," "Calibre 38," "Twilight," "Inn of the Blue Moon," "Street of Seven Stars," "Romance of the Underworld," "Marriage," "Out of the Night," "Marriage for Convenience" for Spain and Portugal.

Start Film Based on "Silver Horde"

They are already taking pictures for the next Rex Beach Picture based on his novel, "The Silver Horde," according to a wire received from the Goldwyn studios at Culver City. Twenty-five motion picture artists have arrived at Lummi Island, Bellingham, Washington, to film the salmon fishing scenes which lend color to the dramatic spectacle and struggle on which the plot centers.

Pickford Picture Hit in Philadelphia

No picture in recent years has been so much in demand for return dates in Philadelphia and vicinity it is said as has "Daddy Long Legs," a film version of Jean Webster's famous story and play, in which Mary Pickford is the featuring star. It is the popular star's Initial First National attraction and is being distributed through the Peerless Feature Film Exchange in the Quaker City and adjoining territory. At the Stanley theatre, which secures first run on practically all feature films, "Daddy Long Legs" played a solid week to phenomenal business.

The following week it moved to the Palace theatre a little further down the street where it again made a box office record for the house. It proved to be such a magnetic attraction at the Palace that the management immediately made arrangements for a return engagement which they were able to secure for the following week.

Morgan Dancers Appear in Model Comedy

The Morgan Dancers, fancy terpsichorean artists, who have been touring vaudeville circuits in the East and West for the past two years, are cast in "Don't Chase Your Wife," a comedy starring comical Gale Henry, which has just been completed. Two dances among those executed by the girls on the stage and which were given in the picture are "The Ballet from Faust" and "Naila." Their appearance in this production marks their first showing in moving pictures, it is stated. The troupe united in declaring that they enjoy moving picture work immensely even though their make-up is on more than 26 minutes a day. The dancers, it is declared, will leave shortly for a tour of a European vaudeville circuit.

Realart Will Release Dwan Films

REALART Pictures announces it has made arrangement whereby its exhibitors will have the Allan Dwan Productions. The contract was made with Mayflower Photoplay Corporation by Arthur S. Kane, President of Realart.

News of the distribution affiliation for Mr. Dwan's pictures has been awaited by the industry. It was known that several marketing concerns were anxious to add these attractions to their lists because of the prestige of the names of Mr. Dwan, Mr. Wolper and Mayflower and the ripe chances for grossing tremendous rental receipts. The fact that "Soldiers of Fortune" is the first production and that reports from Los Angeles indicated Mr. Dwan had staged it in a manner to make it one of the crashing successes of the coming season, did not serve to lessen the interest among exchange systems for the distribution rights.

Eight successive Allan Dwan Productions, beginning with "Soldiers of Fortune" are covered by the contract between Mayflower and Realart. The amounts to be paid for them is said to be one that is big enough to make one gasp even in these days of lavish production.

The announcement was made at the time Realart Pictures Corporation was organized that not only would this new concern produce photoplays with its own stars but would be in the market for productions of merit from all sources. It was stipulated, however, that such pictures must be of such quality that they would be in the exceptional class. The arrangement now made carries out this idea.

When seen at his office, Isaac Wolper, President of Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, expressed himself as highly gratified over the arrangements made.

"It is a source of great pleasure and satisfaction to my associates and myself to know the distribution of Allan Dwan Productions will be in such capable hands," said he. "It was no impulse of the moment. The negotiations concluded today began the latter part of April, when Realart was only being formed and was not yet incorporated. In associating Mr. Dwan with ourselves we knew one of the few really great directors of the country had come with us. Consequently, the nature of the distributing affiliation was of the utmost concern to all of us.

"We regard Arthur Kane, one of the foremost marketing experts of the country. With the handling of our attractions now in his care and that of his associates we feel secure. I can now leave tomorrow for the mountains with a peaceful mind and put in the month of August preparing myself for the strenuous year ahead.

"Special arrangements are well under way for nation-wide exploitation of Allan Dwan Productions.

"Happy?" quoted Mr. Kane. "Well, why shouldn't I be? This is the biggest day's work in a month of Sundays. You don't have to tell anybody in this business who Allan Dwan is. Now he is out making his own productions in association with Mr. Wolper and Mayflower Photoplay Corporation; to my mind the combination is invincible. Mr. Dwan is a known quantity as a genius of direction. Mr. Wolper and his colleagues of Mayflower have already produced highly successful pictures. Then for a moment consider the very first thing which these allied interests have done. They have put on one of the most popular novels and stage plays of all time, 'Soldiers of Fortune,' by a writer the American public loves, the late Richard Harding Davis, and the filming has been done on a lavish and spectacular scale.

"Let me make a prediction: Before three months have passed the names of Allan Dwan Productions, Isaac Wolper and Mayflower Photoplay Corporation will be known from one end of the land to the other as a standard of excellence. Many will say this is a bold prophecy in these days of magnificent and costly productions. Nevertheless it is not half strong enough.

Initial Picture Under Contract, "Soldiers of Fortune"

Allan Dwan, well known director, now with Realart Pictures Corporation

"We hope to have 'Soldiers of Fortune' ready for release early in the Fall. However, we have no desire to rush it, and none of the Allan Dwan productions will be issued until Mr. Dwan is satisfied with them in every respect."

Campaign on Mystery Story

Pathe to Press "Thirteenth Chair" Exploitation; Many Bookings Made

WHEN Pathe's photoplay version of "The Thirteenth Chair" one of the greatest stage successes of recent years, is released on August 31st, it will be accompanied by one of the most unusual exploitation and advertising campaigns launched on a motion picture feature.

Every effort will be stressed by Pathe to establish "The Thirteenth Chair" as great a success in screen form as it was in the legitimate, and according to reports from the William B. Harris offices which staged the Bayard Veiller triumph, it did more than $1,000,000 net business.

Pathe has prepared a special exploitation book on "The Thirteenth Chair" which contains many novel features calculated to help the exhibitor to put over the play.

A particularly novel "stunt" has been framed by the Pathe exploitation department, in the form of a slip cover, made to fit any ordinary kitchen chair. It is made of strong cloth with the advertising design stencilled in three places, twice on the front and once on the back. There are many ways in which exhibitors can obtain publicity by the use of these covers.

Marc McDermott as "Lee" in "The Thirteenth Chair"

Many of the foremost motion picture theatres in the United States have already signed contracts for the screen version of "The Thirteenth Chair." The film production was made by the Acme Pictures Corporation under the supervision of Leonce Perret, the noted French director, and has a cast of prominent players.

With the release of "The Thirteenth Chair" not scheduled until August 31st, the Pathe Home Office has been notified that the million dollar stage success has been booked for week runs by Hulsey's Hippodrome in Dallas, Texas; the Capitol theatre, premier motion picture theatre in Elizabeth, N. J. and by the Newark theatre, in Newark, N. J. which plays only the best in photoplays.

Raver Closes Number of Territorial Sales

Rights for the distribution of Harry Raver's twelve-episode serial, "The Liberator," starring d'Annunzio's famous "Maciste" have just been closed for the states of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, the Producers and Exhibitors Pictures Co. acquiring ownership. Missouri and Kansas have also been disposed of to the Central Film Service of St. Louis, Mo.

Negotiations are now pending for the sale of the entire west coast territory, through Frank Samuels, a personal representative of Harry Raver, in Los Angeles.

Argus Production on Market

First Release "House Without Children" on Stage and Screen at Same Time

ROBERT W. PRIEST, President of the Film Market, Inc., has just returned from a flying trip to Cleveland where he perfected arrangements with executives of Argus Enterprises, Inc., and Robert H. McLaughlin, author, for the exploitation and marketing of the first Argus production, made from a human interest story written by Mr. McLaughlin, and directed by Samuel Brodsky, entitled "The House Without Children."

An extensive campaign has been mapped out for the exploitation and sale on the state rights plan of "The House Without Children," and it includes production with full orchestral accompaniment and theatrical effects at the Klaw & Erlanger Opera House, Cleveland, August 10th. At the same time the photoplay is presented at the Klaw & Erlanger Theatre, a dramatic version of the same story with the same title will be produced at the Shubert Colonial Theatre, that city, and each presentation played against the other.

The occasion will mark the first time that a play has been produced simultaneously in photoplay form and as legitimate drama in the city of Cleveland, and so far as records can be found, anywhere else in the United States.

Immediately after the first presentation of "The House Without Children" in Cleveland, an extensive exhibitor campaign will be waged in the state of Ohio and a trade paper advertising and publicity campaign inaugurated to attract buyers and interest exhibitors throughout the United States. Mr. Priest has already sold the entire foreign rights on "The House Without Children" to the International Photo Play Distributors, Inc., and Mr. George Smith of that firm, whose New York office is at 1493 Broadway, New York City, has taken a print with him to London where he purposes giving a trade showing and re-selling the rights to European distributors. It is said to posses an international appeal.

Ellen Terry in Fitting Role

Noted Actress Will Make Debut on Screen in Role Suited to Her Age

OVERCOMING the usual difficulties met by producers desiring to present established stage stars on the screen without forcing them to play roles too youthful for their present age, those responsible for the elaborate Ellen Terry feature soon to be offered by Triangle Film Corporation promise to cause talk in film circles.

"Her Greatest Performance" in which the often termed "greatest actress on the English-speaking stage" will be presented to screen audiences is written around a retired actress who has won the love of a tremendous following and is enjoying the fruits of her years of successful stage work. when her only son whose career as an actor promises to rival that of his celebrated mother, is accused and convicted of murder. He thinks that he is guilty but in spite of his mistaken idea of the circumstances of the crime his mother believes in his innocence and devotes every energy to saving him.

The ingenious role thus created for the star enables her to play upon the screen the part of a woman of exactly her own age and position while at the same time placing her in situations which call for the most powerful emotional acting conceivable. In this manner the love which audiences naturally bear for Ellen Terry is strengthened by the sincere sympathy and intense interest awakened by the lovable character she is interpreting in the drama. These ideal conditions give Ellen Terry an opportunity to make the most of her talents without the handicap of being miscast.

Strong Cast Feature of Kerrigan Play

J. Warren Kerrigan gave much time and attention to the selection of a cast for "A White Man's Chance," the first in his series of ten Robert Brunton productions to be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the aggregation including several popular stage and screen favorites.

Heading the Kerrigan cast is Lillian Walker, for years the star or the feature feminine player in a score or more screen productions.

Howard Davies, a prominent figure on the stage through his performances with Wilson Barrett in "Lights of London" and in the title role of Lewis Morrison's "Faust," lends finesse and polish to the Kerrigan production as the heavy, Hugh Hankins.

Davies' partner in crime in "A White Man's Chance" is George Field. Among others who give a good account of themselves in "A White Man's Chance" are Andrew Arbuckle, brother of the redoubtable Maclyn; Joseph Hazelton, Joseph Ray and Richard Loreno.

Kremer Finds a Demand for Short Subjects

Victor Kremer, who has spent a month touring the western States and southwestern Canada, in a campaign for the Victor Kremer Film Features, reports an unusually successful trip. Practically the entire coast, many of the central western States and a large portion of southwestern Canada have been sold for both feature pictures and short reel subjects.

More than a dozen contracts already have been closed in the States and negotiations are under way for as many more, with inquiries pouring in daily. Mr. Kremer, who is now on his way back to his Chicago headquarters, reports that he is confident the entire country will be sold solid shortly.

"I find that there is not only a big demand for features, but for the short subjects," said Mr. Kremer. "Broncho Billy is a prime favorite as everyone wants western dramas. Western comedies also are in great demand, and the George Ade Fables are quickly snapped up."

"Lombardi" Abounds in Rich Sets

The new dark stage at the Screen Classics, Inc., studios in Hollywood, underwent its christening last Wednesday evening, when a set representing the designing room of an exclusive Fifth Avenue dressmaking establishment was completed and Bert Lytell played in it one of the big scenes of "Lombardi, Ltd." the comedy drama the young star is using as his first stellar vehicle under the "fewer and better" pictures slogan adopted by Metro Pictures Corporation. Jack Conway is directing.

Ann May and Juanita Hansen also have important roles.

Legitimate Actor Makes Screen Debut

"Man's Desire," the Robertson-Cole feature distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual marks the screen debut of Lewis S. Stone, long a noted actor on the legitimate stage. In this picture of the great Northwest he plays the role of Denton, a big lumberman who marries a girl after her husband is supposed to have been killed but who returns to mar the happiness of the couple, stealing the wife after he has wounded Denton. Upon recovery Denton tracks him down into the Southland where he meets a deserved fate and again Denton and his wife are reunited.

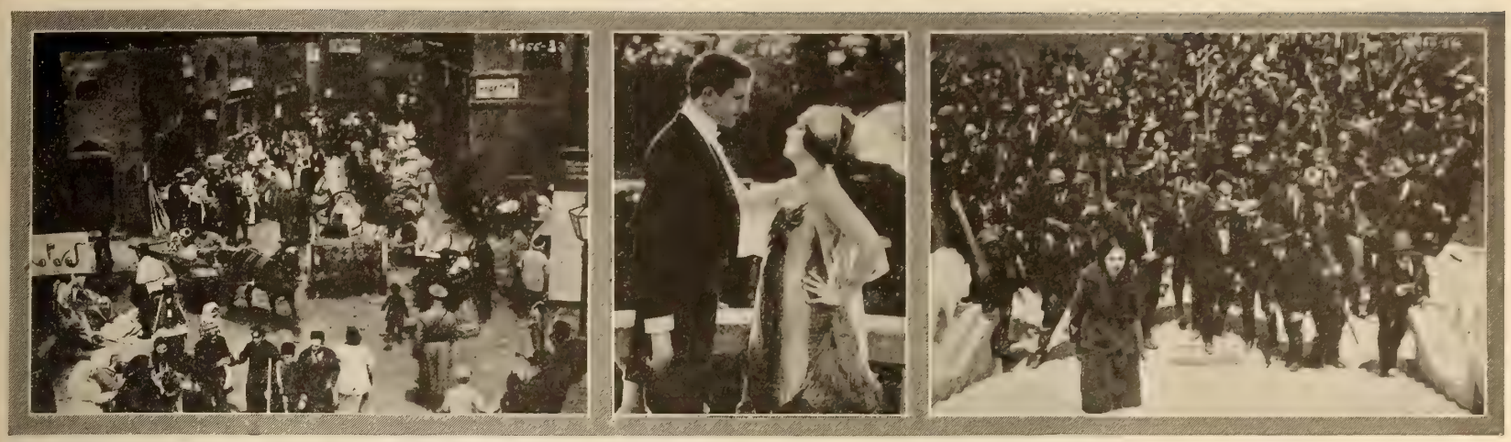
Besides Lewis S. Stone, the cast includes Jane Novak, whose excellent work is known to many, Bill Dyer, George Pearce, Joe Bennett, Charlotte Burton and Jack Lewis.

Fischer Features Have Chambers' Stories

B. A. Rolfe announces that he has acquired a series of stories by Robert W. Chambers which he will convert into picture form for the new firm of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.

The first story he will put on is "The Shining Band," conceded to be among the most virile and entertaining of all the noted author's works. The adaptation of the printed text for screen use has been made by Charles A. Logue, who is credited with a long list of successful adaptations and with writing many original stories for picture purposes.

The production will be made at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, N. Y., under the personal supervision and direction of Mr. Rolfe, with the co-operation of Chester DeVonde.



Big moments in the latest Universal-Jewel production, "Rights to Happiness" in which Dorothy Phillips is starred

Another Star Signed by Arthur Beck

Arthur F. Beck, the president of the Arthur F. Beck Serial Productions, Inc., announces another long-time contract with a well-known actor, both of the screen and stage—Wilfred Lytell.

Last season Mr. Lytell played the juvenile lead in A. H. Wood's well-known production, "Business Before Pleasure."

Mr. Lytell, who by the way is said to be the living image of his brother, Bert, has definitely decided to cast his fortune with the motion picture end of theatricals. Mr. Beck anticipates placing him in plays and stories typifying the young, breezy, athletic American that he personifies.

Florence Reed to Film at Her Summer Home

To put into operation plans laid down for Florence Reed and her next United Picture Theatres, offering, whereby many of the exterior and certain interior scenes of "The Eternal Mother," under which working title the production is being made, are to be filmed on and around the Maine summer home of the United star, A. J. Bimberg, who personally supervises Miss Reed's productions, has left New York accompanied by John K. Holbrook head of the camera staff. A working crew was dispatched to Osanaga lake last week to make the built sets and complete the preparations for the work of the next ten days on Miss Reed's estate.

A Strong Universal is Announced

UNCHECKED passions and extreme pathos are said to be vividly portrayed in what Universal confidently expects to be one of the greatest photodramas of the year, "The Right to Happiness". Allen Holubar is the director, and Dorothy Phillips the star. This Jewel production was recently finished and is scheduled for release in the near future.

Allen Holubar is the author of the story as well as the director and is co-author with Olga Linek School, of the scenario.

Dorothy Phillips as never before in her career proves herself one of the most versatile of screen actresses. Miss Phillips, who has starred in many exceptional productions, gives in this production some noteworthy delicate and dramatic acting, it is claimed.

Recently published articles have suggested that the dual role is not to the liking of the audiences of photodramas. As a wild Russian girl and a pampered daughter of the rich, Miss Phillips contradicts all statements of that sort purely through her wonderful dramatic ability and versatility.

The locales of the story are laid in Russia at the time of the chaotic wartime turmoil and the city of New York during the reconstruction period following the great war. Wonderful, stupendous scenes of Russia during a period nineteen years ago and recently are shown as well as the lower East Side of the American Metropolis, its wealthy homes and its industrial centers.

The story itself tells of an American manufacturer in Russia who, as a widower, leaves in the care of a trustworthy governess, his twin daughters. While away from his home the Russian soldier element, crazed with drink, attack the homes of prominent persons and the Jews and upon his return one of the daughters is missing. He returns to America with the one daughter. He becomes a king of finance and a worshipper of the dollar with no regard for the men he employs.

Nineteen years elapse and the lost babe is shown in the person of Sonia, now a daughter and leader of the Russian revolutionists. She is detailed to spread propaganda in America. Following her is her adopted brother, a worshipper of the girl but not of her ideals.

Big Claims Made for "The Right to Happiness"

Meanwhile the other sister is brought up to believe in her father and herself. She has all that money can buy. She little realizes the needs of her father's workmen until labor conditions become such that she is forced to see them. She then realizes that all people are entitled to the happiness which has always been hers.

The two girls, not knowing they are sisters, meet at the moment when the wealthy girl's life is threatened as an angry mob storms the home of her father. It is then that Sonia, the courageous girl who lives up to her ideals, receives the bullet of the assassin which was meant for the rich girl.

As she dies in the home of the rich man he discovers that she is his daughter. The true heart of the wealthy girl bursts forth with all the stored-up love for her lost sister and the wealthy manufacturer realizes that his own hands were the real cause of the sacrifice of his own daughter. The faithful lover of the little revolutionist slips away to try and forget.

Since the arrival of the first print from the West coast, many prominent persons and critics have witnessed a pre-release showing of this remarkable production. Without exception these persons have been impressed with the production.

Seven well-known screen personages support Miss Phillips in "The Right to Happiness". Robert Anderson, who is to be starred by Universal, has one of the principal parts, that of the faithful lover of Sonia. Mr. Anderson's portrayal of this character is remarkable. Others who have important roles are: William Stowell, who was opposite Miss Phillips in "The Heart of Humanity" and in "Destiny"; Henry Barrows, Winter Hall, Margaret Mann, Stanhope Wheatcroft, and Alma Bennett.

New Studio Plans Perfected

Samuel Goldwyn Leaves for the West; Eastern Studios to Rival Coast Ones

BEFORE he left for the coast last week, after concluding the reorganization deal, increasing the capitalization of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation from three million to twenty million dollars and making the Shubert, Woods and Selwyn interests a part of the Goldwyn organization, Samuel Goldwyn had gone far toward perfecting plans for the new studios and laboratory to be erected in the east, near New York City.

Several sites are under consideration at the present time, and within the next week or two a choice will be made, after which the erection of the buildings will be started immediately. The foremost experts on studio designing have been working on the plans for several months and something absolutely new in studio construction is promised.

The eastern studios will be as large, if not larger, than the mammoth Culver City plant, recently acquired by Goldwyn, and in conjunction with the western buildings will afford Goldwyn the finest production facilities in the world. Even with the present output, the stages at Culver City have been taxed to their capacity, and with the increase of production, consequent upon the alliance with the Shuberts, A. H. Woods and the Selwyns, greater accommodations become imperative.

The erection of a plant near New York does not mean that operations at Culver City will be in any way slackened. The Goldwyn company was confronted with two alternatives, either it was forced to double the studio space in the west, or to find quarters in the east equipped to meet the new demands. Several reasons led to the choice of an eastern plant instead of an expansion of the coast property.

Lillian Walker's Cast

Bernard Randall, one of the best known heavies on the screen, has been engaged by Harry Grossman to support Lillian Walker in her forthcoming Grossman serial, "One Million Dollars Reward," for the Pathe program.

Hodkinson Issues Challenge

"Desert Gold," He Declares, Will Excel Any Big Picture Opening Fall Season

WHEN Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner delivered "Desert Gold," their first Zane Grey picture from California, to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for distribution new plans immediately took form in New York for the national distribution and exploitation of this production.

Zane Grey pictures and stories have admittedly great power and popularity and other producers have also made big and popular Zane Grey screen productions. But "Desert Gold" was so much bigger than any Zane Grey picture that either the Hodkinson executives or its producers had ever seen that "Desert Gold," first planned for release in early August, was held back for September release and with it the Hodkinson organization has coupled what may be construed as a deliberate challenge to all other producers.

"I rank 'Desert Gold' as such a revolutionary picture," says Mr. Hodkinson, "that my organization announces it for early September release as an opening of the season attraction for any exhibitor and to equal or excel any other big picture that any other producer has or thinks he has.

"Contrary to prevailing policies in many directions, this production will not be used as the leverage with which to punish or whip the exhibitors of the country. I say frankly that 'Desert Gold' will be offered at high prices in keeping with its proved value, but it will not be used as a weapon for gaining mastery over exhibitors. On the contrary, it will be at the disposal of the exhibitors of the country as a means of escaping domination of producer and distributor interests."

War Relief Series Released

on Sept. 1 and One Monthly Thereafter First of Stage Women's Big Pictures

OFFICIAL announcement is made of the release of the first of the series of the famous Stage Women's War Relief productions. The release date has been set as September first with one picture being released each month following.

This series of pictures have been widely praised by the best known photoplay critics in the country. One of the best tributes paid to this series of productions is evidenced by the fact that the largest theatre in the world has booked the series. This is the Capitol theatre on Broadway which is to be opened some time within the near future. The fact that the Capitol management's policy is to show only the highest class pictures is proof of the worth of this series.

In addition to the biggest New York theatres booking this series are many of the larger theatres in other cities throughout the country. The pictures have been shown in the Universal exchanges throughout the country and have been pronounced by exhibitors as the best series ever produced.

At the present time the following big theatres in the country have booked the series for an early showing. They are: Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; Regent, Rochester; Strand, Syracuse; Majestic, Tulsa, Oklahoma; Majestic, Elmira, N. Y.; Palace, Orleans, N. Y.; Lumberg, Niagara Falls; the entire Stanley Circuit of Philadelphia; Imperial, Montreal; Rialto, Washington, D. C.; Olympic, Pittsburg; Liberty, Youngstown, O.; Parkway, Baltimore; Alhambra, Toledo; Victoria, Wilmington, Del.; and the Madison, Detroit.

Buys "Brown of Harvard"

Helen Holmes in Danger High in Air

Helen Holmes, who is being featured in the new S. L. K. Serial, "The Fatal Fortune," will offer a new species of thrill by performing stunts with an aeroplane never before attempted by a serial star. One of these stunts will be to leap from one aeroplane to another in midair while the planes are traveling at a terrific speed.

Last week while up in a plane with Lieut. Jack Levering, the engine went dead, and it was necessary to volplane to the ground. While still far up a bolt of lightning struck the machine, but no serious damage was done and the plane finally landed in a swamp.

"Daddy Long Legs" Induces Longer Runs

"Daddy Long Legs" is performing another mission in addition to that of spreading smiles and making hearts softer as he goes through the country. He is converting the small town picture theatres from one night to two night policies, with advanced prices.

Tennessee has been a rich field for "Daddy" to work in. The Palace theatre at Covington, the Belle at Springfield, the Patriot at Dickson and the Dixie at Paris are theatres that played "Daddy Long Legs" two nights.

Enormous Film Footage on Stewart Picture

Some idea of the magnitude of Anita Stewart's next release, "Her Kingdom of Dreams," may be gleaned from the fact that 180,000 feet of negative was used in its making. Several weeks were required to cut this enormous footage to the seven reel form in which the production will be shown by exhibitors.

Two camera men were kept busy shooting scenes over a period of eleven weeks, and Director Marshall Neilan insisted that most of the scenes be taken over and over again, to avoid the possibility of a re-take after the all-star cast has been disbanded. For once gathered it would have been useless to try to re-assemble such people as Anna Q. Nillson, who has already formed her own company; Kathlyn Williams, who is doing the same; Mahlon Hamilton, Thomas Santschi, Thomas Jefferson, Tully Marshall, Edwin Stevens, Wesley Barry, and the other featured players who made up the cast.

More negative footage has been used in the making of "Her Kingdom of Dreams" than any other single feature of the same reel length.

An Organization That Makes Many Stars

With the recent selection of Mildred Moore, to be starred in Universal western dramas, the comedy team of Lyons and Moran, Universal funsters, was able to score its' ninth triumph in having one of their leading women promoted to stardom.

Priscilla Dean, Billie Rhodes, Dorothy DeVore, Juanita Hansen, Gertrude Astor, Mildred Mason and Marcia Moore are others who have climbed the ladder.

Bosworth Begins First Picture for Ince

Hobart Bosworth, of "Sea Wolf" fame, whose acquisition as a star and director was recently announced by Thomas H. Ince, has commenced work on a special Ince production for Paramount-Artcraft release, at the Ince studio in Culver City. The cast includes Jane Novak, J. P. Lockney, Otto Hoffman, Gibson Goland and James Gordon.

Another De Haven Comic on Married Life

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announce the release of the latest Capitol Comedy picture, "Close to Nature," in which Wm. Parsons presents Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven. As in their first Capitol Comedy pictures, Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven continue to air the troubles of a young married couple. This time the cause of their rupture lies in the choice of a summer resort. Jack wishes to get close to nature, to be with the cows and the chickens, to lie in the hay, or go strolling along quiet country roads in the mountains. Ruth, with an eye to wearing her beautiful new gowns, prefers the seashore with its beach parties in the morning and balls in the evening.

Boy Scout Life Shown in Ford Weekly

The newest Ford Educational Weekly announced for release by Goldwyn is "Days of Real Sport," in which the work and the aim of the boy scout movement is depicted in a series of stirring incidents.

How the boys live up to their slogan of "One Good Turn a Day," how they are taught not to let just one good turn hinder them from doing others; how they go out of their way to be helpful, courteous and kind are some of the lessons which the boy scouts on the screen have to teach their elders.

One of the first lessons which the boy scout learns is self-reliance; and often his first encounter with the world of business occurs when he earns the money to purchase his uniform.

Louis Sherwin Writes Play for Goldwyn

Louis Sherwin, who for eight years held the post of dramatic critic on the New York Globe, has written his first photoplay for Goldwyn. His story, "The Bonds of Love," will be among the first group of Goldwyn's new season's releases, and will present Pauline Frederick in the role of a second wife whose life becomes a torture through the nagging of her predecessor's relatives.

For the past year Mr. Sherwin has been a member of the Goldwyn scenario staff in Culver City, but his activities have been limited in the past to work of a critical nature.

"Producer Not the Great I Am"

Louis Burston Speaks Frankly Crediting the Public

"ACCORDING to a recent issue of the NEWS," writes Louis Burston, of Burston Films, Inc., "the latest agitation in the great 'fifth industry' is based upon the importance of good stories, by which I suppose its proponents mean good or interesting plots. It seems to me to be one of the frequent disturbances in production circles that no one need lose much sleep about. In the first place it is not new, and like the 'star' question it covers only one part of the subject of providing acceptable motion picture entertainment to its millions of patrons. Are we not likely to become slaves to slogans? We have 'Give them a big star,' and 'The play's the thing,' and 'Fewer and better pictures,' as well as others of slighter consequence. In my opinion the NEWS would render a real service to the entire industry if it could get say ten comments from exhibitors in as many sections of the country, on the three catch phrases (and what they stand for), quoted above.

"I suggest that you dodge the big, notably successful exhibitors, the ones who are constantly being quoted in the trade press, and ask their opinions of men who are running houses with 500 to 700 seating capacity, in towns of moderate size, from whence comes the greater percentage of motion picture patronage. In this event, is there any question as to our getting a new angle on the situation? I think not. Let us review certain facts. I am not afraid to mention names so let us admit that a Fairbanks, Pickford or Chaplin fan will be attracted by the star's name; but they will judge the entertainment by the story. 'Yes, I always like Mary,' they'll say, 'but the play didn't amount to anything.' I don't mean to imply that Miss Pickford ever appeared in that kind of a picture, the same attitude will apply to any star whose work is popular. The fans are more apt to feel sorry for the star with a poor play than they are to blame her—or him.

"Again, take a notably successful best seller by a very popular author. Instead of the too-frequently sickening substitute title, use the book title, and plan your adverising accordingly. It's a hundred to one that if the production is good in every way, the fans will give the star the credit for visualizing a rattling good yarn for them, and increasing their pleasure in it, and the author's work generally. When the producer gets down off his high horse; ceases to admit, without proof—the omnipotence of his power in the industry; acknowledges that his judgment is not infallible, he will see to it that his young men of the publicity and advertising staff will give the exhibitor credit for knowing a thing or two about public taste. He will take a tip from your recent page of advice to press agents, et al, and he will discover that a perfect entertainment from the box-office, or the acting, or the star, or the story, or the artistic standpoint must combine all these elements; it must make use of and present in a highly meritorious degree all of these qualities blended into a harmonious whole.

"No matter how necessary we think we are, it is a fact that the fifth industry of the world does not supply a necessity, like wheat, or coal, or any other staple necessary of life. We are dependent upon the people's suffrage; we must merit the public's good will if we would profit by it. Our efforts to please remind me of one of George Ade's truest and most amusing fables, which had to do with the success of a fashionable preacher. The moral of the fable was 'Give the people what they think they want.' The difference between the reverend gentleman and the producer of today is that the moral of the latter's story (or fable), might be rendered 'Give the people what you think they want.' As a matter of fact most producers know what the fans want. I do. But as fashions change in pictures, so the fancy of the picture patron changes also. And if you have a star under contract who has made a success in a style of story that is not now so popular as when the star made his or her reputation in them; or if you have a lot of expensive stories of a sort that is slightly shopworn, what would you do? It is might easy to argue with oneself that 'It always has gone big, I guess it'll go over again.' But a lot of misfit pictures reach the screen through even more trivial causes than this.

"I say that the way to succeed as a producer is to 'Give the people what you know they want.' It isn't so many months ago that the trade press was full of discussions as to whether or not serials were dead. At that time I was contemplating entering the serial field exclusively. I had two stars ready for contracts. I wanted to choose between them. I fancied one more than the other because he was identified with a certain style of serial that I believed would never lose its drawing power. I traveled and studied the situation; I asked questions of fans, exhibitors, distributors, exchange men, state rights buyers, brokers, independent bookers, press agents and everyone else I could get an expression from. As a result I signed a contract with Francis Ford and put out a story built along mystery, swift action and stunt lines, such as had made Francis Ford the best known serial star in the world. That was my first Francis Ford production—'The Silent Mystery.' It numbered among the records it smashed, that of being booked solid—daily—for fifteen weeks in a downtown loop house on Madison Street, Chicago. I have on file records that show that I was successful because I 'gave the people what I knew they wanted! I am doing it again. Doing it with the same star, but on a much bigger scale.

"As a final word may I say that a housewife who makes good bread doesn't leave out the salt. And the successful producer never leaves out the appeal, regardless of star, story, and all the rest, I repeat—the appeal that counts at the box-office. The secret is—be a business man and remember the exhibitor is dependent for his very living on your efforts to give the people what they want."

Convention Boosts on "Better Times"

The Seattle convention of the Northwest Film Board of Trade was first advertised as a boost for "Better Times" convention. All of the hotels, stores and display windows carried "Better Times" cards. These were circulated by Newton Levi, Exhibitors' Mutual's Pacific Coast Supervisor and L. Wingham, manager of Exhibitors Mutual Seattle Branch. This advertising not only caried the convention's message but also served to bring attention to "Better Times," the Robertson-Cole feature which has made such a phenominal success.

Get acquainted remembrance cards reading "Yours for 'Better Times'—Remember me—we met at Seattle July 16, 17, 18 and 19," we distributed among the delegates and visitors. These cards signed by Mr. Levi and Mr. Wingham, were sent to all who signed the registration book.

"Pagan God," a Feature That Interests

"The Pagan God," Robertson-Cole's latest H. B. Warner production, distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, is described as a mystery story that will grip an audience. Not only is the story of Chinese intrique intensive and thrilling, but the unusal locale of the story interior Mongolia, is an additional attractive feature of the production.

"The Pagan God," a story of China, of its intrigue, its subtleness, and its inbred hatred for the white man, shows Warner in the role of an American diplomatic agent, who to foil a heathen outbreak against the Christians is compelled to risk his life among the Chinese plotters.

Lehrman Is Not in the Market for Scripts

Henry Lehrman Comedies, for the present at least, will not be based on stories bought from outside contributors, as Mr. Lehrman has anounced that his organization is not in the market for scripts. The studio staff works out plots and incidents of the comedies in consultation.

Arthur Beck in Serial Field

Organizes Serial Productions Company; "Isle of Jewels" the First

THE producing activities of Arthur F. Beck are to include the field of serials. To handle the production of the "continued-next-week" features, he has organized the Arthur F. Beck Serial Productions, Inc., of which he is President and Treasurer.

The first of the three big fifteen episode serials is now in the course of production at the Crystal Studios. It is Chas. T. Dazey's melodramatic story the "Isle of Jewels," and the release date has been announced by Pathe as being the latter part of September.

Work on the second serial production will start immediately after the release date of the "Isle of Jewels". The title of same is not ready for publication but a surprise is promised the field of serialdom by Mr. Beck when the story is made known.

In the meantime some episodes are being steadily added to the belt of Perry Vekroff, the director of the "Isle of Jewels".

The scenes of this production are laid throughout the entire world and the heroine, played by Miss Frankie Mann, is pursued by the arch criminal, Stuart Holmes, from New York to Arizona, thence to Chinatown, San Francisco, and then by boat to the South Sea Islands, from which the picture obtains its title.

Trailed by the hero, played by Wilfred Lytell, the pursuit leads to Calcutta, Bagdad, the Arabian Desert, Cairo, Monte Carlo, South America and then back to the Isle of Jewels, Love, Romance and Adventure.

The actual taking of the scenes require the company to go to Florida, Cuba, and then aboard ship for about two weeks cruising in the Gulf of Mexico, landing in Texas for the ranch scenes and then completing the balance of the interior scenes in New York City.

President Arthur F. Beck states that he will keep the serial companies working at a separate studio from his feature companies, in order that ample room be given for the handling of intricate, thrill bearing stunts that are essential for successful serials.

Three Goldwyn Directors

Julian, Hunter and Worsley Added to Care for Increased Studio Activity

TO meet the increased production which the reorganization of the Goldwyn Pictures' Corporation requires, three new directors have been added to the Goldwyn roster. They are Rupert Julian, T. Hayes Hunter and Wallace Worsley. In personality they differ as much from each other as in their hobbies, their tastes, and their particular abilities.

Mr. Julian has directed Monroe Salisbury, Ruth Clifford and Mary MacLaren. He has also acted in numerous photoplays. His first production for Goldwyn will be Gertrude Atherton's "Perch of the Devil."

Another product of the theatre, now a director, is T. Hayes Hunter, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Hunter produced "The Border Legion" for Goldwyn in 1918, although the picture was not released until the spring of the following year. Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth starred in this Zane Grey story.

From Wappinger Falls, N. Y., hails the third of the trio of new Goldwyn directors, Wallace Worsley. Like Mr. Hunter, he headed straight for the footlights after Brown University of Providence, R. I., had entrusted him with an A. B. sheepskin for life.

Mr. Worsley has had a full career as a screen actor and director.

His first Goldwyn production has not yet been assigned.

Diversified Topics in Screen Magazine

Universal's New Screen Magazine scheduled for release August 15, is replete with subjects that have a general appeal for interests. One subject is given over to Master Edmund F. Barker, the twelve-year-old suburbanite of Los Angeles, Cal., who is editor, proprietor, printer and owner of the Athens Oracle, perhaps the most unique publication in the country.

Under the caption "Harnessing Lightning" is shown the operation of a modern miracle, the telephone plant, serving thousands of subscribers.

Signor Falconi is also represented with an illustrated article on how to read character by the way one sharpens a pencil. A little lesson in lap-dog etiquette is contributed by Louise Dresser, one of vaudeville's top-liners, which is both amusing and instructive—if you have a lap-dog.

Bluejackets to First See "Blue Bonnet"

Billie Rhodes in "The Blue Bonnet," National Film Corporation's first release for Hodkinson distribution, will have her American premiere presentation at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, beginning August 10, the week on which the Pacific Fleet touches San Pedro, loosing 30,000 men in the South California City.

Emil Kehrlein, manager of the Kinema, has deferred his presentation of a picture by a big star and booked in "The Blue Bonnet" as the one production which he figures will have the largest appeal for the fleet visitors and the several hundred thousand persons from the Southwest who will come to town to see America's naval heroes.

Monopol Offers Two on State Right Market

A small folder attractively announcing the fact that "Alma Where Do You Live?" and "Crimson Shoals" is read for State rights distribution has been gotten out by Monopol Pictures Company. The "Alma" picture stars, George Larkin and Ruth MacTamany and "Crimson Shoals" features Francis Ford.

Stuart Holmes, co-starred with Frankie Mann in the serial, "The Isle of Jewels," to be released by Pathe

Not One Exterior in "Fair and Warmer"

"Fair and Warmer", the farce success by Avery Hopwood which has been fashioned by June Mathis and A. P. Younger into a screen vehicle, in which the charming May Allison will make her first in Screen Classics, Inc., productions under Metro's "fewer and better" pictures policy, has the distinction of being a motion picture in which not a single scene is laid in the out-of-doors.

"Fair and Warmer" is being directed by Henry Otto, and photographed by Arthur Martinelli.

Rolfe's Staff Complete

B. A. Rolfe has rounded out the staff which is to assist him in the making of B. A. Rolfe productions for the new firm of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.

Mr. Rolfe himself will supervise and direct the staging of all subjects, with the co-operation of Chester DeVonde. His staff includes: Arthur A. Caldwell, chief cameraman; Patrick Carey, technical director; A. B. V. Flower, art director; John J. Kieley, film editor.

Mr. Rolfe is working at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, N. Y. His first subject is Robert W. Chambers' "The Shining Band." Charles A. Logue made the adaptation.

Universal Outfits Busy on Western Dramas

Five directors are busily engaged at Universal City in the making of two-reel western dramas, under William Pigott who is acting as supervising director of productions.

Robert E. Wells has taken a company headed by Fritzie Ridgway, to Colorado Springs to make "The Ranger of Pike's Peak," using the mountain top as the location for the scenes. Herbert Hayes and Harry Schumm have the leading masculine roles.

George Holt is producing "Tempest Cody, Sheriff," one of the Tempest Cody series in which daring Marie Walcamp is seen as the chief peace officer of a wild western town.

Edward Kull is producing two reel westerns with Pete Morrison and Josephine Hill as the stars. Reeves Eason has just completed "The Jack of Hearts" starring Jack Perrin and Josephine Hill. Jack Wells is now shooting "The Crow," the first of the two-reelers starring "Hoot" Gibson and Mildred Moore.

First National Branch Film Men's Mecca

The First National Exhibitors' exchange of Louisville has become a Mecca for exhibitors of Kentucky and Tennessee. They come direct to Louisville to buy films and naturally come to the First National Exchange as that is the only one in Louisville.

So numerous have the visitors become and such is their interest in going through the big plant of the First National exchange that Miss Helen Doerr of the First National staff has been appointed official guide, to show the visitors the fine points of an up-to-date picture exchange.

Veteran of War Joins Bulls-Eye Company

With a German machine-gun bullet still imbedded in his right shoulder, but otherwise none the worst for his experience in France, Sid Smith, motion picture comedian, has joined Bulls-Eye.

"Bunk" Is Subordinated to Truth

IN line with the sentiments expressed is an editorial in Motion Picture News of July 26, to the effect that the public of today wants picture facts and not bunk, Metro makes announcement that such will be its policy in publicity and advertising.

"News and facts—not bunk" is Metro's publicity slogan, just as it was expressed by Mr. Johnson in his article, which calls attention to another special contribution to Mtion Picture News of the same issue from the pen of Charles B. Taylor, photoplay editor of the Buffalo Evening News and publicity director for three picture theatres in Buffalo.

"Give us the facts," was Mr. Taylor's demand.

"If producers really intend to cooperate with exhibitors in exploitation of features," said Mr. Taylor, "then the publicity aids must needs undergo a revolutionary change. The 'hoy' must be relegated to oblivion and facts, facts, facts choked down the neck of the press sheet until it hollers 'stop!'"

Here again is precisely what Metro publicity is designed to be, according to the campaign planned and now being followed. Metro officials declare that the Metro publicity and advertising departments shall, on a basis of equal importance, be a bureau of helpful information to the exhibitor and the source of big, vital motion picture news stories crammed with facts and stripped of the old-time "hokum" and

Metro Departments See Public's Wants and Will Answer

"jazz," prepared by newspaper men for newspapers with a view to meeting the needs of the photoplay editors.

The Metro publicity and advertising departments, it is emphasized, solicit and welcome requests for aid from exhibitors of Metro releases, produced by Screen Classics, Inc., who seek any assistance whatever in exploiting these pitcures.

Exploitation is to mean advertising aids, specially prepared and edited press material, suggestions for "stunts," lobby displays and other sales helps. Metro pledges that these will be cheerfully furnished without stint, and furthermore, they will be particularly suited to the needs of the exhibitor in relation to the size of his theatre and the character of the community that it serves.

For the newspapers, Metro's publicity bureau is prepared to give the editors what they want and in the form in which they want it. The news sense of the newspaper men who write and edit Metro copy is brought to bear upon every item, whether it be a brevity or a special article that is sent to the press of the country—both in "shorts," feature stories and filler sheets.

Greater care and more times are devoted, under the new press regime at Metro, to elaborate illustrated press sheets than ever before. These combine a wealth of suggestions to the exhibitor with an abundance of newspaper stories about the Screen Classics, Inc., super-productions—all based on facts—edited and arranged to accommodate every newspaper requirement. These stories may be clipped or copied and presented, without any alteration save the insertion of the theatre name, to the photoplay editors with perfect assurance that they will be used.

And, as Metro officials insist, the publicity matter conforms strictly with the opinions already quoted herein of two well-informed picture men, in that it gives the newspaper editor "facts—not bunk."

Garson Studios A Model In Detail

H. K. SOMBORN, president of the newly formed Equity Pictures Corporation, left for the Coast Aug. 2 to consult with Clara Kimball Young in regard to the first production, "Eyes of Youth," on which Miss Young has been at work for the past three weeks, and at the same time to inspect the new Garson Studios, where Miss Young will make all her future productions which are to be released by Equity.

The Garson Studios are one of the most complete plants in the West and has built its home on a four-acre tract in the very heart of the Edendale district, in Los Angeles. The grounds, building and construction of every sort have been carried out along the beautiful old mission lines that have made the early architecture of Southern California famous throughout the world. The entrance gate and its high stone walls for an exact reproduction of the famous walls of the San Gabriel Mission which was established by the Franciscan fathers only a short distance from Los Angeles, about the time of the Revolutionary War. The belfry of this gate and of the adjoining buildings are all adorned with the replica of the old mission chimes. The walls of the grounds are twenty feet in thickness in places and house a large number of the dressing rooms.

One of the striking features of the plant is the great stage which is entirely enclosed and built of stucco, conforming to the general scheme of old architecture, and yet embodying every new idea, convenience and principle of the very latest requirements of motion picture stages. The stage stands well over sixty feet in height and its floor space is one hundred and forty-five feet square, giving considerably over twenty thousand square feet of stage room. Extending across one end of this big stage is the scene dock with capacity to handle the flat equipment of a dozen or more productions. Adjoining the stage on the south are the carpenter shops, while the scenic, property and plaster departments are grouped in such a way as to permit of contact with the stage, beneath an old Spanish arcade affording protection and convenience in any sort of weather.

The camera department is one of the most completely equipped buildings of its kind in the motion picture business. It houses projection rooms, a department for the output of stills, experimental offices and an elaborate portrait gallery, together with cutting rooms and various other departments.

The executive building and building of operations complete the studio equipment with the exception of the most highly prized building on the grounds, the bungalow dressing rooms for Clara Kimball Young.

The studios were built by Edward W. Butcher, studio manager for Garson Studios, Inc., under the supervision of Harry Garson. The plans were created by John Voshell, the technical director. The Garson Studios, Inc., have begun operations with the following executive staff: Harry Garson, President and Director General; Edward W. Butcher, Studio Manager, Claude B. Edington, Audit Department; John M. Voshell, Art Director; Jack Boland, Purchasing Agent; Arthur Edeson, Photography; Harry Collins, Electrical Department; Jack Bennett, Construction; Frank Pondalac, Drapery Department; Cash Shockey, Scenic Artist, and Charles Sewall, Properties.

"Eyes of Youth" which is the first of four big productions to be released by them starring Miss Young, will be the biggest and most elaborate in which this star has ever appeared. The release date is set for October.

Hattons Rest Prior to Further Metro Work

Word has come to Metro Pictures Corporation from Frederic and Fanny Hatton that these dramatic collaborators are rusticating for the summer at their lodge, "Lockehaven", deep in the woods at Wequetonsing, Michigan. The Hattons impart the news that they will return to New York early in September, after which they are planning a flying trip to southern California.

Metro has acquired the screen rights to two of the Hattons' most recent and most successful stage plays, "Lombardi, Ltd.", and "The Walk Offs", for production by Screen Classics, Inc.

"Oh Boy" Making Records in Bookings

In spite of the most adverse elements, the Capellani screen production of the musical comedy success "Oh Boy," which Pathe is distributing, is being booked rapidly as a summer and early fall attraction.

During the recent hot and rainy spell, "Oh Boy" was booked by scores of theatres for runs that extended above their usual allotment of days. An unusual number of full week runs were contracted for, exhibitors evidently realizing they can obtain the fullest advantage to be gained from the fact that "Oh Boy" was a great stage triumph by giving the film an extended exploitation.

Kunz Brothers, directors of the Princess Theatre in Springfield, have contracted for a week's run on "Oh Boy," at the highest price they ever paid for any feature motion picture. They are also giving the Capellani feature a week's showing, the longest run ever accorded a picture in their theatre.

Setting a Time Record in Production

With the announcement this week of October 5th as the release date for the Arthur F. Beck serial, "The Isle of Jewels," it is evident that a new time record for serial production must be set if the Pathe serial program is to keep up to its schedule. Perry Vekroff, director, declares his work at the Crystal Studios and at the various locations is so systematized that the production will be ready for Pathe's thirty-one branch offices as far in advance of release date as any previous serial.

Stuart Holmes and Frances Mann, the featured players, with their supporting cast, including John Webb Dillion, Wilfred Lytell, John P. Wade, Billy Welch, Elaine Adams, Karl Dane and Sam Kim, a noted Chinese actor, began their work under Director Vekroff at the Crystal Studio in New York City about two weeks ago.

Robertson-Cole's Outlook

Increased Prosperity Reflected in Multitude of Bookings Being Made

ADVICES received from various Exhibitors Mutual exchanges show that more theatres will reopen within the next few weeks than at any previous time in the history of the motion picture industry. Practically every community of importance reports schedules openings of new and rebuilded theatres. Robertson-Cole is receiving an exceptionally large proportion of this new business according to advance bookings reported by Exhibitors' Mutual.

"There is one big reason for this unusual expansion," according to an official of the Robertson-Cole organization who is in close touch with exhibitors, "and that is, the public seems to have an insatiable desire for amusement. This has benefited the motion picture theatres, amusement parks and legitimate houses.

"The stabilization of conditions following the period of post-war uncertainty has given the exhibitor confidence and to answer the demand, theatres that were closed because of economic conditions and the epidemic during the past year, are reopening and capital is being secured to build new houses.

"The public today, demands comfort and better pictures. It was always thought that the theatre which housed legitimate stage productions had reached the height of beauty and comfort, but with the erection of the modern motion picture theatres the legitimate house has fallen into second place. When one stops to consider the number of million dollar motion picture edifices built and now in course of construction, one can get an idea of the importance of the silent drama and the trend of the public mind. A similar degree of comfort and luxuriousness is even demanded in the smaller theatres.

"Returned prosperity is being made to satisfy the amusement demand by furnishing capital. In the Southwest the oil boom, the influx of many people, and the building of towns has given the exhibition a new field and dozens of houses are in course of construction in that territory alone."

"Sahara" Continues Big Summer Attraction

J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, big Louise Glaum production, "Sahara," continues to prove itself of value to exhibitors as a picture which overcomes summer weather conditions and draws the public into theatres. The newest achievement of "Sahara" is to break the house patronage record of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, during the last week in July.

This information is contained in a week-end message from F. A. Miller and Harry Leonhardt, owners of the California, following an earlier telegram sent after the opening a week ago that "Sahara" was playing to capacity business.

The two Hodkinson managers in Ohio, W. F. Seymour at Cleveland, and Frank W. Hawking at Cincinnati, report similar experiences of the big first runs in the key cities of Ohio.

Demand for Fox Excels

As announced from the Fox Film Corporation offices, bookings on "The Splendid Sin" up to date give most satisfactory assurances not only of a large and widely distributed endorsement of the work of Miss Traverse, but of the whole expanded Excel program. These bookings, it is argued, are proof of the success of the efforts of William Fox to make of these pictures a perfectly rounded and balanced combination that supplies heart stories, lighter drama and "happy comedies," all of them full of box office possibilities.

Captain Stone to Make Series for Prizma

Prizma, Incorporated, announces that it has just engaged Captain George E. Stone to make a series of microscopic studies in color with a Prizma camera. Captain Stone is an expert in the field of photographic optics and some of his microscopic pictures of cell life, growing plants and flowers and unconventional slow motion studies, have attracted wide attention to the entertainment and educational field. Captain Stone made Prizma's "Trout," a one-reel study photographed in natural colors of the life of trout from the spawn to maturity. He is also the producer of the black and white series "How Life Begins."

"A Favor to a Friend" Released August 11

Metro announces that the last of Emmy Wehlen's all-star series program offerings, "A Favor to a Friend," will be released August 11. The production is a five-part comedy drama of the romantic type in which the star has done her best and most successful work, and is even more replete with action and thrills than her "The Amateur Adventuress" or "Fools and Their Money."

Alice Brady Finishing First for Realart

When it was announced that the exteriors for "Sinners," Alice Brady's first Realart production would be taken on Nantucket Island, tongues started wagging in film circles as the little isle off the coast of Rhode Island had never before known the the megaphone of the director or the grind of the camera. The initial venture has been watched with great interest by the profession and it is believed that the place will hereafter be a favored spot for photoplays requiring New England locale. Miss Brady is still at work on this production of "Sinners." After its completion she will remain on the island until the end of the month vacationing.

Miss Brady's return to New York will be in time for her to go on the "subway circuit" in "Forever After."

"Short Subjects Still Gain Popularity"

"The popularity of the short subject has increased two-fold within the last season and in many cases a short subject has been exploited as much as a feature." This statement was made this week by Tarkington Baker, Universal's general manager.

In discussing the success of Universal's short subjects Mr. Baker said: "We find that the large and small exhibitor have great need for the shorter subject. The larger exhibitor to round out his program and the smaller one to feature several short subjects. It is only proper to point out the fact that during the past few months the large Broadway theatres have booked and presented many Universal short subjects, including the Western pictures. This is an unprecedented action, and proves conclusively that the short subject is desired by the public."

Perhaps the greatest series of short subjects ever produced is the Stage Women's War Relief series which Universal is releasing. This is the highest price series of short subjects ever offered to exhibitors.

Paramount Week Brings Requests

Exhibitors Flood F. P.-Lasky Offices with Messages

WITH September 1st drawing near and Paramount-Artcraft Week not far distant, exhibitors throughout the country are preparing for record-breaking business according to wires, letters and messages received at the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation particularly during the past week, from managers.

The great advertising and publicity campaign in which exhibitors will be given $10,000 worth of free accessories has made the coming Paramount-Artcraft Week a bigger business opportunity for exhibitors than even last year's week. In over a hundred cities, full-page advertisements will be taken. This advertising will carry to the public the dominant note in the campaign, will illustrate the trade mark of the week (part of the date calendar already seen in trade-paper copy) which is to be carried in the big Saturday Evening Post advertisement as well as in all other advertising during the week, and will provide space for the listing of all theatres in the territory, which join in this demonstration.

The Paramount-Artcraft Week of 1919 will be more acceptable to the exhibitors in the smaller towns than last year, in that special arrangements have been made to see that he is given the same co-operation and free advertising as the larger theatres.

Advertising material on the Paramount-Artcraft Girl (Who Is She?) is now being spread broadcast and has already started to cause no end of speculation and interest among the public. The identity of the Paramount-Artcraft Girl, whose likeness is reproduced by Henry Hutt, the famous artist, is known only to a few of the executives in the Famous-Lasky offices. Slides and other material is available to exhibitors who can work up this stunt as a great business booster for the week, the details of which will be explained to exhibitors by Paramount-Artcraft exchange men.

Walter E. Greene, Vice-President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, is highly pleased with the reports coming in concerning Paramount-Artcraft Week. "It will undoubtedly be the biggest week for Paramount-Artcraft exhibitors, just as it will be for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The truly remarkable advertising and publicity campaign for the "big week," backed by Paramount-Artcraft merit in motion pictures, will surely give exhibitors even greater results this year than last. As the reports from exhibitors indicate, this is a real business opportunity for the live-wire manager to score a ten-strike. It is most gratifying to see how the trade is taking to the idea. Our organization is now being pressed with the rush of activities in connection with the handling of arrangement for Paramount-Artcraft Week and we are working night and day to give one hundred per cent. service for the event."

Goldwyn Nation-Wide Campaign

Advertising to Aid All Exhibitors Primary Consideration

ONE of the biggest nation-wide advertising campaigns ever instituted by a producing company soon will be launched by Goldwyn Pictures along lines designed to bring direct returns to the exhibitor. Over a million dollars will be expended in building up new business for Goldwyn exhibitors and Goldwyn pictures; all worth-while mediums of reaching the public being utilized, including magazines, newspapers and billboards.

A plan is being perfected whereby the Goldwyn advertising will be designed to meet conditions in every locality. The needs of a certain section of the country, a city, or even a small town, will be studied carefully so that advertising may be arranged especially to aid local exhibitors.

Goldwyn's advertising staff is studying from all angles the theory and actual operation of national advertising as applied to motion pictures. The campaign is being laid out on lines mutually beneficial to Goldwyn and to Goldwyn exhibitors. There will be some definite objective for every dollar expended and the results will be checked up closely in order to make certain that the point aimed at is being reached.

This policy of concentration is in accord with the most advanced methods of scientific advertising and in contrast with the expensive, but ineffective hit or miss plan of "general" publicity that is not directed at a special audience.

The details of the Goldwyn system are being worked out with the most elaborate care so that no point may be overlooked. The goal will have been attained when Goldwyn Pictures have been brought to the attention of every photoplay patron and every prospective patron in a manner that will bring business to the box office of exhibitors running the films.

Some of the facts being kept in mind are that no publication or group of publications, even if their circulation runs into the millions, can be expected to cover the field completely; that to achieve its purpose, advertising must do more than establish a name; it must bring about the sale of the product advertised; that in some instances small local publications reach a certain element not touched by great national magazines, and that there are many channels as yet unused through which a great public may be reached.

Strong Film Opens Bigger Excel Program

With the ear-catching, eye-catching title of "The Splendid Sin," the first William Fox release on his expanded and improved Excel picture program promised for the coming season stands as one of the most intense heart-gripping photoplays of the year. The release is set for September 14, and Madlaine Traverse is the star.

The cast includes such widely-known names as Charles Clary, Jeanne Calhoun, Wheeler Oakman, Elinor Hancock, George Hackathorn and Edwin Booth Tilton.

Metro Purchases Savage Play

Will Make Elaborate Production of "Along Came Ruth," with May Allison

SCREEN Classics, Inc., announces the purchase of the screen rights to Henry W. Savage's stage success, "Along Came Ruth." It will be produced as a starring vehicle for May Allison, according to a statement by Maxwell Karger, director general of Screen Classics, Inc. The comedy drama was written by Holman Day from the French play, "La Demoiselle de Magasin," by Fonson and Wicheler.

When presented in New York, "Along Came Ruth," with Irene Fenwick in the leading feminine role, had a most successful and extended run. One of the members of the original stage cast was Joseph Kilgour, who will be remembered for his excellent enactment of important parts in Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., productions. Mr. Kilgour recently portrayed with his characteristic ease the worldly-wise circus owner in "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day," a Metro picture starring Bert Lytell. His work in this picture won him the part of Bob Tarrant, the man-about-town in "Lombardi, Ltd.," a new Lytell special now in course of production at the Screen Classics, Inc., studios in Hollywood.

While the supporting cast has not as yet been selected for "Along Came Ruth," it has been intimated that Maxwell Karger probably will cast Mr. Kilgour for the part which he played with such success in the stage production.

"Along Came Ruth" deals with the rejuvenating of a little store in a small town. The establishment was going to seed through obsolete methods when along came Ruth, a girl whose beauty, ideas and personality soon changed the course of events. A most charming romance is interwoven with the events of the story.

With May Allison in the leading part the Screen Classics, Inc., organization believes the screen version will be even better than the original. The adaptation will be made by June Mathis, head of the Screen Classics, Inc., scenario staff. It may be that Miss Mathis will do the entire script. She at least will supervise its writing in collaboration with one of the other expert scenario writers under her direction. And Mr. Karger, as director general, will personally supervise every detail of the production.

Seattle "Adopts" Actress

Beatrice Michelena, Robertson-Cole Player, Is Given a Great Reception

SEATTLE adopted Beatriz Michelena, the Robertson-Cole star whose productions are distributed by Exhibitors Mutual when she arrived there to attend the convention of the Northwest Film Board of Trade. The city was officially represented by Reginald Parsons, President of the Chamber of Commerce but it was the spontaneous welcome from the people that denoted the scope of the star's popularity.

"Amid the cheers and applause of hundreds of enthusiastic and curious lovers of the silent drama and the din of automobile horns, Beatriz Michelena, the singing star of the screen, arrived in town Thursday noon," is the way Walter Anthony describes her arrival in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. He continued:

"Beatriz Michelena was accorded a royal reception and was given hearty greetings by Reginald Parsons, President of the Chamber of Commerce. She was welcomed by the film interests of the Pacific Northwest, as represented by W. C. Drummond. The cranking of motion picture operators and the clicking of many cameras were familiar sounds to the star as she gracefully accepted a huge basket of roses, the city's token of love.

"During the procession up Second Avenue the star threw roses to the smiling spectators. She was escorted to the Masonic Temple where a banquet awaited her.

New Farrar Release Is Heralded Her Best

A print of "The World and Its Woman," the new Geraldine Farrar drama, recently completed by Director Frank Lloyd for Goldwyn, was received at the home office yesterday and viewed by Samuel Goldwyn and the executive heads of the corporation, who were unanimous in pronouncing it the most dramatic, stirring and memorable picture in which the famous grand prima donna has appeared.

Advance reports from the coast indicated a picture of extraordinary worth, but instead of overstating the facts, it appears that the glowing reports are more than justified by the completed product, which, besides being a dramatic picture designed and carried through on a massive scale, has the advantage of being distinctly timely.

"The World and Its Woman" is a story of modern Russia that is wonderfully successful in reflecting the urge and sweep of the human forces that have awakened the great, slumbering giant among nations into a seething maelstorm of social chaos. It is not propaganda for or against any order of government, existing or deposed, rather the picture is modelled along lines of true drama in which startling events are unfolded in their correct perspective and allowed to convey their own message.

Miss Farrar has a role affording ample scope for her dramatic talents.

Third Episode of "Into the Chasm" Thrilling

"Into the Chasm," the third episode of the Western Photoplays-Pathe serial, co-starring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison, opens as Ralph Darrell (Mr. Hutchison) dives from the top of a 125-foot grain elevator and escapes from the thugs from whom he has just rescued Aline Morton (Miss Luther).

Soon afterwards, while walking along the street, Ralph sees Nell (Miss Luther) the only person who can clear him of guilt for the killing of his friend, Harding. He follows Nell to the apartment of Blake where he is captured and overcome. He is left in the apartment which is filled with gas from a jet turned on by the crooks in their flight, but again manages to escape death. He learns from Aline that she and her father are going to the Golconda Mine, and arranges to join them there.

The crooks, led by Blake, also follow, and take quarters near the mine. In their effort to kidnap Aline whom they mean to hold for ransom, they scare the horse on which she is riding, and it runs away. The animal plunges over a steep cliff into a pool with Aline on its back.

Selznick Signs Ruggles

Continuing his policy to obtain the best men in the motion picture field to co-operate with his stars and give the public the finest pictures the screen has ever seen, Myron Selznick announces that he has signed Wesley H. Ruggles to direct Owen Moore in the first of his series of Selznick Pictures.

Helen McKellar, who will appear in Broadhurst's new play, "The Storm," and is being sought with inducements to star on the screen

Helen MacKellar, Stage Star, for Pictures?

With rivalry between producers increasing in the search for stars of ability and personality, it is rumored another stage star who is believed to have every requisite talent for screen success is being sought for by a number of bidders.

This actress, Helen MacKellar, will be seen on Broadway in the leading role of the coming Broadhurst play, "The Storm." At the premier of the play in Atlantic City several weeks ago, Miss MacKellar, according to the critics' reviews, scored a great personal success. The play is expected in New York in October, and in the meantime picture producers are said to be after the star with big figure offers.

Miss MacKellar will be remembered most recently for her work in "The Unknown Purple," in which play she had an unsympathetic part, but made such an impression that the Metropolitan critics gave her more than ordinary mention. Five years ago Louis Kline, now with Broadhurst, and then dramatic critic of the Atlantic City Press, predicted Miss MacKellar would be a star within five years. Such has come to pass and it is now a question if, like Constance Binney, Miss MacKellar will listen to the allurements of the screen.

Millarde an Old Timer in Pictures

Harry Millarde, who is directing William F. Russell, the new Fox star, in the latter's first Victory picture, "Sacred Silence," is an all-round man who practically grew up on the stage and screen. He went upon the stage when fifteen years of age, with a stock company at Wilmington, Del., and after leaving that city and playing in stock in Cleveland and Denver, he attained to parts with the stars.

In making the explosion scene in "Wolves of the Night" when a mine shaft is dynamited to imprison the hero, William Farnum and his supporting cast in the new Fox Picture had to take unusual chances because, of course an abandoned working had to be used.

UNIVERSAL BUYS STORIES FOR JAMES J. CORBETT

THE recent announcement that James J. Corbett was to star in some exceptional photodramas during the coming year is confirmed by the statement from Universal this week which tells of the purchase of the screen rights to "Pals," a story written by Edmund Day. Mr. Corbett will not be new to the play "Pals," as he had the leading role in this play when it was given a stage production.

Another story purchased for Mr. Corbett is "The Prince of Avenue A," written by Charles T. Dazey especially for Mr. Corbett. The author of this story is widely known as the author of "In Old Kentucky."

This announcement is one of the first of many which are expected from Universal relating to the purchase of widely known and read stories for screen production.

Mayer Entourage Here From West

Producer with "Wally" Young, Zeidman and Shea in New York

AFTER three strenuous months at the coast, Louis B. Mayer, producer for Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin, arrived here Monday, accompanied by Bennie Ziedman, general manager of the Chaplin organization, Waldemar Young, scenario writer and Billy Shea, head cutter. Mr. Mayer was filled to the top of his head with plans for the coming year, and most enthusiastic over what he accomplished during his stay in Los Angeles.

When he went to the coast, it was primarily to get away from business and enjoy a complete rest. His doctor ordered a change of climate and rather reluctantly agreed to allow the change to include a trip to California. But he insisted that while there Mayer refrain from doing business of any kind.

And this is the way Mayer followed his instructions: He had hardly brushed the dust of the Sante Fe railroad from his clothes after alighting at Los Angeles than he signed Mildred Harris Chaplin, wife of the famous "Charlie," on a long time contract to produce pictures for him. Then he organized a $5,000,000 corporation, to be known as the Mayer Productions, Inc. His next move was to beguile Bennie Zeidman away from Douglas Fairbanks, to become general manager of the Harris-Chaplin organization. No one knows how Mayer accomplished this last, not even Zeidman himself. "He must have hypnotized me," said Benny. "I had been with Fairbanks so long that he was almost a religion with me, I've never had the slightest desire to leave him, and I did not believe that anyone could induce me to do it. I'll say this Mayer is some wonder."

After six hours' rest, from 2 to 8 A. M., Mayer went out to see Marshall Neilan direct Miss Stewart in "Her Kingdom of Dreams." Remembering the doctor's orders, he contented himself with taking part in mob scenes, taking still pictures of Stewart and the big cast, and juggling some scenery. Then he went back to engage in a few conferences.

A few days later he conceived the idea of building a studio for his own exclusive use. Looking over the ground he discovered an ideal site, and on investigating found that it was owned by William N. Selig. He lost no time in getting in touch with that gentleman, and a series of interviews resulted in a combination for the purpose of immediately erecting an up-to-date studio building. The studio itself will be equipped to take care of four companies. It will have two dark and two open-air stages. The administration building will be of Colonial architecture, and the whole proposition will compare favorably with any studio now on the West Coast. The deal with Selig also includes a number of unproduced plays and hooks in the Colonel's famous library, which will serve as vehicles for special Mayer productions.

Mayer then proceeded to get together a complete producing organization. He engaged Waldemar Young and Elliott Clawson as scenario writers. Mr. Young is already engaged in preparing the scenario of the first Harris-Chaplin production, work on which will be started in October. He corralled Billy Shea, head cutter for Douglas Fairbanks, to act in the same capacity for the Mayer Productions. And he engaged Del Clawson, who attracted so much attention by his work for Lois Weber.

And this is the way Mayer followed the doctor's orders, and rested while on the Coast. Nothing could be learned about the plan of distribution of the Harris-Chaplin pictures. Mayer distributes his Stewart pictures through the First National, and so First National would seem to have first call on the distribution of the Harris-Chaplin output. But it is said that at least one other big distributing company is angling for them, and the final result will not be known for a week or more.

Carey Signed Again by Universal

Harry Carey, who has been a star in Western motion pictures for more than four years has signed another long term contract with the Universal company. This announcement was made this week from the Universal home offices.

Harry Carey one of the best-known screen stars portraying Western characters in the entire country. The fact that his popularity is seldomed equalled was evidenced by the many receptions held for him on a tour of the country early last spring.

His most recent screen successes are "The Ace of the Saddle" and "The Outcasts of Poker Flat." He is now working on an original production titled "The Rider of the Law."

Extreme Realism Brings Hurts to Nazimova

Nazimova carried the realism of her acting in "The Brat", her forthcoming release so far that after one particularly turbulent scene she was covered with bruises and suffered an injury to her wrist that narrowly escaped being a fracture of the bone.

The scene in question was one of the earlier episodes in Nazimova's and Charles Bryant's adaptation of Maude Fulton's stage success. The setting was a crude laundry in the basement of a slum tenement, where "the brat", a pitiful waif, earns scant bed and board by helping her slatterly aunt who runs the laundry.

Each time a scene showing the brat braving the wrath of an aunt and police officers was taken, Nazimova proclaimed the scene "too slow." As a result she was hurled around and across the set nine times with painful results, ere a halt was called.

Will Film Shantung for Bull's-Eye Film Corporation

Bulls Eye Film Corporation, announced last week the early release of a series of travel pictures to be made by L. J. ("Dick") Burrud, producer of many American and foreign travelogues.

Mr. Burrud will visit China, and make a series of pictures of the Shantung peninsula, which the Paris peace conference awarded to Japan, and over which there is much discussion in Washington. In the brief interval before making his China trip, Mr. Burrud will complete some American views which he recently begun.

"Dick" Burrud is one of the pioneers in travelogue photography, and has the distinction of having received the commendation of the United States Government for his pictures of the Yosemite Valley and the new Roosevelt National Park.

Geraldine Farrar's second Goldwyn Picture this season is to be a gorgeous master-production. It is now well under way with Reginald Barker directing the prima donna and her husband, Lou Tellegren.

The massive sets, true in every particular to Russian architecture, as it is found today in the revolution-torn country, are a conspicuous feature of the latest Geraldine Farrar picture, "The World and Its Woman," directed by Frank Lloyd.

"Westerners" a Hit in New York

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON'S first Great Authors production, "The Westerners," from the novel of Stewart Edward White and distributed by W. W. Hodkinson, received an enthusiastic welcome at its New York Strand opening last week. The theatre played to turnaway business with packed lobbies and a line out to the edge of the Broadway sidewalk and the critics of the New York dailies gave the first author-supervised picture to reach the metropolitan market most unusual attention.

Jack Eaton, managing director of the Strand, and Carl Edouarde, the musical director, gave "The Westerners" a most distinctive scenic and vocal setting, building an atmosphere that led the audience into the tensest attention to a sincerely told story. Mr. Eaton also departed from the customary stereotyped New York method of advertising a production with what is merely "label" announcements.

Mr. Eaton personally wrote his own advertising and sold the story to the varied metropolitan minds with different copy in each of the fourteen newspapers of greater New York carrying Strand copy.

New York Sun: "It is regrettable that the National Board of Review isn't composed entirely of authors and other writing persons, who are supposed to know nothing about the movies. Then, perhaps, one would see more productions banned, while approval and stimulus would be given to photoplays of the excellence of 'The Westerners,' which was revealed at the Strand yesterday as proof that a novel could be transplanted to the screen without withering in the new soil. 'The Westerners' was generally awaited in screen circles as the forerunner of the promised author-supervised pictures. Mr. White may know nothing about the movies, but he is liberally supplied with brains. Consequently his personal editing of his story has given rise to a picture that holds the interest from start to finish."

New York Herald: "'The Westerners' is a breezy picturization of Stewart Edward White's famous novel of the same name, and it was especially enjoyable to the spectators at the Strand. It gives a big and fine cast splendid opportunities for convincing drama.

New York American: "'The Westerners' throbs with red blood. With a story that has romance and action for the screen, the picture is further abetted by having as fine a set of subtitles as the screen has offered in many a day. The screen drama follows closely in the ways of the book from which it is taken and is presented with the co-operation of the author."

New York Telegraph: "'The Westerners' brings us something new; something more than gunmen and galloping and dance halls. The drama is told in a continuously interesting manner and there is every evidence of the picture having been made with great care. There is a large, competent cast of well known players."

New York World: "The first of the Great Authors Pictures to reach Broadway, 'The Westerners,' has a tremendous virility. It is the welcomed attraction at the Strand this week."

Serials Upheld by Krellberg

Producer of New Helen Holmes Film, Says They Fill Demand for Thrills

S. S. KRELLBERG, president of the S. S. L. K. Serial Corp., who is now producing the new Helen Holmes Serial, "The Fatal Fortune", is perhaps one of the oldest film men in the business today. He has been associated in every branch of the game.

As an exhibitor he fully realizes the necessity of advertising and he attributes his successful career to that medium.

"If a man were to have for sale a five dollar gold piece at three dollars and not advertise that fact, he would never sell it" and the same thing applies to advertising a good serial. If the exhibitor sticks up a couple of one sheets and some photos in the lobby of his theatre he will wonder why it does not go over.

"The spirit of adventure which is so characteristic with the American people, demands and expects thrills, mystery, suspense and plenty of action.

"A good serial which has these necessary qualifications is bound to be a success. It is something separate and distinct from the ordinary play. It is more accumulative in its effect on the mind, more stimulating and persisting in its impressions. It gives full freedom to invention and artifice conception as well as picturization, and seems to be especially suited to satisfy the public demand in these adventurous and exciting times.

"The serial may be termed the dime novel of the screen. Today the book novels are an unsatisfactory method for moulding the young minds and not sufficient to upbuild the imaginative faculties. The effect of reading these novels depends on the eloquence of the reader.

"The film version of these dramas has supplanted this medium of entertainment for the young, and it stimulates far more effectively the mental process, than by reading.

"But the younger generation is not alone a factor to the success of the serial, for many maiden hearts have executed delightful thrills when their worshipful eyes, fall on the hero as he enters the frame or when he foils the villain.

"The Crooked Dagger" Has Strong Cast

The complete cast for the forthcoming Wharton serial for the Pathe program, "The Crooked Dagger," starring Jack Norworth, has been announced by Theodore Wharton, the producer.

The leading woman will be Helen Ferguson, who has been featured in a number of recent screen successes, including "Life's Greatest Problem," "Why Germany Must Pay," "The Gamblers," "The Lost Battalion" and "The Star Rover."

Bertram Marburgh, the leading male "heavy," has had a long stage career. His screen career includes "The Stolen Voice," "After Dark" and "The Eagle's Eye."

Frank Goldsmith, a well known character actor, is also in the cast. He has appeared in pictures for the Whartons, Peerless, Paragon, World, Mutual and Artcraft.

May Hopkins who appeared in the Wharton serial, "Beatrice Fairfax" and William Cavanaugh who appeared in "The Eagle's Eye" and "The Great Gamble," complete the cast.

C. K. Young Progresses on "Eyes of Youth"

Over ten thousand feet of stage is being used at the Garson Studios, Inc., Los Angeles, Cal., in erecting the sets for Clara Kimball Young's next picture, "Eyes of Youth."

Miss Young will create the role for the screen in this production in which Marjorie Rambeau appeared in the New York stage run.

The first scenes of "Eyes of Youth" are now being taken in San Francisco, Berkeley and vicinity. Miss Young and the entire company are in the north at present and will remain at least a week until a number of ocean and dock scenes have been completed, when the remainder of the big production will be taken at the Garson Studios in Los Angeles.

Miss Young will release four big productions a year through the newly formed Equity Pictures Corporation.

Bulls-Eye Comedies Are Going Big in Europe

The Bulls-Eye comedies selling forces have begun a determined campaign in the European market, it is declared. That the vigorous sales effort of the Bulls-Eye London representatives has borne fruit is part of the information received in this country last week in a letter to Milton L. Cohen, president of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation.

According to the letter, Gale Henry has become a prime favorite, both in the English towns and on the Continent. The letter added that there has been no difficulty competing with films made on the other side; on the contrary, the demand for the American product far exceeds the supply.

Bulls-Eye comedies are now being shown in seven of the London theatres in the vicinity of Piccadilly Circus, it is said, while three theatres in Paris are booking them as shown in the U. S., with subtitles in French.

Mr. Cohen predicts that the new Charlie Dorety comedies now being filmed will take Europe by storm, as Dorety's style pantomime will be understood, by the film fans across the water.

Realart Has Quarters in Cincinnati

Realart Pictures Corporation continues its rapid expansion, the latest development being the announcement by Arthur S. Kane, the president, of the signing of a long-time lease covering one-half of the fifth floor of the Film Exchange Building, Broadway and Pioneer Street, as permanent quarters for the Cincinnati branch office. The terms of the agreement were settled at a conference in New York this week between Max Goldstein of Chicago and Mr. Kane. Possession will be given on October 1.

There are now eighteen Realart Exchanges in active operation, the field thus far covered including New York, Boston, Buffalo, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Dallas, Denver, Atlanta, Los Angeles, and Seattle.

"Lightning Bryce" Has Daredevil Cast

The strongest supporting cast of dare devil talent procurable is seen in "Lightning Bryce," it is stated, the eighteen episode super serial produced by the National Film Corporation in which Ann Little and Jack Hoxie are co-starred. This cast includes Steve Clemente, famous throughout the world as an expert knife thrower. His work in many scenes of this serial is without parallel it is said, for there are few, who can successfully toss a dagger between the fingers of a person fifteen feet away, and this feat is only one of many accomplished by him. Others in the cast include Ben Corbett, Walter Patterson, George Champion, Slim Lucas and George Hunter.

Director Paul Hurst is now taking the first scenes of the third episode on locations in and around Bear Valley.

A strike scene from "The World Aflame," a Pathe feature in which Frank Keenan is starred

Notables See "The World Aflame"

Audience Impressed By Keenan's Latest Production

FRANK KEENAN'S big photo-drama, "The World Aflame," to be released by Pathe August 17, had its first semi-public presentation in Washington last Friday evening before a most notable audience. Several factors aside from the prominence of the gathering made the pre-view an unusual event. The projection was made in the little theatre on the first floor of the new building of the department of the interior. Numerous educational and national propaganda films have been shown in this auditorium, but this was the first time, it is said, it was ever given over to the straight motion picture play.

All the Washington daily papers gave generous and prominent position to the accounts of the private showing. According to the Star and Post, Times and Herald, the audience included Secretary of Labor Wilson and his daughter, Assistant Secretary Louis Post and Mrs. Post, Commissioner of Immigration Caminetti, Terence V. Powderly, famous in the days when the Knights of Labor were at their peak; Chief Adjustor Rowland B. Mahany, E. S. McGraw, secretary to Mr. Wilson; Frank Morrison, of the A. F. L., and Mrs. Morrison; Messrs. Warren S. Stone and William G. Lee, of the Railway Brotherhoods, who have been in Washington conferring with President Wilson on the high cost of living; Samuel Gompers, Jr., Senator Colt, of Rhode Island, chairman of the Senate Committee on Immigration; Senators Hiram W. Johnson, Walter Edge, "Pat" Harrison, King and Nugent of the same committee; many members of the House Committee on Labor, Homer S. Cummings, chairman of the National Democratic Committee and his assistants, Wiliam Cochran and Peter D. Vroom.

Others in the audience which filled the auditorium were Michael Flynn, managing editor of the Washington Times, and Mrs. Flynn; Grafton S. Wilcox, of the Chicago Tribune; George Odell, of the New York Morning Telegraph; Lewis Wood, of the New York Times; Stewart Godwin, of the New York Sun; Miss Maude McDougal, who is the fashion and society correspondent for many Western newspapers; Angus MacSween, of the Philadelphia North American; E. V. Harris, of The Stars and Stripes; Sam Small, Jr., of the Washington Post, and Robert Small, of the Public Ledger. The spectators were frequently stirred to hearty applause by the splendidly portrayed scenes and virile American sentiment which are closely weaved throughout the whole substantial fabric of Mr. Keenan's production.

"Senator Edge immensely pleased. The author's treatment of the immigration problem involved in the play and the calm but effectual disposal of all alien agitators as shown by Mr. Keenan are quite in accord with Mr. Edge's ideas," was the message brought to the Pathe representative by the Senator's secretary, George Garner.

The Chicago Censor Board, headed by the Chief of Police, after witnessing a showing of "The World Aflame," in the mid-period of the big street car strike, which tied up the city, is said to have declared that it was the greatest and most vital picture of the time because it dealt effectively with one of the greatest problems of the moment.

A Sustained Interest Serial

Supreme Pictures Intend Every Episode of New Film to Have Big Action

"IT has often been said," states Sidney Reynolds, president of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., "that any serial can be sold if the first five episodes are proven to be satisfactory. To be able to demonstrate five first-class episodes is in itself a highly-commendable feat and justifies in the major part of serial transactions the confidence of the buyer in the whole series of episodes to follow. Yet there is danger that the producers' ambition to maintain the original high-standard of production may drop somewhat once he has interested his buyer in the first five episodes. And, in fact, on several occasions this situation has been called to my attention where the serial has fallen in dramatic power with the success of the initial sales.

"It is the intention of the Supreme Pictures, Inc. which is now at work on a 15 episode serial with Mr. J. Robert Pauline, the famous hypnotist and former vaudeville headliner, to avoid any possibility of lagging interest in the episodes following the initial five. To effect this purpose we have been quietly at work for many months on the whole fifteen episodes so that not only should the first five be of tremendous strength and originality but that each succeeding episode might achieve something new in thrills and dramatic interest as well as in characterization. In the eagerness to rush production on serials many producers have left the later episodes to chance. No weakness such as this has been tolerated in the preparation of Mr. Pauline's vehicle.

Mr. Reynolds is of the opinion that the market for the serial is stronger and wider one than ever. "The excellent, artistic serial, brilliantly conceived and ably directed is always assured of the support of the motion picture public."

Rolfe Seeks Elements of Success

Policy on New Fischer Features Told of by Producer

SPECIAL features only will be made by B. A. Rolfe for A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., according to a statement outlining the policy of the new company issued this week. The corporation is occupying the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, N. Y., obtained by outright purchase by Mr. Fischer several weeks ago as the home of B. A. Rolfe productions.

"B. A. Rolfe will devote his efforts exclusively to the production of special features for A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.," says the statement. "That each picture will be a special in every sense of the term, only concededly big and popular stories by celebrated authors will be used. This applies to books of pre-eminent circulation and to plays of indisputable box-office value and entertainment merit. In such instances where original 'scripts of exceptional story strength and rare advertising possibilities can be obtained, a deflection from an otherwise impervious rule will be made.

"Each story selected will be invested with that artistry which only time, money and experience can provide. B. A. Rolfe will personally supervise and direct the staging of each subject, with the co-operation of his directors. Mr. Rolfe's supervision is being exercised in order to give each picture the showman's angle.

"Prominent personalities only will be engaged to make up the casts. As a consequence there will be instances where a half dozen or more players can be featured, a distinct box-office advantage over the one-star system, Furthermore, the plan insures the intelligent enactment which such stories as will be put on fully deserve.

"The pictures will be produced at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, N. Y., which have been purchased by Mr. Fischer to be the home of B. A. Rolfe productions, and which with their vast improvements in equipment provide ample facilities for proper and adequate staging of the biggest subjects."

An interesting feature of the announcement is the fact that Mr. Rolfe will personally supervise and direct the production of all the pictures made by the new firm. Mr. Rolfe is essentially a showman who believes that pictures should embody more of the element of showmanship. He has repeatedly pointed out that the most artistic pictures are not successes unless such pictures have drawing power and bring a profit to the exhibitor playing them. His appearance, therefore, as a supervising director, is to bring to each of his productions the highest type of entertainment quality plus the element of showmanship, so that the trade-mark of B. A. Rolfe will mean not only artistic but box-office attractions as well.

World Rights to Late Pioneer Are Sold

During the past week the Pioneer foreign department concluded negotiations which resulted in the sale of the world's rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada, of "The Long Arm of Mannister," with Henry B. Walthall, to the Inter-ocean Film Corporation.

This picture is among the most recent of the additions to the Pioneer list of attractions. The negative having been received in New York early last week. Already the territories with exchange centres at New York City, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles have been disposed of, as well as the world's rights.

Among the Pioneer specials which have recently been placed on the markets of England and Continental Europe, may be mentioned "Virtuous Sinners" and "The Girl From Nowhere." According to late cable advices the dates for the first showing of these pictures in London have been set for the near future.

Universal Officials at Cleveland Meeting

The Saturday and Sunday meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, August 2 and August 3 might well have been termed a meeting of Universal "optomists." Nine exchange managers besides several Universal officials and field publicity men attended the meeting which was held to discuss the fall productions of Universal and the newest Jewel production, "The Right to Happiness."

The series of twelve productions of the Special Attraction brand was the main topic of discussion. New sales plans were discussed and the manner of exploitation of this series was given a hearing. Practically every one who attended the meeting had seen "The Right to Happiness" and by general acclamation it was decided that the production was the greatest ever produced by Universal.

Dustin Farnum's Late Film

New Production Begun for United; Current Piece Is "A Man's Fight"

TO be released Sunday, August tenth, Dustin Farnum's current United Picture Theatres offering is of timely nature, according to report, in that at a time when public attention is being daily drawn to strife and unrest in industrial circles the latest vehicle for that virile star tells a stirring story of vigorous leadership in a vital struggle between opposing factions in the copper industry out in Colorado.

Thus this Tom Geraghty story is said to give Mr. Farnum the opportunity he has long sought of appearing on the screen in a role of greater versatility and more modern scope than in any of his previous efforts. The plot calls upon him to portray in the earlier scenes the role of a young New Yorker of aristocratic family and wealth. Through sacrifice of all that this meant for him he goes to Sing Sing penitentiary in the belief that he thereby is saving an only sister from disgrace. On the completion of his sentence The Man starts out on the uphill fight for all that is worth while.

Work is to be started this week on Dustin Farnum's next United Picture Theatres special screen feature at the Brunton studios, Los Angeles. The piece which will have the working title of "The Honor of the Family," is reported to carry the name of one of the world's foremost authors and to call for many elaborate sets. The scenario is the work of Catherine Carr, who is said to have devoted many weeks of careful research to the task. Mrs. Carr is well known as the author of successful novels, short stories and photodramas and was formerly editor for the American Play company.

Blanche Sweet and her director, Wallace Worsley discusing a scene in the forthcoming production from the Jesse D. Hampton studio, "A Woman of Pleasure"

About Plays and Players

Harry Mann, the comedian, has been engaged to direct and star in a series of Universal one-reel comedies, the first of which is entitled "Some Job."

Warner Oland has set out for Los Angeles to begin work on the Louis J. Gasnier serial "The Third Eye" for Pathe release. Eileen Percy will play opposite him.

Amos Myers, technical director for Daniel Frohman and other theatrical producers for many years, has been engaged as technical director for Viola Dana, Metro star.

Community dancing on the paved streets of Minneapolis came to a happy climax for returned soldiers, sailors and marines when "Shoulder Arms," the Charlie Chaplin comedy sensation, was thrown on the screen at the Washburn Fair Oaks mansion. It was a free entertainment given by the War Camp Community Service.

Blanche Sweet is said to be literally working both day and night on "A Woman of Pleasure" which is being produced by Jesse D. Hampton for Pathe release.

The "Star Bulletin," organ of the convicts in Sing Sing, has paid a tribute to Baby Marie Osborne's feature "The Sawdust Doll" commenting that the film had visibly affected the inmates.

James Parrott, character actor, is now appearing in Bulls-Eye comedies, which are directed by his brother, Charles Parrott.

Having put the finishing touches to his latest production, "The Confession," in which Henry Walthall is starred, director Bertram Bracken will begin in the course of a few days on his new story, "The Kentucky Colonel," adapted from the book of that name by Opie Read.

Pending preparations for the scenes in which he will appear in the next Brentwood picture, Charles Meredith is supporting Margery Wilson in "That Something." That's something anyway.

Accompanied by a company of forty, comprising players and technical staff, B. A. Rolfe has gone to the Adirondack Mountains to put on a number of exterior scenes for the first B. A. Rolfe Production for A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.

Prepare to Make "Open Door" Big Picture

A production of big calibre, sponsored by a trio of film executives whose identity for the present is being witheld, has been quietly in course of production for several weeks. The working title selected for the production is "The Open Door." The scenario has been prepared under the direction of Garfield Thompson, writer of several successful plays and films. Due to the size and importance of the production, three directors have been engaged to picturized "The Open Door." This staff is now working under the supervision of Dallas M. Fitzgerald. The production is said to contain extraordinary photographic effects, being replete with double and triple exposures, together with many novel "shots." John Holbrook is supervising the details of the camera work with the assistance of two other photographers.

What is perhaps one of the strongest casts gathered together in a picture will appear in "The Open Door." The list is headed by Anna Lehr, former Ince player, now has to her credit many successful Triangle productions. Prominent in her support are such names as John P. Wade, Frank Evans, Robert Broderick, Sam J. Ryan, William Cavanaugh, Walter Miller, Johnnie Walter and Edith Stockton.

Special Service Section on
Harry Carey in "The Ace of the Saddle"

IF you have been playing Harry Carey's pictures you know what to expect in "The Ace in the Saddle," for it is typical of this actor's productions.

There are worlds of rough riding by real cowboys, plenty of gun play, some wonderful scenic shots brought out by extraordinarily good photography, with the romantic interest centered between Carey and Peggy Pearce, Joel Harris as the first heavy.

Here you have all the traditional situations found in a picture of this type and those who like action and the riding will eat it up while the scenic backgrounds will appeal, unconsciously perhaps, to their esthetic senses.

The story of this production is by Frederick J. Jackson with the continuity developed by George Hively and Jack Ford directing.

Much of the action centers about Carey as the cattle owner but others of the cast have good parts including little Zoo Rae who is a star in herself and has made friends in her juvenile productions.

In the main this offering is melodrama but there is comedy relief provided in the character of "Inky" and the two children (Howard Enstedt being the other child) also have some comedy scenes, with Carey contributing in a few sequences.

THIS is the story of "The Ace in the Saddle":

Cheyenne Harry Henderson (Harry Carey) is the owner of a large cattle ranch in the West, which is situated on the border line between two counties, one, Yucca, an outlaw division with a crooked judge and sheriff who countenance "rustling," the other Pinkerton County which is law abiding and has honest officials including its sheriff, played by Duke R. Lee.

Henderson's cattle are being rustled and sold over the border line and when he can get no action from Yucca's sheriff (Joel Harris), he goes to the Pinkerton county official for advice. Here he meets the sheriff's daughter and a romance develops.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

The Sheriff of Yucca is also an aspirant for the hand of Madeline (Peggy Pearce) and that does not improve the bad feeling engendered between the two men over the cattle situation.

Henderson has been a typical westerner, quick on the trigger and able to more than hold his own in this cattle law country, but when Madeline professes to discountenance the use of weapons he lays his gun aside and announces that he is a man of peace.

THE feeling between the residents of the two counties has now become so bitter that the Yucca sheriff and his lieutenants, all of whom have been implicated in the cattle stealing, determine that they will "get" Henderson, but because he is unarmed and an unwritten law that a man must not be shot in Yucca County unless he carries weapons existing, no opportunity is presented to accomplish their purpose.

However a scheme is devised by which the sheriff is to get a gun in Henderson's hands and then two of his lieutenants are to come and finding him armed, shoot him.

The sheriff of Yucca county after taking the cartridges from his own revolver engages Henderson in conversation when he comes into a saloon and on the pretext of showing Henderson the weapon gets it into the latter's hands. Henderson noticing that the cartridges have been removed suspects a trick and plans accordingly.

The signal for the two men to rush into the saloon has been arranged and so when the sheriff knocks his whisky glass from the bar they burst into the room. Henderson quickly grasps the sheriff by the throat with his left hand and then using the officer as a shield and appropriating his revolver, shoots the two men who have come to take his life. He then returns the weapon he has borrowed and is again unarmed and so is not to be the target of Yucca citizens.

UNABLE to kill Henderson by what was considered fair methods in this country a band of masked riders is organized who plan his death at any cost.

Henderson has a water hole on his property which the rustlers have been using to water the cattle and their horses when engaged in their nefarious work and this Henderson fences off, whereupon the rustlers poison the water.

Henderson, now convinced that he will get no aid from the Yucca authorities, determines to take up his residence in Pinkerton county and this he does by moving his house across the border. He is then able to get aid from the sheriff of Pinkerton county.

In fact two of the cattle rustlers are captured and are placed on trial as a matter of form before the law of the west, for this crime, hanging, is carried out. However before the trial has ended the Yucca sheriff and his gang rescue the two men and also kidnap Madeline and take her to a secluded spot in the hills.

It is now that Henderson ceases to be a man of peace, again straps on his guns and goes to rescue his sweetheart.

Learning from a store keeper of Yucca whom he has once befriended where the Yucca sheriff is likely to go with his captive, Henderson rides alone on his errand.

BY a trick he is able to lead the men who are guarding the cabin where Madeline is confined in the wrong direction and then he rushes in on his horse and carries the girl away before the deception has been perceived.

Henderson now decides to oust the dishonest office holders and is able to have his own foreman elected as sheriff. Order is brought to Yucca county and Henderson and Madeline married.

In exploiting this picture you will have the precedent of other Harry Carey pictures for your guidance and if you have been successful with his previous productions we see no reason why you should not work along the same lines with "The Ace in the Saddle."

As a general principle we would advise that you use plenty of paper and bill the star up in good big letters. You of course want to let your patrons know that this is a typical Western picture of the type which has lots of good horseback riding, which we imagine is one of the things that has put this star over for you.

The title of this feature is a good one although it is a bit misleading if one is to forget that an "ace" used in reference to aeroplanes is a crack aviator who has established his reputation. Otherwise one might think this was a gambling picture.

For your selling talk to be used in newspaper display we would suggest something like this:

Harry Henderson, cattle owner, held his own in a castle law country, because he was quick on the trigger, and then to please a girl he lays aside his weapons and resorts to strategy to protest his life and financial interests. He

JOE MARTIN SOLILOQUIZES

Ty Cobb is a piker compared with me.

His batting average is only a little over .300. Mine is ONE THOUSAND.

And migawd!

Have you heard the prices the boss of the Universal is getting for my pictures? The highest that have ever been asked for two reelers!!

And the big stiff is getting away with it.

He's soaking the dearly beloved exhibitor hip and thigh, and Brother Exhibitor seems to like it because his dearly beloved patrons are plum crazy about Joe Martin. That's me.

Wouldn't that make you sick! My boss is making a clean-up, the Universal stockholders are buying Rolls-Royces and all on account of me. The only time I get anything good to eat is when it's written into the scenario.

I made one hell of a mistake when I sold myself body, soul and whiskers to this moving picture outfit. I should have consulted McAdoo. He'd have shown me how to work it so I could put the boss in my cage and then sit myself down on my back in his swivel chair and watch the dividends divvy.

With the whole world laughing at my pictures, "Monkey Stuff" and "The Jazz Monkey", all I get is the grand laugh from the rest of the guys in the Universal zoo.

Hell!

Two dramatic scenes, and one in lighter vein, taken from the Universal Western drama featuring Harry Carey, "The Ace of the Saddle" succeeds, but a time came when his sweetheart was kidnapped by a crooked sheriff, and a gun was needed to effect her rescue.

See "The Ace in the Saddle" for a great western story of hard riding, spectacular gun play and romantic interest, in which Harry Carey plays the leading role.

Here is another:

A crooked sheriff and a gang of cattle rustlers stood between Cheyenne Harry Henderson and the girl he loved. They were protected by a semblance of the law. Cheyenne Harry had laid aside his trusty six shooter because a girl disapproved of protecting one's self by the law of the West. Then his sweetheart was kidnapped and immediate action was necessary. What did he do? The story is told in "The Ace in the Saddle" with energetic Harry Carey as the principal character.

FOR a herald or house program we offer the following:

In the far West where the law was not greater than those in whose hands the reins of justice were held, lived Cheyenne Harry Henderson, cattle owner and hard riding, quick shooting cowboy. His cattle were being stolen and he could not get justice because the county officials were in league with the cattle rustlers. He could not take the law into his own hands because he had promised a girl that he would not carry a gun. He was a man of peace. So he allowed himself to be robbed until there came a time when the crooked sheriff kidnapped the girl he loved and then Cheyenne Harry took the law into his own hands for the time being and single handed rescued his sweetheart and wrested the cattle law country from its regime of dishonest officials.

A story of typical western action with a romantic interest that will appeal to everyone. There is plenty of the best of broncho riding, many shots showing the wonderful beauty of the West and many thrilling scenes that have typified the pictures in which Harry Carey has appeared.

This is not the sort of production which lends itself to either lobby displays or other special stunts and if you want to do something more than the usual orthodox advertising, our suggestion would be to use an unusual number of stills. There are some excellent views of the action that takes place in the feature and we would say that it would be a good idea to get some gray mount board at your printer's and utilize several sets of these pictures in store windows with a small neatly printed card attached.

THEN on the day of showing announce that you will present one of these photographs to everyone who asks for them at the box office, so long as the limited number you have lasts.

There are a lot of people especially young girls who are collecting photographs of their favorite movie stars and other matter pretaining to productions they have seen and a nicely mounted still would be something many of these people would like to have.

The cost of this stunt would be small and aside from the advertising value you would get from the displays in store windows you would have the "something for nothing" talk of people who are always looking for the free things. You know there are people who would stand in line an hour to get something which they didn't have to pay for even if it really was of no value to them.

Try this stunt if you want to a little more than just bill your picture and take what comes to the box office.

At this writing the announcement of what advertising matter, in the way of cuts and lithographs, which will be available from your exchange on this feature have not been made but it is probable that all the usual sizes in paper put out on Carey pictures will be made for this one and that cuts, press book, music cues and other helps will be available.

We should advise the liberal use of this material.

A new field for short motion picture subjects has been opened by "Topics of the Day," the snappy Literary Digest split reel which Pathe is distributing.

Where heretofore all such subjects have been consigned to either open or close the shows given in the leading vaudeville houses, Keith's Riverside in New York has accorded this feature a position of the utmost prominence, using it to open the second half of the performance.

Special Service Section on "The Thirteenth Chair"

If you are going to book the "Thirteenth Chair" you want to prepare to put it over on the strength of the play and title and not expect to depend on names which picture audiences know, with the exception of Creighton Hale.

This feature is an adaptation of a famous play written by Bayard Veiller, author of "Within The Law" of which everyone has heard and which nearly everyone has seen either in the stage version or the picture and in consequence the absence of "names" in this feature will be made up in this way.

As you no doubt know this is a mystery story, in which two murders are committed with the police coming in to unravel the mystery. Spiritualism also enters into the plot and in that you have an element which always carries interest. People may not believe in it but there is a certain amount of superstition about us all that makes us wonder if there may not be something in the teachings of spiritualism or at least not be sure in our minds when we scoff at the idea that there is an occult world.

"The Thirteenth Chair" was directed by Leonce Perret who also prepard the scenario from the original script. Special attention has been given the lightings and the exteriors were taken in winter which makes the snow backgrounds worth considering as a bill for hot weather.

THIS is the plot of "The Thirteenth Chair":

Stephen Lee (Marc McDermott) is a philanderer who has stolen the love of Mrs. Philip Mason and also induces her to take some of her husband's securities with which he speculates in stocks. He loses the money and Mrs. Mason commits suicide.

Helen Trent (Suzanne Colbert) wife of Bradish Kent a well to do business man has in her younger days been in love with Lee and to him she wrote letters of an indiscreet nature. With the collapse of his financial affairs, Lee begins blackmailing Mrs. Trent by threatening to inform her husband of the existence of these letters.

In an attempt to secure possession of the letters, Helen O'Neil (Yvonne Delva) a young girl who has been living with a well to do family by the name of Grosby since both Mrs. Trent (the Grosby's daughter) and Helen left a convent in France at the approach of the Germans during the European War, accompanied by Willy Crosby (Creighton Hale), goes to Lee's apartments.

While Willy remains outside some distance from the house, Helen enters and pleads for the letters. Lee will not give them to her and makes advances which are resented. Helen attempts to leave the house but Lee will not permit her to go and attacks her. Helen flees to an upper room followed by Lee. Willy becoming alarmed at Helen's continued absence goes in search of her and unable to make his entrance to the Lee house through the doors climbs to the upper story where he discovers Helen standing in a room gazing at the dead form of Lee. Lee has been stabbed with a long knife. Helen protests her innocence and is believed by Willy.

The police are called in and find a handkerchief on which is the letter H and other small articles which prove that a woman has been in the house. However the inspector (Walter Law) declares the murderer to be a man and does not follow these clues.

EDWARD WALES, a banker, who has been a friend of Lee's, is also a friend of the Grosby's. He becomes supicious of Helen and plans to force a confession from her. As a part of the scheme, he goes to the home of Madame LaGrange, a clairvoyant (Marie Shotwell) and gives her instructions as to what she shall do at a seance which is to be held at the Grosby home on Friday the 13th.

The "medium" presiding at the seance at which develops the mystery in Pathe's "The 13th Chair"

At the party held on the evening of the seance, the engagement of Willy and Helen is announced. When Madame La Grange arrives she is introduced to the assembled guests and Helen proves to be her daughter, from whom she has been separated for many years, first while she was at school in the convent and later after the time Helen became a member of the Grosby family. Of the latter Madame La Grange had not been aware as the authorities had not been able to trace the girl after she left the convent.

The two women meet but the guests are not informed as to the relationship.

Madame La Grange has been told why she is to follow certain instructions in conducting her seance, which is to force Helen to confess to the murder which Wales thinks she has committed. Thus it is that Madame La Grange realizes that she is to aid in convicting her own daughter.

NEVERTHELESS Madame La Grange begins with the seance. The thirteen persons are seated about the room, each holding another's hands. At the instigation of Wales, Madame La Grange is to call upon the spirit of the murdered Lee through Wales to name his slayer. This she does and as it seems to the persons assembled that the question is about to be answered, Wales falls from his chair dead. When the lights are flashed on, it is found that he has been stabbed, but the knife is nowhere is sight.

All the guests are forbidden to leave the room and Inspector Donahue is called in. He begins his investigation. Suddenly he accuses Madame La Grange of killing Wales. This so startles Helen that she makes known that the clairvoyant is her mother.

Donahue now for the first time turns his attention to Helen, a handkerchief identical with that found in the room where Lee was murdered having been noticed in Helen's hand.

It is now that Madame La Grange realizes that she must find the murderer or see her daughter arrested for committing both crimes.

She arranges with Donahue to hold another seance and is able to make this so impressive, that when she again calls on the spirit of the dead men to name their slayer one of the guests, a man who has been least suspected, terror stricken and believing that the spirits of the murdered men are about to speak, confesses that he committed the crime.

We have told you that the big thing about this picture is the fact that it was in the original a very successful play, one which has the reputation of making a million dollars for its producers and which a most famous playwright wrote. It hardly seems possible that anyone has not heard of both the play and its author so you want to play this up strong in your billing.

Now in billing a mystery picture it is absolutely wrong to tell your aud-

Striking views from the heralded Pathe offering of the mystery subject, "The Thirteenth Chair," in which Creighton Hale and Yvonne Delva have featured parts

In "The Thirteenth Chair" Pathe has adapted one of the most successful mystery plans that has graced the stage in years. Creighton Hale and Yvonne Delva are said to give realistic characterizations in the leading roles iences the plot. Give them a little hint of what is coming but don't let them in on the story. Of course a lot of people are going to know about this one from having seen the stage version but you can't help that and you will probably get these people out of curiosity for they will want to see how closely the picture production follows the stage play. We don't mind telling you that a lot of the mystery as to who killed Wales fails to get over in the picture as well as it does in the play but that is to be expected and there is still enough suspense retained to make this the big scene.

N advertising this one, we should consider it another feature which needs a lot of big paper. "The 13th Chair" is a great title laying aside the fact that it really means something in the minds of people. It is suggestive of a mystery story and "sounds as if it would be good."

Now you don't want to get away from the fact that a lot of people are attracted by what is expressed in the above sentence so be sure that you get the "13th Chair" in letters two feet high if you have to hire a sign painter.

We are always urging you to buy big newspaper space in exploiting your features and this is a play that especially needs this sort of publicity.

Make your reservation for better than your usual number of inches and plan on making your display rather bold.

For your selling talk we suggest something like this:

"Who Killed Wales?"

A man, one of 13 who sit in the darkness each holding another's hands, is killed.

The knife with which he was stabbed is missing. Every person is under suspicion and all protest their innocence. There is not a clue with which the police may begin, yet in a half an hour the mystery is solved.

How?

See "The Thirteenth Chair," the great mystery photoplay adapted from the famous stage play of the same name.

Here is another:

Banker Wales is dead.

Twelve persons stare at the body in horror. The knife with which the deed was done is missing. There is not a clue. Thirteen people sat in a circle, each holding another's hands. Yet Wales has been stabbed.

Twelve people are under suspicion and two have motives for committing the crime. Yet when the mystery is solved, the least suspected is guilty, and there was a reason for the deed.

See "The Thirteenth Chair," the most absorbing, thrilling, sensational, melodramatic photoplay of the year. Adapted from the stage success by Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law."

IF you want to use a lobby display on this picture and we think it is a good production for this purpose we suggest something on this order.

Build a miniature room, with dark draperies hung over doors and with a ceiling piece. Place thirteen chairs in a circle, perhaps with one or two tipped over. On a chair which will face the street and still standing paint bright red blotches. In front of the chair and a little to one side place a dummy of a man in evening dress lying face down with limbs drawn partially up. Make this figure look as if the man had fallen from the chair. On the back of the coat cut a gash about an inch long and about the opening tuck ragged edges of white cloth. Smear these edges with the "blood" and paint a streak down to the floor as if the blood had dripped from the wound as the man lay dying.

Shroud the scene enough so the interior will be dim and use an incandesent blue spot from the side and placed out of sight from the opening, to flood the figure. In the ceiling impale a long knife of the stiletto type. Do not place any signs to indicate to what the scene refers. We do not think it is necessary, for people who know of the play will soon guess what your display represents. Those who don't will ask questions and you will create an interest that you would otherwise lose if you explain matters by cards. In other words carry out the idea that this is a mystery picture by being mysterious yourself.

If you wish to use a stage setting there is the same opportunity as we have suggested for the lobby, and it would be possible to stage the scene as it was enacted in the legitimate version.

"THE THIRTEENTH CHAIR" has been published in fiction form and any actor or director will have no trouble in finding in the book the place where the seance begins and from that be able to produce a portion of the act. As there are only a few words, those spoken by the clairvoyant as we remember it, an act of this kind would not require any great amount of rehearsal or a professional cast, with the possible exception of Madame La Grange.

We believe staging a prologue of this character to run say ten minutes would prove a distinctive hit. You know there is nothing like a dimly lighted, mysterious, creepy thing like this when it comes to holding interest and this one as enacted in the stage play certainly did all of that. (Note—We do not believe that those who hold the royalty rights to the stage version would object to your using a scene from the play. You would not be performing the drama for a pecuniary gain which we think is the protection given by royalty rights).

If you should use the prologue be sure that you do it well and be especially careful with your lighting. The stage wants to be pitch black except for a blue halo about Madame La Grange. To give you an idea of this scene we are reproducing a still from the picture version so you may be able to fully understand what is required. This is where your prologue should begin and it should run to the place where Wales is killed and the lights are switched on. Get a copy of the book and read the description of the scene. This stunt can be pulled at very small expense and if you do it you will have created an atmosphere that will help put the picture over in great shape. One thing more. Have the orchestra playing very lightly on the strings some sort of "creepy" music. Now this stuff may look like "bunk" to you but we want to tell you this. The exhibitor who goes to the pains and uses his brains to do things that the others won't or don't are the ones who are going to be in this little old "fillum" game after a lot of the would be managers have had a visit from the sheriff.

TITLE OF THIS IS THING TO FEATURE

TELL your patrons that "The Thirteenth Chair" is an adaptation of Mr. Veiller's great stage play and mention that he also wrote "Within The Law." Keep this idea paramount all the time in all your advertising.

Don't give people chance to say: "Who is playing it?" The play may be the thing and no doubt will be the thing, but you and I know that it is better to have some names in a cast. However, with this one you have something that answers well for the lack of well known players.

House Takes Hodkinson Plays for Fortnight

Life on the screen of the Fun Theatre, Detroit, was just one Hodkinson day after another for almost a fortnight in early July, no less than nine Hodkinson releases being featured at that popular neighborhood playhouse within ten days. That business was exceptionally good throughout the long Hodkinson period may be gleaned from Manager B. H. Switzer's note to E. A. Crane, Hodkinson's Detroit representative, urging him to send on every available Hodkinson production.

Louise Glaum, long a favorite at the Fun theatre, opened the nine-day Hodkinson engagement in "Shackles" on July 5th. The following day Manager Switzer presented Bessie Barriscale in "Patriotism," a truly appropriate attraction for Fourth of July week. Then followed "Come Again Smith," starring J. Warren Kerrigan.

Bessie Barriscale came back in "Within the Cup" on the 9th, and the next day the Fun had its S. R. O. signs working with Katherine Clifford in "The Angel Child." "Whatever the Cost," with Anita King, proved a highly satisfactory attraction for Fun theatre patrons on July 11th, and the following day found Lillian Walker winning praise for her performance in "The Love Hunger."

ELSIE JANIS entertained forty doughboys from one of the Government hospital wards the other day, at the Biograph studio. Incidentally, the soldier lads were needed in her picture, but they had an uproariously good time out of their so-called work, and appreciated Miss Janis' efforts to entertain them as keenly as did the boys in the trenches. Needless to say, the atmosphere they created was absolutely true to life.

MRS. DE WOLFE HOPPER, whose lalatest appearance was with Billie Burke in "The Misleading Widow," is recovering from a recent operation at her home in Great Neck, and expects to be able to do better work than ever very soon. She has had more offers of wonderful parts during her illness, she says, than she could play in a year, "and the worst of it was," she lamented, "that while it was absolutely breaking my heart to have to refuse, they insisted upon thinking that it was simply because I didn't want to work."

LUMSDEN HARE, who is playing opposite Claire Whitney in the first Edward Jose production, "Mothers of Men," for Film Specials, Inc., is wearing a broad grin these days, because he is enjoying a ten day's vacation with full salary. It seems that the false side whiskers Mr. Hare wears did not meet with the approval of Director Jose. Consequently Mr. Hare was given ten days' vacation in which to raise real "side pieces." "My God," exclaimed Jose in a moment of excitement, when he beheld Lumsden's maiden cheeks, "why did they call you Hare?" "How do you expect me to play a German without being a Herr?" Lumsden retorted promptly.

ADOLF PHILLIPP has started work on his second musical film comedy for the Adolph Philipp Film Corp., the title of which has not yet been announced. Jules Cronjager will again be responsible for the photography.

WILFRED LYTELL is playing the juvenile lead in "The Isle of Jewels" which Arthur F. Beck is producing at the Crystal studio, featuring Stuart Holmes and Frankie Mann. "Although I come from a theatrical family," said Mr. Lytell, "brother Bert wanted me to be an electrical engineer, but I couldn't see it that way. I believe that one's work should be absolutely of one's choosing, for therein only lies the assured success which is the ambition of all."

WE WONDER if J. Robert Pauline used his hypnotic powers on Sidney Reynolds, president of Supreme Pictures, Inc., when the latter was drawing up his contract for the new film star and former vaudeville headliner. We don't think much of hypnotism if he didn't, but then things don't always work to their originator's advantage.

IF YOU HAPPEN over to the Blackton studios in Brooklyn and peep into the dressing room occupied by Flora Finch during her engagement there for "Dawn," you will find an attractive slight young girl in her early teens hovering near, and Flora Finch will introduce her as Veronica Marsh, "my daughter." Miss Marsh is the devoted companion of her clever mother, the comedienne, and often plays with her. Commodore Blackton added a small part for her in his present production.

DOLORES CASSINELLI is starring in another special production for Pathe release, the working title of which is "The Right to Lie." Edwin Carewe, who has made quite a reputation with Metro, has severed his connections with that company and is directing the picture at the Fort Lee studios.

HOWARD ESTABROOK writes us that he is arranging to complete his duties for the position with the Vacuum Oil Company which he held during the war, and hopes to return to directing very soon.

BETTY BLYTHE has been entertaining the Countess Varia Mariovna, who studied with her at the Conservatoire of Music in Paris several years ago. At that time Miss Blythe was planning an operatic career. The countess has been a Red Cross nurse with the French armies, so that the two friends have not seen each other for some time. Naturally they are enjoying a gay reunion after the grim years of separation. Both left this week for California, Miss Blythe to begin work on Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde," and her friend to sail for the Orient in September.

WALLACE MCDONALD thinks that he is having a fair chance to be leading man for most of the motion picture stars. Having played opposite Pauline Frederick, Mary Miles Minter, Mae Marsh, and Madge Kennedy, he has now been engaged as lead for Marguerite Clark in a picture called "A Girl Named Mary" which is being produced at the Famous Players-Morosco studio on the coast.

RICHARD BARTHELMESS has finished the last Artcraft production in which he will appear and is on his way East to begin work in the First National picture produced by D. W. Griffith. Mr. Barthelmess' new contract, which is with Mr. Griffith personally, continues until the first of the year, when the producer will take the option for another year. By this arrangement, Barthelmess will remain a Griffith star until 1921.

William Farnum, Fox star, whose latest release is "Wolves of the Night"

BEING successful sometimes has its drawbacks, according to Harry Davenport, who has been looking forward to a vacation on his farm at Williamsport, Pa., for the past month and hasn't gotten there yet. Mr. Davenport is one of the "Three Wise Fools," and consequently has been making plans to leave Broadway in vain, owing to the demands of the public for a longer run of the play. Also, he expected his scenes in the Blackton production of "Dawn" to be finished a week ago, but his part was larger than he thought at first. So his vacation is still a thing of the future.

MYRTLE STEDMAN, who was co-starred with David Powell in the Famous Players' production of "The Teeth of the Tiger," has now gone to California to play an important part in the Rex Beach production of "The Silver Horde" for Goldwyn release.

HELEN FERGUSON, upon the completion of her present Vitagraph picture, will go to Ithaca to star in a serial opposite Jack Norwood.

Roger Lytton, Soldier and Actor : : : : : : : : :

"BUT Mr. Lytton must be here. We had appointment, and we refuse to believe he's forgotten it," we remonstrated optimistically with the door man. Whereupon a third searcher was dispatched through the intricate mazes of the Biograph studio.

This one proved successful, and we presently heard a deep, hearty voice exclaiming: "Why, doesn't it seem as though I were here?" and we had to acknowledge that its owner was very much there, a tall, commanding figure in a light linen suit, a slight touch of iron gray in his hair, keen, intelligent eyes and a determined looking chin. In spite of the fact that Roger Lytton is courtesy and graciousness personified, and has a most delightful way of saying: "Oh, please, do" so and so, to hat check girls and telephone operators and waitresses, we'll wager that to hear must be to obey among masculine subordinates.

We weren't surprised to learn that Mr. Lytton, who playing one of the leads in Elsie Janis' first screen production, has been a Major in the National Guard, nor that he tried his best to enter into active service with our overseas army. They wouldn't take him, it seems, because he was born just three months too long ago, so he had to content himself with strenuous military duty on this side. On one occasion last summer, he left Plattsburg one Saturday afternoon, dashed into the New York studio where he was expected that evening, and informed his director that he was due in Washington Monday morning. Needless to say, things hummed about those sets that Sunday, but the necessary scenes were finished and Mr. Lytton arrived in due time for his governmental work. It was too much of a rush, however, and Mr. Lytton appeared no more on the screen until after the Armistice was signed.

We discovered this only by persistent interrogation marks, for Mr. Lytton, being a genuine, as well as a perfect type of aristocratic Southern gentleman, is extremely reticent when the conversation turns on himself. As we faced him across the studio luncheon table, we wondered why he is so often cast as a villain in spite of his very charming manner and a personality directly opposed to the sort of characters he usually portrays. Of course, his sympathetic part with Miss Janis is just the sort of thing one would expect him to do, but his characterizations in "The Battle Cry of Peace," "The Burden of Proof," "Lest We Forget," "The Forbidden City" and many others, must have been the finest sort of acting. There was nothing of the real Roger Lytton about them except the aristocrat. "The gentleman villain of the screen" he has very rightly been called, for, in spite of all his emotional ability, and the despicably evil traits he can portray when his part demands it, the gentleman is always there, dominating every other trait. He could never be the unattractive heavy whom one recognizes as the crook the moment he appears on the screen. As a critic most inadvertently and aptly exclaimed, while watching some film run off, "Lytton's the d——est finest heavy this side of Europe."

We asked how he obtained his apparent understanding of such brutal criminals as he has sometimes been. Through literature, he told us, complete familiarity with all the great characters of fiction, as well as a clear memory of most of the performances of the famous actors on the legitimate stage. Mr. Lytton is essentially an artist, and his life training has afforded him exceptional opportunities and advantages, in every line. He studied first to be an architect, but later became interested in all the Arts, and is today a member of the Salmagundi, the McDowell and the Columbia University Clubs, as well as that one more familiar to film lovers, the Green Room.

Between pictures he spends his time in quite seculsion in a charming place in upper New York, seven miles from a railroad station and deep in the heart of the woods where fish are just lying in wait for tempting bait, and there is no end to fascinating bits of landscape that would entice any artist out of town. Further than that Mr. Lytton refused to divulge any secrets.

"The idea of personal exploitation is inconceivable to me," he protested. "My private life is a thing entirely apart from professional appearances, and as for trying to create the impression that anything I may have is worth mentioning—why, it's impossible. If I had an interesting collection of antiques or good pictures that other men had painted I might admit that I was proud of them, but to boast of a character that I may have created—well, its distasteful. I should very much rather comment on the lamentable, but unavoidable feature of our motion pictures, through which so many carefully worked out characterizations are entirely spoiled in the cutting rooms.

"Its very disappointing to find the best part of your work and that which really gives a reason for what you do and represents hours of thought and speculation as to what a certain type of man would do under certain circumstances, entirely omitted in the final showing. But, of course, as long as we must have films of certain length, regardless of the amount of story there is to be told, I realize that there is nothing for the cutter to do but leave out a great deal of apparent irrelevant action. I fail to see how it can be helped, so I give the best interpretation I can, and if the audience never sees it in its entirety, there's no use worrying.

MARGUERITE JONES.

Screen Actress Weds a Wealthy St. Louisan

The marriage of Eileen Percy, noted film beauty, and Ulrich Busch, grandson of the late Adolphus Busch of St. Louis, has been announced. The couple had kept it a secret for several weeks but preparations for a world tour as a honeymoon caused "the cat to be let out of the bag." They expect to leave shortly for the Orient on the first lap of their journey.

Miss Percy's latest screen appearance is in support of Sessue Hayakawa in his Robertson-Cole feature, "The Gray Horizon," which is to be released within the next few weeks through Exhibitors' Mutual.

Author's Last Story Is Going Big as Film

George W. Trendle, acting for John H. Kunsky Enterprises, Detroit, has bought "The Grain of Dust," in which Lillian Walker is the star, for the State of Michigan.

Robert W. Priest, through whom the sale was made reports that "The Grain of Dust" will be given its initial showing at the Madison Theatre, Detroit, the second week in August and that Mr. Kunsky is planning a statewide newspaper and bill board campaign to boom the picture.

It is not generally known that David Graham Phillips, the author was shot and killed before he finished the story.

"The Grain of Dust," at the time, was running in the Saturday Evening Post, and of course, had to be finished, and hence an author of repute had to be induced to finish it. Robert W. Chambers consented to do the work with the result that the story had a success both in serial form through the Saturday Evening Post and as a book, before it was made into a photoplay.

THEY accuse the five big meat packers of profiteering and declare that they even save the "Squeal" of the pigs, and that nothing escapes them.

What progress is the motion picture industry making?

Can the motion picture camera photograph a "Squeal" or a "Scream?"

It was thought impossible until the production of "The Thirteenth Chair."

But take it from Creighton Hale, leading male star in this film production to be released by Pathe, August 31, a "Scream" has been photographed.

When the interviewer ran across Mr. Hale at the Lambs Club the conversation naturally turned to the filming of the great stage success, "The Thirteenth Chair."

This is the same Creighton Hale that depleted all the drug stores of New York of their stocks of court plaster after his strenuous success in acquiring bruises in "The Exploits of Elaine."

The "scream" incident occurred about as follows:

It seems that the really big and intensely gripping moment in the stage production of "The Thirteenth Chair" is when the terrible scream is heard as the man is killed.

How could the screen production suitably portray this dramatic situation upon which so much of the success of the stage production hinged? After many days of discussion and experiments the scene was filmed with the scream effect.

The principals were gathered in a room when suddenly the butler opens the door. There is a big flare and the body falls into the room with every principal present registering fright and amazement. It produces the great psychological effect desired and witnesses of the finished film declare that in this great scene they actually heard the "scream."

Leonce Perret directed the Pathe production of "The Thirteenth Chair" at Saranac Lake for exteriors. The title got on the nerves of many of the players who were superstitious of the "Thirteen."

Creighton Hale declared that he was not superstitious. But after an exceedingly brilliant cross examination by the exceptionally clever interviewer he was forced to admit that things actually DID happen to him during the filming of "The Thirteenth Chair" that he could not really attribute to human agencies.

For instance: A great lighting effect during one scene is secured by the placing of mirrors on the floor and in many other advantageous locations.

Now everybody knows that if you break a mirror you are in for seven years hard luck. Mr. Hale admitted that there were many mirrors broken during the filming of this mirror scene and that you actually see every one of the players turn white under the grease paint.

Creighton Hale has the looks and mannerisms of an Englishman but was born in Cork, Ireland. His father was an actor, manager and producer, so Creighton was actually born in the profession. He prefers dramatic parts but is generally cast for the juvenile or light comedy roles.

His most recent stage affiliations were "Indian Summer" with John Mason, and "Moloch" with Holbrook Blinn and Edmund Breese.

Mr. Hale played several seasons in Europe and came to America eleven years ago. Some of the film productions he has appeared in, released by Pathe, are "The Love Chart," "Oh Boy," and "A Damsel in Distress," just completed.

He is a member of the Lambs and also the Aero Club of America, and has done a great deal of flying here and abroad.

Creighton Hale believes that "The Thirteenth Chair" was one of the greatest stage successes and while reluctant to talk much about the screen production of "The Thirteenth Chair," because he had such a prominent role in it, others who have seen the film declare that exhibitors are going to meet with great success in showing the attraction as it is pronounced a crowning achievement in motion picture production.—Tom Hamlin.

De Havens Back at Work

After a solid month of vacationing around, Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven have returned to the National and the old grease paint. Mr. Seiter, who has been devoting his time in directing "Smiling Bill" Parsons, will pick up his megaphone in the interests of De Haven Capitols.

Studio Notes from Coast

Many former service men in uniform, among them being various studio executives, were present in the scenes taken of a replica of the famous Victory Ball in London which are being used in the second Geraldine Farrar production being directed by Reginald Barker. An entire stage was devoted to the scene, designed and executed by Art Director Hugo Ballin. More than 300 men and women in uniform and evening dress, it is said, were employed on the set. Two detectives, according to studio representatives, were employed to guard the jewelry worn by Miss Farrar in these scenes, one of the pieces being a necklace of pearls and diamonds that is an heirloom of the family of Lou-Tellegan, the star's husband and leading man. Tellegan plays an Arabian Sheik. The production is located in London and Egypt, and for the oriental details, correctness has been assured by the engagement of Lieutenant-Colonel Gorden McGee, who spent considerable time with the British forces in Northern Egypt.

Frankie Lee, boy actor who recently has attracted favorable comment in several screen successes, has an important juvenile role in the present Mabel Normand comedy-drama being produced under the direction of Victor Schertzinger. Cullen Landis, who plays opposite Miss Normand, recently has signed a contract with Goldwyn for a five year engagement.

Harry Beaumont is directing the latest Goldwyn production featuring Tom Moore, a comedy drama having worth, P. M. McCullough and Arthur Houseman are included in Moore's the activities of the smart set of a metropolitan city as the background. A manicure parlor has a prominent position in the locale.

John Bowers, leading man with Pauline Frederick, under the direction of Frank Lloyd in the latter's production of "Letty," the screen version of the comedy by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, signed a year's contract to remain with Goldwyn on the week on July 28th. His latest release is "Through the Wrong Door," the Madge Kennedy feature in which he played a romantic young western miner.

Hazel Daly, who in private life is Mrs. Harry Beaumont, wife of the Goldwyn director, has been engaged for a prominent role in the newest picture featuring Tom Moore. Her work in this last play marks her return to the screen after an absence of several months. Miss Daly became widely known through her work with Moore in "Brown of Harvard" before the star was engaged by Goldwyn.

Naomi Childers, who recently signed a Goldwyn contract, is making a flying trip to New York to visit her mother in that city and accumulate a wardrobe for her forthcoming production.

Gloria Hope has been engaged as Tom Moor'e leading woman in the Pinero play being directed by Harry Beaumont. Kate Lester, Sidney Ains-

W. CHRISTIE CABANNE, director of the Lew Cody features, obtained striking realism in his presentation of an incident of smart society when he staged a scene in which Los Angeles society folk and clubmen were induced to play parts in support of his star; among these were Walter Morosco, son of the famous stage producer, Mrs. Sidney Busch, wife of a grandson of the multi-millionaire brewer and prominent in Pasadena society and Ulrich Busch, another grandson of the late Adolphus Busch. Cabanne is succeeding in creating a novel type, it is said, in his presentation of Lew Cody as a male vampire in the series of features all being built around Cody's amorous adventures on the screen.

JOHN BOWERS, Goldwyn leading man who recently signed a year's contract with that organization, is engaged at present in a prominent part in support of Pauline Frederick under direction of Frank Lloyd in the production of the screen version of "Letty," the noted English comedy drama by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero. Bowers, whose latest release was "Through the Wrong Door," with Madge Kennedy, is awaiting arrival here of his $25,000 speed yacht "Uncas." He finds many other athletic diversions, being a keen motorist, boxer, swimmer, and golf-player.

RUTH STONEHOUSE is dividing her time between her screen work as leading woman with Hale Hamilton in the Metro production, "The Four-Flusher" and her home in Laurel Canyon, a suburb of Los Angeles. There she grows vegetables and flowers, and frequently helps fight forest fires started from matches dropped by careless campers. She asserts that each afternoon three wild California canaries perch on her window-sill and serenade her.

HAVING completed his production of "The Jack of Hearts" for Universal, Director Reeves Eason has begun preliminary preparation for the staging of an eighteen episode serial based on "The Strange Case of Cavendish," the novel by Randall Parish. In it Eason will have as his leading players, Magda Lane and "Hoot" Gibson, while Eason himself, in addition to directing, will play the role of Cavendish, the heavy. The story is of the mystery detective type, and Eason, it is said, has developed in the script many unusual incidents and stirring situations.

ERNEST C. WARDE, who is directing J. Warren Kerrigan features at the Robert Brunton studios, is in search of a cast iron "hot dog" which can be used without danger of having it eaten by a hungry extra while filming scenes in a big street set. In his latest Kerrigan production the inevitable "hot dog" stand to be seen in all tenement scenes was the center of attraction for about 200 film folk during the luncheon hour. When Warde, Kerrigan and other principals returned to the scene after luncheon, they found that the "hot dogs" had disappeared and action was delayed until a new variety could be obtained.

Alma Rubens, Robertson-Cole star in "A Man's Country"

WALLACE MAC DONALD, who has been prominent in recent Famous Players-Lasky productions, has the leading role opposite the star in the latest Marguerite Clark subject to be filmed at the Hollywood studio. The picture is to be known as "A Girl Named Mary," and MacDonald is enjoying the biggest screen opportunity in his career opposite the diminutive heroine for the reason that his part carries much action and individuality of character, it is said, which should enable him to make his portrayal a striking one.

PROMINENT in the supporting cast of "Letty," the Pinero comedy drama being staged at the Goldwyn studio, is Caroline Rankin, who is widely known for her quaint characterization in types of the "spinster" and New England farm life kind. Miss Rankin, who is playing "Lizzie Roberts" in "Letty," recently closed a long engagement at the Famous Players-Lasky studio and was specially chosen by Mr. Lloyd for the humorous role in the famous English playwright's story of London domestic life because of her work in similar characterizations during her previous engagement. Miss Rankin, it is said, instead of caricaturing the "old maid" role to the point of painful absurdity, puts a naturalness and sympathy into it that bring much emphasis to the important action in which she appears.

TO Harry Ham, former Christie comedian, and more recently leading man in productions at the Famous-Players-Lasky Eastern studios, has been assigned the leading role opposite Peggy Hyland in her latest Fox feature, "Right after Brown." The play, which is a comedy drama being produced by Al Green, has considerable amount of the crook element in it and in the course of the development of the plot, Miss Hyland becomes an amateur detective whose adventures bring about the surprising situations in which Harry Ham finds himself. The Fox engagement is the most important that Harry Ham has had since his discharge from the United States service several weeks ago.

AL GREEN, formerly Marshall Neilan's assistant in some of the latter's more important productions, has begun his directorship of "Right After Brown," the Fox feature starring Peggy Hyland. The story has a comedy drama theme and in it Green, it is said, is developing all the possibilities of his star's fun-making ability. Progress on the picturization of the story has been rapid, the director having been able to shoot a large number of scenes with a minimum of delay and it is expected that he will have the feature ready for the cutting room within three weeks of the time since he received his story.

HELEN STARR, the scenario writer, has returned to Los Angeles. During the war she has been in the Intelligence Department of the Government. She formerly served on the staffs of the Republic, Mutual, Universal and American film companies and has written extensively for the magazines. For over a year she was script editor for the Universal Company at the New York office.

THE Bessie Barriscale production now being made at the Brunton Studios under the direction of her husband Howard Hickman is nearly completed. In it Miss Barriscale has excelled even her former efforts in costuming the character she presents of a titled Englishwoman whose life is involved in the mysteries of the Orient.

We Will Now Let Edmund Goulding Talk : : :

"AWFULLY glad to talk with you," exclaimed a low, English voice with unusual force and rapidity, while we glanced admiringly at an athletically built, well groomed young man, whose clothes were as noticeable for their quality as for the excellence of their cut, "but there's been a terrible rush today, terrible! Do you mind if I tell you a few things that I feel most strongly about just as quickly as I can?"

Mind? We should say not! Interviewers don't mind listening—to good stuff. We leaned back and let Edmund Goulding talk, uninterrupted, and the wealth of ideas he poured forth in a perfect torrent of words and a vocabulary like Wm. Jennings Bryan's in his early days, made us sit up and take notice. We were impressed too, by the fact that he didn't seem to care a rap about publicity for himself. He didn't want his ideas published because they were his ideas, but because he was fearfully in earnest about getting people to believe them. We'd like to say just how much we enjoy meeting people who have set a definite goal in their life work and are concentrating every bit of ability and energy and talent they possess, a prodigious amount in Mr. Goulding's case, on reaching that goal, but—limited space, you know.

So, to abbreviate, Edmund Goulding is the young English stage director and author, with the unusual feat to his credit of writing in eight weeks the adaptation of "The Perfect Lover" for Eugene O'Brien; the original story and adaptation of Olive Thomas' third picture, "The Glorious Lady"; the original story in collaboration with Eugene Walter of "Sealed Hearts," also for Eugene O'Brien; the adaptation in collaboration with Frances Marion of "Everybody's Sweetheart" for Elsie Janis. Also, Owen Moore's first Selznick vehicle, title not yet announced; "The Ladder of Tears," a future Emerson-Loos production, and he is well away on his next.

But then Mr. Goulding says that you can write a story on the back of an envelope in the subway with one hand on the strap, if you've got the big idea, though it sounds to us like a rather gymnastic accomplishment; and, as further proof that surroundings make no difference to a real writer, he reminds us that he wrote "The Ordeal of Rosetta" for Alice Brady, in camp, the story of which, if you'll remember, is about as foreign to battlefields as a story could very well be.

"My experience as a soldier taught me also, as nothing else could have done," he said very seriously, "the value of system, concerted effort and conscientious devotion to duty, whether that duty lies in defeating Huns or producing good plays. So that when I decided to adopt motion pictures as a profession, I realized that it was a real business of sale and merchandise, and I knew that I had to learn my trade as carefully as a watchmaker or a butcher learns his, and go down to the rockbed of apprenticeship. America knows more about making films than any other country in the world, even an Englishman has to admit that, so I came to America. So far I have found but two or three of my countrymen here for the same purpose, and at home I have heard loud protests on the part of British manufacturers and exhibitors against the American invasion. In my opinion, that is a great mistake, the mistake I want to emphasize. Directly I have learned all that your big producers can teach me, I am going home, knowing my job so well that no fellow countryman can say to me: 'This is our way of doing it,' because there is no 'our way,' there is only 'the way.'

"I haven't gone back on John Bull. It is only because I know that England will one day make pictures as well as she does clothes, that our slogan will be 'quality' and not 'quantity,' and that as the Rolls-Royce stands supreme as a motto, so will our British film hold its own with film made in any other part of the world, that I have halted on that precipice of blind, patriotic optimism and am not afraid to point out where my countrymen are wrong now. The game has got to be learned by experience and not by books and talk, and so far America has got it all over us in experience. The other day I saw an exhibition of British films, placed here to suggest the British standard. Nearly all the titles were quotations from hymns. The scenes were badly directed, badly lighted, badly acted. The picture was uninteresting. I should like to see England form a Government committee of, perhaps four men—a legitimate producer, a film producer, a banker and a politician—to pass on every film that leaves the country, so as to create a proper standard. It takes time, patience, money, vision, talent and other things hitherto despised by the manufacturer, to produce a good picture and the story's the thing.

"England's future in the motion picture field depends solely upon the young English writer. My plea to our writers is to give up their fat jobs, and learn to write a motion picture story. If they will do that, they will send themselves up, their country will go up with them, and they will be bigger men than if they had written twenty successful servant girl novels. Why can't Marie Corelli, Hall Caine, Conan Doyle and other patriotic Britishers, realize what a tremendous revenue their country would gain from the successful development of the film industry? Their names are known the world over. Why won't they sit down and present to the British Government big film stories which the Government would hand as subsidy to manufacturers who had learned how to make them—who had learned in the big, successful school over here? Phillips Oppenheim is probably one of the most delightful writers in the world and one of the best fitted for movie stories, if he would remember that when he starts a character, the movie requirement is that he finish him, instead of losing him in the first reel, as Mr. Oppenheim does so delightfully in his third or fourth chapter.

"Moving picture writing is a new form of expression for Art. The artist expresses on canvas, the actor expresses with his voice and action, the novelist expresses in words, the sculptor in marble. The photoplay author expresses in the form of continuity. He paints the picture upon celluloid. He would make more money and have less kick coming if he would learn the art of definite procedure of thinking and expressing his fiction in the form of continuity. Next year I hope we shall find authors doing as Pinero did and printing their continuity so that no one can alter it. The writer can then take himself off to his fishing or golf, knowing that when he comes back and sees the story, he will recognize it as his, and not what this or that property man, electrician or film cutter thought would be good for the picture. Very soon the author will print the number of feet he requires to be taken in each scene. Each close-up will be set and timed. Each title will be written and directors will produce the action to suit the words and the picture and not retitle afterwards to suit the action, which is the ruination of so many stories. I have seen title writers with long beards and a far away look called in on a picture and asked to title it in two days. How can any one hope to understand the psychology of the story in this time and then be responsible for that most important component of the moving picture—titles?

"Another element that is bound to impede British progress is the financial caution so apparent in the procedure of the British studio. If an American is going to make a film and wants to get real money for it, he knows that, if the story requires it, he has got to spend real money; whereas no English film that I know of, with the possible exceptions of "The House of Temperly" and "The Better 'Ole," has ever experienced the real revenue which is the just tribue of an amused and entertained public to a good production.

"I am convinced that when Mr. Englishman wakes up to all these things, he will establish his moving picture in as dignified a manner as he long ago established his theatre.

"One other point—in England, you've got to be more or less of a gentleman to get on the stage. Over here, well—most gentlemen are taught to despise the stage as a profession. Nonsense! It's a great big industry, as important as oil or banking, and your Oxford and Cambridge graduate, your highbrow, your poet, you real big man can take it up with the full confidence that he is adopting the most paying profession in the world and the one with absolutely the most artistic promise of all the sister arts. Soon we will have a London suburb as prosperous as Pelham and people who are now walking about the Strand looking for jobs will be gliding thitherwards in the evening in more affluence than they ever dreamed of. If they will only realize that their cousins over here have got it on them now, and the quickest way for them to catch up is to come over and peep inside the American studios and talk with the men who, in five or six years, have risen from forty a week to the positions held by the pioneers of one of the greatest industries in the world."

In our own opinion, no matter how many Englishmen come over to study our methods of production, both Americans and Britishers had better look to their laurels when Edmund Goulding begins work in earnest, for he has a dynamic force and a sincerity of purpose that will take him far along whatever course he pursues.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

PROGRESS on the production of "Everywoman," the special feature being directed by C. B. DeMille, this week took the form of a banquet set with a table arranged in the form of a dollar mark, symbolic of the home of "Wealth," which character is being portrayed by Theodore Roberts for this scene in "Everywoman" of which Violet Heming plays the title role. Mr. DeMille employed, it is said, members of a company of musical comedy in Los Angeles during the week, to bring realism to the chorus girl types who were taking part in the revelry.

"Why Change Your Wife," the next special C. B. DeMille production to follow "Everywoman," will be begun at the Lasky studio the week of August 18, from a story by Wm. C. DeMille. The drama will be of the frivolous society type with Gloria Swanson playing the leading role.

The first scenes were made the week of July 28 by Director Donald Crisp in a soap factory in his production of "It Pays to Advertise," the screen version with Bryant Washburn as the star, of the famous stage success.

Director James Cruze, with his star, Major Robert Warwick, has reversed the usual hours of his association during the series of night scenes being made in the newest Warwick feature, "Capt. Dieppe." The company is resting during the day and working under the lights each night.

Wm. C. DeMille's next directorial achievement will be the production of "The Tree of Knowledge" with Major Robert Warwick as the star, and Wanda Hawley as his leading woman.

Following a visit to Seattle where he was the guest of the Northwestern Exhibitors at their convention there, Wallace Reid is on a vacation while the script is being prepared for "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," his next vehicle.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in "After the Bawl," a Capitol Comedy released through Goldwyn

Walter Edwards, who is directing Marguerite Clark in "A Girl Named Mary" with Wallace MacDonald and Kathleen Williams prominent in the cast, is nearing the final scenes of that picture, and is at work on the script for his next story for which a working title has not yet been chosen.

Under the supervision of Milton E. Hoffman, studio manager, preliminary work has been begun for the erection of a new wardrobe building which will have many modern conveniences in the preservation and alteration of costumes, and which will be built on the site of the old property room.

Fox Studio Doings

Scott Dunlap will continue the direction of Albert Ray and Elinor Fair in their next five-reel comedy drama for the Fox studio, on completion of their present feature. The new picture, which will be known as "The Little Prayer for Rain", was modeled after a story in the Red Book, and was to have been directed by Jack Dillon, formerly Jack Pickford's director. Dillon, however, has severed his connection with the Fox studio, and is returning to the direction of Pickford.

Accompanied by Studio Manager Sol M. Wurtzel, Tom Mix and his company left the Fox studio the week of July 28th for Ponca City, Oklahoma, which will be headquarters for the Mix Company during the filming of some strenuous exteriors in the Ozark Mountains. A large number of persons were taken on this trip as well as fifty head of horses which will be used in Mix's next Western picture.

At the Ince Plant

Three Ince features are now under way in that studio at Culver City, while several others are in the course of preparation. The big special production of "Americanism vs. Bolshevism", for which the script was furnished by C. Gardner Sullivan, is well in progress and elaborate settings said to be in keeping with the Ince ideal of magnificence have been erected. Among these is a three-story brick building of real masonry which will be blown up in keeping with the plot that calls for the demolition of a factory by Bolsheviks.

"Twenty-Three And One-Half-Hours' Leave", the Mary Roberts Rinehart story in the Saturday Evening Post, is being filmed with Douglas MacLean and Doris May in the principal parts. Many of the scenes are being made at Fort MacArthur, San Diego, where Col. Clark, Commanding Officer, is coaching regarding military details.

Lloyd Hughes, the nineteen-year-old youth from Bisbee, Arizona, has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to play one of the principal roles in "Americanism vs. Bolshevism". His screen experience has been brief, Hughes having come to Los Angeles to study mechanical engineering but having been diverted to pictures while attending the Polytechnic School.

Louise Glaum's next vehicle will be based on a story by the well-known author, Louis Joseph Vance, the name of which is withheld. J. Parker Reid, who is supervising the production, has engaged several prominent actors in support, among whom are Thomas Holding, playing the leading male role, Edwin Stephens and Bertram Grassby.

Jesse D. Hampton's production of "A Woman of Pleasure", the James Willard melodrama, featuring Blanche Sweet, practically has been completed, the principal scenes of which were taken in the mountains of Southern California. During some of the mountain scenes, Blanche Sweet made a balloon ascension which is to be a striking episode in the completed picture.

William Desmond, starring in "The Prince and Betty" picture being produced at the J. D. Hampton studios, under the direction of Robert Thornby, is nearing the final scenes of his newest feature. The story is a comedy drama by P. G. Wodehouse and in it Mary Thurman is the leading woman.

Wilton Taylor, who was prominent in the stage production of "Within the Law" has been engaged for a prominent part in the Desmond feature.

Hector V. Sarno has been engaged to support Harry B. Warner, Jesse D. Hampton's star, in Warner's latest feature, being a screen version of "Maruja", a story by Bret Harte of Southern California life that was picturized by Fred Myton.

Universal Newsettes

Three feature productions were completed at Universal City during the week of July 28th with Mary MacLaren, Harry Carey and Helen Eddy and Kenneth Harlan as the stellar attractions. Miss MacLaren, working under the direction of Ted Browning, finished her work in the principal role of "A Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie," which was based on a magazine story by Henry C. Rowland. David Butler and Spottiswoode Aitken are her principal supports.

Frank Keenan, featured in "The World Aflame," a Pathe release

The latest Harry Carey western vehicle is "The Eternal Savage," in which again he has Kathleen O'Connor as his leading woman. The story is one which Carey wrote in collaboration with Jack Ford, his director, with the scenario by Hal Hoadley. Other principals in the cast are J. Barney Sherry, Harry Von Meter, Duke Lee, Joe Harris, Ted Brooks, Johnnie Cook and the veteran actress, Lydia Yeamans Titus.

The third vehicle is "The Trembling Hour" which George Seigman directed from a story by Kenneth B. Clark. Besides the stars, Helen Eddy and Kenneth Harlan, those in the play are Henry Barrow, Willis Marks, Clyde Hopkins, Edna Shipman, Gertrude Astor and Anna Mae Walthall.

William C. Dowlan, who recently finished "Loot," the mystery melodrama by Arthur Somers Roche, is soon to start producing "Betty Reforms" by Mildred Considine. It will be staged with an all-star cast.

"ALMA, WHERE DO YOU LIVE"
Has Tremendous Publicity
Possibilities

Monroe Salisbury and company returned the week of July 28th from the Bear Lake region of the San Bernardino mountains, where scenes were taken for "The Divorced Wife," adapted from the Elliott Peake story, "The Altar on Little Thunder," by F. McGrew Willis. Alice Elliott plays opposite Salisbury, and the direction is by Douglas Gerrard.

Because of the fact that Lieut. O. L. Locklear, the daring aviator who changes planes in mid-air, has engagements to fill in the east early in August, Director Jacques Jaccard is working his company night and day on the production of "The Winged Trail," for which Jaccard wrote the story. Francelia Billington is the leading woman.

Elmo Lincoln, star of the Universal serial, "Elmo the Mighty," is to be the featured player of a six-reel photoplay, "The Beach Comber," by J. G. Hawks, to be directed by Rex Ingram; while "No Experience Required," a W. Carey Wonderly story, is to be produced by Paul Powell with an all-star cast.

Rolling Sturgeon will direct "The Breath of the Gods," the Sydney McCall novel, which is the first Universal starring vehicle for Tsuru Aoki (Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa).

Allen Holubar is making preparations to begin production of "Ambition" which will star Dorothy Phillips. Holubar is also the author of the story.

Marie Walcamp is playing the leading part in "Tempest Cody Sheriff" under the direction of George Holt; Reaves Eason is producing "The Crow" with Hoot Gibson and Mildred Moore in the leading roles, and Pete Morrison and Josephine Hill are playing in "The Return of Striped Shirt Ransome" under Edward Kull's direction.

Harry Mann has started to direct and act in a series of eccentric character comedies, the first of which is titled "Some Job." Florence Turner has just completed the second of her own comedies made under her own direction, titled "The Reward." Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have completed "The Bunged Up Bungalow." Director Robert Wells is at Colorado Springs filming scenes for "The Ranger of Pike's Peak."

Frank Mayo is enjoying a brief vacation after completing "The Brute Breaker" under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, while the scenario is being prepared by Clifford Howard for "Lasca," a western production which Norman Dawb is to direct.

About Metro Players

Winning four out of five games played in the Photoplayers' League, the Metro studio ball team defeated the Brunton aggregation by a score of 11 to 6. Lewis pitched for Metro and Kelly for Brunton.

Her home in Laurel Canyon was used as the setting for some of the first scenes in which Mme. Alla Nazimova appears in her latest production, which is a picturization of "The Native Doctor of Gaya," the novel by I. A. R. Wyle. Script was prepared by Charles Bryant.

Many accessories of the fashion world usually seen only in smart metropolitan shops, are being employed in "Lombardi, Ltd." in which Bert Lytell is starring in the screen version of the successful New York stage production. For the fashion sets, M. P. Staulcup, formerly display manager and designer of fashionable establishments in New York, has been employed, while six Parisian models of gowns used in the production, it is said, cost $35,000.

Viola Dana is being starred in "Please Get Married," the latest screen adaptation of the successful play being produced by Metro. Antrim Short, the juvenile actor, who supported Mary Pickford in boyish roles in two recent productions, has been engaged as Miss Dana's leading man, while Amos Meyers, formerly Daniel Frohman's technical director, has been employed as technician for "Please Get Married."

Operation was begun this week for an overhead steel trolley way more than half a mile long from which are suspended the eighty-nine banks of Cooper-Hewitt mercury lights used at the Metro studios. The system of transporting the lights was installed through the collaboration of Clifford Butler, Metro's general manager; Walter Grams, chief electrician; Ralph C. Godfrey, chief of construction, and John Fisher, stage manager. An ingenious switching device by which the lights readily can be transferred throughout the various stages so as to illuminate more than fifty thousand square feet of staging, is a feature of the elaborate installation.

Finis Fox spent a brief vacation in Yosemite Valley following his completion of the script for "Please Get Married," a farce by Lewis Allen Browne and James Cullen, being used as the latest Viola Dana vehicle.

Col. Jasper E. Brady, head of the Metro department, acted as host to Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Popham Young, governor of the Province of Bombay, India,, during the latter's visit to the Metro studio while on a tour of the United States.

KARGER'S FIVE COMMANDMENTS!

1. Thou shalt build thy settings for the camera's lens, not for the joy of the eye.

2. Thou shalt make many, many photographic tests of lights, colors, costumes and make-ups.

3. Thou shalt rehearse thy actors without make-up—for greasepaint fazeth the spirit, runneth on the neck, and maketh the actor feel bla.

4. Thou shalt practice each scene until perfect, if it take until week after next.

5. Thou shalt call me in for a dress rehearsal before shooting the final scene.

Here and There

Clara Kimball Young, accompanied by her director, Arthur Parker, and members of her company, were in San Francisco and vicinity the week of July 28th making the first scenes of "Eyes of Youth", the star's forthcoming picture, being produced at the Garson Studios, Inc., of Los Angeles. While the distinguished actress and her associates were in the North, elaborate construction was under way at the studios for the interior scenes. A strong cast has begun work in support of Miss Young, among them being William Courtleigh, Edmund Lowe, formerly leading man for Oliver Morosco and Gareth Hughes.

Gale Henry, elongated comedienne of the Model Comedy Company, has begun on her latest picture, the title of which is "Dizzy Lizzy." She is under the direction of Bruno J. Becker and her supporting cast includes Milburn Moranti, Hap H. Ward and Eddie Baker. The Model Company has announced that Canadian rights to Gale Henry comedies have been sold.

The Assistant Directors Association of Los Angeles, on July 31st, achieved a successful novelty in the organization of a barn dance, which was given for the benefit of the emergency fund of that Association. The dance was held at the Brunton Studios. Robert Brunton having contributed the facilities of a stage and equipment for the association, while an orchestra of thirty pieces furnished music.

On completion of his latest production, "The Wings of the Morning", William Farnum, Fox star, departed the week of July 28th for New York City accompanied by his director, J. Gordon Edwards and other members of his company. The Fox star will remain in the East, it is said, for six months, as several forthcoming productions are in the course of preparation there.

Men and women prominent in the West Coast film world were present during the week of July 28th at a preview of "The Other Half" the latest production to be completed by the Brentwood Film Corp. The picture was directed by King W. Vidor with Florence Fidor as leading woman. Others in the cast were Za Su Pitts, Frances Raymond, Charles Meredith, David Billing, Alfred Allen and Thomas Jefferson. The theme of the plot is developing many striking situations in the opinion of those who attended the first showing and is based on the brotherhood of man. The background of the action of the story presents an atmosphere of the life and surroundings familiar to the average American home.

"Smiling Bill Parson," having completed his stellar work in his latest of the Capitol comedies, has left for New York City on a combination of business and pleasure. It is expected that he will be in the East for eight weeks.

Director Paul Hurst is shooting the first scenes of the third episode of "Lightning Bryce," the eighteen episode serial being productd by the National with Ann Little and Jack Hoxie as co-stars. The entire company at present is on location in Bear Valley making mountain scenes, and is expected to be so occupied for about ten days. Included in the cast of the serial are Steve Clement, widely known for his startling ability as a knife-thrower, Ben Corbett, Walter Fatterson, George Champion, Slim Lucas, George Hunter and others who are putting the punch into the thrilling stunts with which the serial is said to be replete.

Henry Walthall is enjoying a brief vacation after his work as star in "The Confession" in which he was directed by Bertram Bracken. The picture in addition to holding the interest of any lay audience, is said to have a strong religious appeal.

Edwards and Flannigan are at work furnishing the chief comedy in the sixth of their series of twenty-six episodes of "The Hall-room Boys," which Harry Edwards is directing.

Billy Rhodes is discussing with the studio staff the details of the script for her next feature, the name of which has not been selected. Her recently completed production, "The Blue Bonnet" is receiving its final touches at the National Studios preparatory to its shipment East for distribution.

Henry Walthall's next starring vehicle is to be "The Kentucky Colonel" adapted from the book of that name by Opie Read, with the scenario by Franklyn Hall and the direction by Bertram Bracken.

William Seiter is to direct the next Capitol comedy featuring Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven, who are returning to their work after a brief rest between pictures.

Joe Ryan, who has been playing the heavy role with the William Duncan serials, will be prominent in Vitagraph production for the next three years as the result of a contract just closed with W. S. Smith, manager of the West Coast studio, following that executive's trip to Lake Huntington where Ryan was playing with the Duncan Company on location.

Joe Rock, comedy star, has been confined to his home with a severe case of infection from poison oak which he contracted while he and his partner, Earle Montgomery, were on location at Laguna Beach.

David H. Smith completed final scenes in his direction of the Bessie Love feature during the week of July 28th and is now engaged with the picture in the cutting room.

News and Gossip in the Equipment World

A few days ago saw the departure for the Nile of a caravan of Prizma folks. The party, numbering four, have gone for a years' stay and expect to bring back some wonderful films in natural colors. Dr. O'Neill, a Harvard graduate, will head the delegation, ably supported by Dr. Sugden. Earl Roseman, formerly manager of the New York theatre, and William F. Crispenil have accompanied the Drs. as cameramen. One of the big scenes they hope to film is the annual ceremony of sacrificing twelve young braves of one of the inland wild tribes. It is the custom to hurl the round dozen from the top of a 200-foot cliff. One camera man will be at the top, the other at the base. Nuf ced! Anyway we choose the top position.

Last reports received from Cudmore, of the Argus tribe, placed him at Albany on the last lap of his overland jaunt from Cleveland to New York. Not a pleasure trip at all, you understand, but business, strictly business. Cudmore has evidently found the trains too slow and the mails too uncertain.

While he is away the business of the Argus Co. is revolving around Brereton, the treasurer of the firm. When we were in his office he was mighty busy on some problem or other, while over in the corner were his golluf sticks. Every once in a while he would look up from the papers before him, take a slant at the aforesaid clubs, groan and then turn back to his desk. Surely it's a tough life!

Out at the works of the National Carbon Co. Dr. Mott is continuing his work on the white flame arc. He is also carrying around under his hat a goodly number of ideas that will probably make themselves known in the projection field before many moons. The National Carbon Co. doesn't intend to rest on its laurels now that it has produced the White A. C. Special and the Silvertip. Something better will come—yet.

Bill Kunzmann was on the job as usual. We knew it as a fact because he was so hard to locate. Everyone reported that he had just been there but had gone. When it comes to that overworked term "pep" Bill Kunzmann is hitting on all twelve.

Last Week We Met—W. D. Kunzmann

LAST week we had the pleasure of meeting W. C. Kunzmann, or plain, good natured "Bill" as he is known to those in the industry who have come in personal contact with him during his travels and at movie conventions.

Bill's experience with the picture industry dates back some sixteen years when he was connected with the firm of Kunzmann —Ging, who operated a chain of store show motion picture theaters in Southern Ohio. In those days, Bill managed these theaters and also took a shot at turning the crank, since projectionists were few and far between.

In 1909 Bill sold out his theater interests and took up a position in the Research and Engineering Department of the National Carbon Company, Inc., Cleveland, Ohio. From 1909 to 1915 Bill put in all his time in the Research Department of this Company in developing a carbon for motion picture projection which would equal in quality and screen results, the carbons of foreign manufacturers which at that time had the first call for projection the country over.

Several months prior to the outbreak of the World War in 1914, Bill developed for the National Carbon Company, Inc., a cored projector carbon that was found equal in quality to foreign brands used at that time. As the war progressed there came a shortage of foreign carbons, which resulted in the placing on the market by the National Carbon Company this new developed carbon, which in the short time thereafter became the recognized standard among high class projectionists in the United States and Canada.

Bill was not satisfied with the perfection of a satisfactory cored carbon, but kept up experiments and in 1917 he perfected a small diameter solid metal coated negative lower for direct current projection, also the special cored combinations trim for alternating current houses. These special brands of carbons not only improved the arc and screen results in theaters but were the first to be introduced in this country by the largest American manufacturers of carbons products.

Since Bill's connection in the carbon field, his hobby has been "higher class screen projection" and during the past four years he has been the National Carbon Company's field representative and engineer on the road. He calls on theaters throughout the country to impart to the projectionists his knowledge and experience with carbons as regards their setting, etc. In the past the projectionists have had very little training on the proper use of carbons to obtain perfect screen results under conditions encountered in their daily operation.

You don't have to talk long with Bill Kunzmann to understand the reason for his popularity with the man in the projection room. While it would be possible for a person in his position to easily antagonize the projectionist, Bill has the required tact, diplomacy and personality to get around this possibility. In his own home city of Cleveland his missionary work is strikingly evident in the high quality of pictures projected at the majority of the theatres.

When we met Bill it was just a happen-stance for he is generally patronizing the Pullman Traveling Hotel somewhere between Bangor, Maine and the Yukon.

"Well, Bill," we asked, "where do you go from here?"

"I'm leaving for Indianapolis, tonight," he replied, "and then on to Cincinnati. Then I'd ought to get to go to Texas but—no, I won't, it's too hot down there now. There's a job in Canada I ought to look into. Guess I'll shoot up there next."

Here's hoping we may meet many more like Bill. The industry can make good use of them.

Intimate Items About People You Know

And how he does stand in with the projectionists! He is the champion glad hand specialist to those boys in tank towns and metropolises. As a toastmaster and after-dinner agonizer Bill is right up level with Chauncey Depew.

Dr. St. John is a recent addition to the Research Department of the N. C. Co.

So much for Cleveland. Wish we could have found the time to have enjoyed their hospitality for many days, but we'll be back some time.

Sure, and the industry's movin' East. Jack Rose, cameraman de luxe, has closed his school of cinematography (pronounced cinematography) and taken unto himself the job of "chief cinem—" aw-w-w, you know, head camerman,—with the Apex Pictures Corporation of Indianapolis. Says Jack: "Listen! its an honest ter gosh fact but that country around Indianapolis has more possibilities than Los Angeles. You watch for our stuff and see if you don't agree with me."

Jack's card—yes it was engraved in two colors, and everything—didn't say anything about his connection with the publicity department but we have our doubts.

A visit to this town wouldn't be complete without a ride out to see Mr. Fulton, of the E. E. Fulton Co. What the man doesn't know about the supply game would just about make a meal for the wildest eyed bolshevik. In showing us around his plant Mr. Fulton and his son Myron pointed out a number of new devices which will make their appearance on the market shortly.

Mr. Fulton has associated with him his three sons, Myron, Ralph and Carl. The latter has just returned from France as a sergeant in the Engineers.

Here's a woman that is making a success in the industry. She is the inventor and the present maker of the Dalite screen. Mrs. DeBerri, of the DeBerri Scenic Co., has laid out and installed a number of her screens in the Ascher theatres in Chicago. Besides projection screens she superintends the making of dramatic scenery, backdrops and curtains.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Fundamentals of Illumination in Motion Picture Projection

By R. P. Burrows

Reprinted from Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

A PAPER presented before this Society entitled "Light Intensities for Motion Picture Projection" called attention to the many factors which enter into the determination of a suitable light intensity for the motion picture screen. Since this paper was presented, experience in the motion picture industry has shown the necessity of bringing to the attention of those interested in the development of the industry, through motion picture journals, conventions such as this, and through personal contact, a conception of the fundamentals of illumination measurement.

In reviewing the Transactions of this Society and the handbooks on projection, it is found that serious attention has not been given to light measurement. It seems desirable at this time to present material in a simple form which can be used as a basis for educational work which it seems to me this Society should do to help eliminate the guesswork from motion picture projection.

Comparisons of the candlepower of arc lamps when employing right angle carbons, inclined carbons, various sizes of carbons, various ampere strengths, etc., etc., are interesting and very instructive from certain standpoints, but the one result in which the projectionist is chiefly interested is the brightness of the picture to the eye of the observer. It is readily apparent that because of differences in the optical systems, differences in the reflection characteristics of various screens, differences in the fineness of adjustment, etc., two sources of very different candlepower might give equal results so far as the spectators are concerned.

To obtain a true comparison of the results obtained with different systems, it is necessary to use units of measurment which are not familiar to the motion picture industry. Just as we once had to learn that there is a unit called the yard which is used to measure length, that the gallon is a unit used to measure quantity and contains 231 cubic inches, so in dealing with screen intensities certain fundamental units must be studied before measurements can be made and before definite relations of cause and effect can be comprehended or expressed. Basic definitions have a very academic and sometimes a very technical sound, although the units themselves, once they have been assimilated, and not merely learned by rote, are comparatively simple. The definitions need not be committed to memory but should be thoroughly digested so that the distinction between the different units will be grasped and a working knowledge of what each stands for and the quantity it represents will be obtained. Very few electrical engineers or electricians could offhand give a basic definition of the ampere,* although they might all know that it is a measure of rate of flow of electric current and have a practical conception of the magnitude of the unit. In dealing with illumination measurements it is more practical to have a conception of the quantity of light represented by one lumen, than it is to be able to tell precisely what a lumen is. Obviously, it is of advantage to standardize certain units so that relations of magnitude can be expressed and understood with precision, although the value we arbitrarily assign as a standard is of little importance except from this standpoint.

* The ampere is defined technically as the practical equivalent of the unvarying current which, when passed through a solution of nitrate of silver in water, in accordance with standard specifications, deposits silver at the rate of 0.001118 gram per second.

THE CANDLE

A generation or two ago, when new light sources began to supersede the candle, it was most natural that the illuminating power of these new sources should be expressed in terms of the candle familiar to all. It is probable that the very first comparisons of two light sources were made by setting up the two lamps in the line of vision and gauging them by means of the eye, the most natural direction in which to look at the sources being the horizontal.

A glance at Fig. 1, shows that the eye (an extremely fallible instrument of light measurement at its best, is capable of measuring only a very slender cone of light at one time; in fact, if the eye is an appreciable distance from the source, the cone RST becomes virtually a single line.

Only a slender cone of light reaches the eye

While there are an infinite number of directions from which the eye might look at the source, the light-giving power in a horizontal direction was made the basis of comparisons, and the strength of the light in this direction from a candle made according to certain definite specifications, was arbitrarily chosen as the unit of intensity and called a candle. The newer illuminants appearing on the scene were rated according to their strength in this same direction and were stated to give so many candles. This rating of an illuminant is made by means of an instrument known as a photometer, a description of which will follow later. One essential point to remember in this connection is that the candle-power of a lighting unit represents the intensity in one direction only. In practice it has been customary for years to rotate the illuminant about a vertical axis while the candle-power was being determined and the result was known as the mean or average horizontal candle-power but even this determination gives an average value of the intensity in the horizontal direction only.

To carry our conception of candle-power a little further, let us assume three conditions.

The candle power in the direction of the Photometer is not changed by partially surrounding the light source with a non-reflecting surface

In the first case (Fig. 2A) we have on the left a standard candle and on the right a photometer pointed toward the candle. From what has already been stated, it is obvious that when the photometer is balanced it will indicate an intensity of 1 candle.

In the second case (Fig. 2B) we have used a sphere with a much smaller opening and are, therefore, wasting still more of the light, but even in this case our photometer will indicate an intensity of 1 candle. In fact our reading will be 1 candle regardless of the size of the opening, that is, regardless of the quantity of light we allow to be emitted, provided the direct rays from the direct rays from the candle to the photometer are not obstructed. This leads us to the important conclusion that the candle-power of a source gives no indication of the total quantity of light emitted by that source. Candle-power, we may say, is analogous to a measurement of the depth of a pool of water at a certain point on its surface—a measurement which is useful for certain purposes, but in itself gives no indication of the quantity of water in the pool.

The first fundamental concept we have to deal with in illumination, then, is candle-power, which is the measure of strength of a source to produce illumination in a given direction, and the power in a horizontal direction of a candle made according to certain specifications and burning under certain conditions has been arbitrarily chosen as the unit for measuring this strength.

Closely related to candle-power is mean spherical candle-power. The mean spherical candle power of a lamp is simply the average of all the candle-powers in all directions about that lamp.

THE LUMEN

We have seen that the candle-power alone gives no indication of quantity* of light. It is necessary, therefore, for us to develop a unit whereby we can measure the quantity of total flux of light emitted by a source.

For this purpose let us assume a source giving one candle in every direction, and that this source is placed at the center of a sphere painted black on the inside and having a radius of, say, 1 foot, (Sketch A, Fig. 3). OR represents an opening in the sphere through which some of the light may escape. The quantity of light allowed to escape may be varied by varying the size of the opening,

Opening OR has area of 1 square foot and emits 1 lumen; B, One lumen falls on surface O P Q R with the candle-power of the source and the radius of the sphere remaining fixed; if we decide on some definite size of opening at OR we shall have a unit for measuring quantity. The simplest area or definite quantity of light which we can use as our unit to assume for OR is 1 square foot, and if we do make this opening of an area of 1 square foot, the amount of light that escapes is considered to be the unit of quantity, and is called a lumen.† Thus

* Quantity is here used in the sense that it indicates only a summation of flux as throughout a given solid angle about the source, and over a given area illuminated to some average value. Quantity in a more precise sense is a summation over a period of time and is measured in lumen-hours.

† We could choose a sphere of any radius we cared to, as long as we kept the proportions the same by making the size of the opening such that its area would be equal to the square of the radius. The quantity would still be one lumen.

we have established a permanent unit for the measurement of quantity of light; the mathematical relations used to fix it serve only the same purpose as two scratches on a platinum-iridium bar in the International Bureau of Weights and Measures, the distance between which at a definite temperature is called a meter.

If the area of OR is made ¼ square foot, the light escaping will amount to ¼ lumen; if the area of OR is doubled, the light escaping will be 2 lumens. On the other hand, if we have a uniform source of 2 candles instead of 1, 2 lumens will be emitted through an opening of 1 square foot in this particular sphere. We know by arithmetic that the total surface of the sphere having a radius of 1 foot is 12.57 square feet. In other words, removing the sphere entirely, we would have the equivalent of 12.57 openings the size of OR; that is, if the candle gives 1 candle in every direction, with the sphere removed it would give 12.57 lumens. This means that if we know the mean spherical candle-power of a source by multiplying this value by 12.57 we obtain the number of lumens emitted by that source. A lumen may also be defined as being equivalent to the quantity of light intercepted by a surface of 1 square foot every point of which is at a distance of 1 foot from a source of 1 candle. (Fig. 3, Sketch B).

While the foregoing definitions establish definitely the quantity of light that we use as our basic unit, it must be remembered that a lumen, in order to be a lumen, need not necessarily conform with these specifications if the quantity of light represented is equivalent to that prescribed by the definition. A bushel might be defined as the quantity of any commodity contained in a cylindrical measure having a diameter of 12½ inches and a height of 8 inches; however, a bushel of potatoes spread out in the field is just as much a bushel as though the shape of the pile conformed in every respect to the dimensions just mentioned.

A conception of the relations just discussed may be obtained from the following simple analogy: Suppose that we have a pool of water of unknown depth, whose area has been found to be 5,000 square inches, and it is desired to obtain a measurement of the quantity of water in the pool. At first thought, one might be tempted to measure the depth at some point by means of a yardstick. If, for example, the depth at this point were found to be 6 inches, he might say that the pool contained 6 inches of water. Obviously, such a measurement would be practically useless. A measurement of this sort corresponds to the measurement of the quantity of light given off by an illuminant as determined by its candle-power in a single direction. On second thought, the investigator might make determinations of depth at regular intervals along a straight line through the center of the pool from edge to edge and find the average depth along this line to be, say, 4 inches. To say that the pool contains 4 inches of water would hardly be more conclusive than the first determination. Such a measurement would correspond to the mean horizontal candle-power of a light source. If the surface of the pool were divided into a large number of equal squares and measurements of depth made at the center of each square, the average depth thus found would give a definite idea of the quantity of the water in the pool since the surface area is already known. This determination corresponds to mean spherical candle-power. Now, if the average depth of the pool as just determined, is, say, 4½ inches, the quantity of water in the pool is 4½ times 5,000 or 22,500 cubic inches. To say that the pool contains 22,500 cubic inches of water is definite and positive, and this measurement corresponds to the number of lumens given off by a light source. The average depth of the pool corresponds in this analogy to the average intensity of the light source in all directions and the area of the pool corresponds to the area of the imaginary sphere about the light source.

It might be said that the above method would be a very awkward one to employ in determining how much water there is in the pool. A more practical method would be to pump the water into some measuring vessel, as, a barrel graduated in gallons. As a matter of fact, measuring the total lumens emitted by a light source is performed in a manner analogous to the method just referred to. The mean spherical candle-power or the lumen output of an illuminant may be determined at one reading by means of an instrument known as a sphere photometer.

THE FOOT CANDLE

Light is a cause and illumination the effect or result. Both the lumen and the candle are used to measure the cause, these units applying to the light source itself and not to the point where the light is utilized. To measure the illumination on a newspaper, desk or a motion picture screen, we employ a unit called the foot candle. A foot-candle represents an intensity of illumination equal to that produced at a point on a plane which is 1 foot distant from a source of 1 candle and which is perpendicular to the light rays at that point.

The illumination is less on A'B' than on AB (see footnote)

In Fig. 4, if the source S gives an intensity of 1 candle along the line SA and if A is 1 foot distant from the source, the intensity of illumination on the plane CD at the point A is one foot-candle.* The intensity of illumination, measured in foot-candles, is the unit of measurement most intimately associated with our everyday use of light, and a measurement which the eye either consciously or unconsciously is making whenever the faculty of vision is being employed, for the number of foot-candles we have on the screen, other things being equal, determines directly whether or not there is sufficient light.

A working idea of a foot-candle of illumination can be obtained by considering the intensity on a newspaper being read by the light of a candle, the paper being held approximately one foot away from the candle. The foot-candle is a unit applying to a point on a surface; by averaging the foot-candles at a number of points on a plane, we get the average intensity of illumination on that plane.

Care should be taken to avoid confusing the intensity of illumination on a surface as indicated by the foot-candles with the appearance as regards brightness of the surface. For example, a dusty or dirty screen lighted to an intensity of five foot-candles will not appear so bright as a white one, for a greater proportion of the light falling upon the screen is absorbed and lost. The brightness of an object depends upon both the intensity of illumination on it and the percentage of light that it reflects.

Having defined the foot-candle as a unit of intensity of illumination, we are naturally interested in seeing how the intensity of illumination varies as the candle-power of the source varies, and also as the area over which a given beam is spread varies. It is obvious that if, in Fig. 4, instead of an intensity of one candle along the line SA, we have an intensity of two candles, the illumination at 'A' would be twice as great, and that if we have an intensity of five candles the illumination at 'A' will be five times as great. Now, if we consider a source of one candle as shown in Fig. 6, we know that the intensity of illumination on 'A' which is one foot distant is one foot-candle. If, however, we remove the plane 'A' and allow the same beam of light that formerly was intercepted by 'A' to pass on the plane 'B', two feet away, we find as shown in the diagram that this same beam of light would have to cover four times the area of 'A'; and, inasmuch as we cannot get something for nothing, we would find that the average intensity on 'B', two feet away, would be one-fourth as high as that on 'A' 1 foot away, or one-fourth of a foot-candle. In the same way, if 'B' also is removed and the same beam allowed to fall upon plane 'C' three feet away from the source, it will be spread over an area nine times as great as 'A' and so on; at a distance of five feet we would have one-twenty-fifth of a foot-candle. From this we deduce that the intensity of illumination falls off not in proportion to the distance, but in proportion to the square of the distance. This relation is commonly known as the inverse square law.

IMORTANT RELATION BETWEEN FOOT CANDLE AND LUMEN

If we refer back to Fig. 3B, we see that the surface OPQR is illuminated at every point to an intensity of one foot-candle. We also know by definition that the quantity of light falling on the plane OPQR is one lumen. This gives us the important law that if one lumen is so utilized that all of the light is spread over a surface of one square foot, that surface will be lighted to an average intensity of one foot-candle. This relaltion is an important one for once the number of square feet to be lighted and the intensity of illumination which it is desired to provide are known, it is a simple matter to find how many lumens must be supplied to illuminate a surface. If, for example, it is desired to illuminate a surface of 100 square feet to an average intensity of five foot-candles, 500 lumens must be utilized.

It Happened in Antigua

Producers ought to issue a code book of foreign manners and customs for camera men who represent them in various parts of the world if they would assure that peace of mind that is conducive to good photography.

Dr. William Greene and Mr. George Haynes, who have just returned from Guatemala with several thousand feet of negatives for Prizma, reached this conclusion as the result of an experience in Antigua, where they were photographing what remains of the evidence of the early Aztec and Toltec civilizations.

One of the invariable customs of the country is that all those coming to the public washing places to do the family laundry must first dip the water from the well and allow it to run over the right wrist to prevent illness. Failure to engage in this ceremonial rite is supposed to be fraught with dire consequences. Haynes, who had occasion to clean a camera cover, stepped to the public wash tub, dropped in his cover and filled a gourd with water. By a simple turn of the wrist he could have made himself immune to the devils that attack the human flesh. But not Haynes. In regular American fashion he poured the water directly into the stone basin. Instantly he was persona non grata with half a hundred natives. The devils would attack him sure. His days are numbered. In the parlance of the haunts with which Haynes is more familiar—"Good night."

Now camera men are usually in worse predicaments than this as a matter of regular routine. But in this case, to use Haynes' own expression, for he is just out of the army—he was "out of luck." The next day he became affected by the heat, a quite natural experience when it is considered that he had been sweltering through days when the temperature reached 110° in the shade. His illness was the signal for a general wagging of tongues and rolling of eyes. The "I told you so"

* If instead of being perpendicular to the beam, the plane AB is tilted at an angle, as shown in Fig. 5, it will be seen that the light of this beam is spread over a greater area than if the plane is perpendicular, so that the intensity of illumination on the plane is less in proportion to the ratio of the length of AB to the length of A'B', or to the cosine of the angle between a perpendicular to the A'B' and the axis of the beam, which is the angle X. If, with the plane in the position AB the illumination is 1 foot-candle and the cosine of the angle X is 0.7, the average illumination on the plane in position A'B' will be only 0.7 of a foot candle.

Boylan Even-Tension Reel

is a combination reel and tension take-up device which absolutely eliminates all take-up troubles.

It requires no attention, and is positively automatic and fool-proof.

It will save you trouble and money.

Gentlemen:

We wish to take this opportunity to thank you for placing the (Boylan Even Tension Reel) on the market which I am sure is the best remedy for loss of lower loop, checked sprocket holes, undercut sprockets.

Since using the reels I have not had a single stop, and I firmly believe that in the near future they will be a part of the equipment of every Theatre in the Country. The reels are doing all you promised for it.

A Bull's Eye

THERE is no sweeter tune to our ears than the sound of a typewriter which has been dusted off and is typing a letter to the projection department, especially if the two-fingered expert (or is it four, in your case, friend Allen) is as well known and as thoroughly experienced as W. B. Allen, President of Local 360, the writer of the letter which we print below.

First off he speaks of the "merits and demerits," then he follows by giving at least eleven demerits and but one lone "merit." Come to think of it we are not sure that signal systems as such have a single merit. The projectionist should be selected to project the pictures and when his skill is questioned a single time by what Allen calls the "kid usher" then the manager has an operator and not a projectionist.

On the front or in the lobby of most of the progressive theatres there is found a schedule of shows with the time of the beginning of each single reel and the feature. This schedule is maintained to the minute and though the crowds storm the doors with a queu extending a couple of blocks down the street there is no breaking into the timing. This is as it should be. The projectionist, if he is one, projects each film before showing and determines the speed at which it should be run to give results of the highest quality. After laying out his own schedule the manager should be able certainly to make out a complete schedule for the house, including music, ballets, pictures and intermissions. No complicated signals are needed here. As the writer says in his letter, the same purpose may be accomplished by consulting Mr. Ingersoll.

We are of the opinion that the money spent in installing a signal of the nature referred to should be added to a bit more and the whole applied to the purchase of a dependable intercommunicating phone system. The manager can then talk directly with the projectionist if an occasion arises, not necessarily to change the timing of the show but to see how things are in general. The projectionist may talk with the organist to make sure that his picture is fine-cut and clear. In fact there are innumerable ways in which a phone could prove to be worth its installation to every principal in the theatre.

Mr. Allen's letter reads:

JUST received the June 21st issue of the "News," and after reading the article on "Signal Systems" by Mr. Maguire, I decided to dust off the old typewriter and express my humble opinion on the merits and demerits of the signal idea as follows:

In his article the writer says: "This card might indicate at first that the 'operator' needs to be told just how to operate, but this is not the case, etc." That is just what the buzzer system is supposed to be for, and I might add that the only place that you find them is in "booths." It is very seldom, if ever, that you find them in a projection room because they are an unnecessary nuisance to a projectionist and he has no room for them at all. They are a continual source of annoyance to him because the people that push the buttons on the main floor know as much about projection as I know about building air-ships, and the result is that the buttons are on the go half the time (if not all the time) when nothing is wrong with the projection at all.

Further on in his article the writer states that when the house is not full, the "operator" projects the picture as it should be, but that when the seats are all filled, then Mr. Manager steps in and tells the "operator" to shoot-em-through and the "operator" does so. Yes, this is generally the kind of theatre where you will find the signal stunt in operation. As a rule these theatres are not troubled with big crowds for that very reason and if they are it is because the public has no where else to go.

The writer then goes on to state that he does his own rewinding, etc. I suppose that is the excuse for the signal gag. I would like to say that 90 per cent. of the projectionists in the United States and Canada do what friend Maguire states and a lot more. In the average modern theatre we find two projectors, a spot light and very often a dissolver, and all this equipment is handled by one projectionist for 6 or 8 hours per day. He has to rewind films, change carbons, run slides and what not. All this he does without the aid of any kind of signal gag that is operated by the lady in the box office or the kid usher. Now, mark you, I don't say that the projectionist can do his best working this way, but I do say that a buzzer would not help out one iota.

I might state, Mr. Editor, that my reasons for taking exceptions to this article is because I honestly believe that we should endeavor to discourage this signal gag and a few other gags that are in vogue at the present time. They are things of the past. The signal gag was alright in its day, as was the Power's 5, the "booth," the "operator," and the "picture shop." But it has been discarded with the "operator" and a few other undesirables and in its place we have installed a Projectionist to fill the office of the "operator" and the signal gag.

In closing I might say that the only point about the system that is not objectionable, is that it indicates what reel is on the screen. However, the way it is arranged, it only adds to the burden of the already overloaded Projectionist, as it is necessary for him to manipulate the device once every reel. Most theatres accomplish the same purpose by consulting Mr. Watch.

Interesting Letter from Perry Sherman

Corpus Christi, Texas.
July 4, 1919.

Mr. E. L. Bragdon,
Technical Editor,
New York City.
My Dear Mr. Bragdon:

I was somewhat surprised to think that you was really curious to know what I find in my spare time, and as I am at leasure now, I am going to give you an idea of how we do it down in the land of cotton, cactus and oil.

My day begins at NINE in the morning, with the light breakfast, then off to the theatres to see if there are any complaints, then to my office, (Oh yes, I have an office for my exclusive use. Ask Burroughs of Kennedy, Texas, Billy Williams, this city, or a dozen others I know. They have been in it AND THEY KNOW.)

Film records of releases are gone over and also the film record of runs made up, showing that it was in a certain condition, that we made so many patches, stops and changes, number slides and date slides are withdrawn, how old the print is, and the length of the show.

During this time the various salesmen for electric supply houses, and the film road men have stopped in, and it is Eleven o'clock. The lunch hour; then at One the houses are running, and from that time until Eleven at night, I have my ear to the ground, so to speak, listening for the trouble call, maybe sending a relief man out, and maybe absolutely nothing unusual doing for a week or a month, but if the war-cry sounds, I am gone and am right at work regardless of the hour, for things must go through on schedule regardless.

Now we are adding our own auxiliary lighting plant, and we cannot let every Tom, Dick and Harry experiment with it. That means that I will know exactly what is doing every minute.

From Eleven at night, until One or Two in the Morning, I am at home, reading technical departments of the various trade papers, and cussing the cost of high living, and after that time I am giving a correct imitation of a fine toothed buzz-saw cutting through a wet pine board.

I have my own home, have the best furniture money can buy, have two cars, a touring car and a real sure 'nuff racing car, and a scrapping wife that is a dead shot with a rolling pin.

If you were to visit me next summer, I will take you with me to see the most wonderful sight on earth, an entire island, covered so thickly with pelicans, pelican eggs, Gull and Gull eggs, that you cannot walk about but have to slide your feet along the ground; where the heavens are so full of birds in flight that you cannot see the sun, and where the birds are so thick that they will walk over you, should you attempt to lie down.

I have several thousand feet of film to take of that sight the next summer and people from all over the world have been to the place, only half believing what they have seen before their eyes.

In Winter I can show you the skies, black with ducks as far as the eye can reach, uncounted millions of feathered spots in the sky.

In two hours ride, I can place you at the ranch-house of the largest ranch in the United States.

With all these attractions around me, how do I spend my time?

If I could open my desk and hand you my scrap book, you would sure enjoy yourself, as you will find everything you can imagine, from how to make a positive direct in the camera for slide work down to how to make lens polish.

One of my greatest treasures is a Royal British order awarded me by a technical paper in London, England, for the assistance with a problem in projection. Said award not being expected by me, and was a great surprise to me as I have learned that I am the first American projectionist to be so honored.

In closing, my dear Bragdon, I wish to compliment you on the projection and photographic departments, for I certainly enjoy them and hope that they may be further enlarged, for truly, our craft is poorly representated in the magazine field, compared with the doctors and lawyers and other professions, and I insist that ours is as much a PROFESSION as the rest.

It is the hope of mine that you may always have the best of luck with your work, and then I will know that our dear friend, Mr. Corey, sleeping at Peace with his GOD and Master rests secure in his long cherished hope the work he dearly loved is being carried on as he carried it, namely with an effort to help his fellowmen, to bear malice toward none, and to overlook ahead to the grandest profession on Earth, the profession of PROJECTIONIST.

I thank you!
Your sincere friend,
PERRY J. SHERMAN.

Some Times it Happens This Way

Says R. O. De Gruy, of Lourel, Miss.:

"I saw a sticker in my films of an Anti-Misframe League. I am strong on this subject. Please let me know what the League is and how I can get into it.

Answer: It is a very simple matter both physically and financially to enter the League. We have told how so often that the recipe comes automatically. Simply fill out one of the application blanks which appear from time to time in this department and send it to this office. In return you will receive a membership card, a button and a supply of labels such as the sample you found in the film cans.

As for what you have to do—just live up to the pledge on the membership blank. Here's hoping we hear from you again and that the Honor Roll will contain your name as a consequence.

Another League Suggested

G. F. M. of Atlanta, Georgia, writes:

I received a film box with an Anti-Misframe Label on it. I think the idea is a good one but why not start or suggest an anti-punching league. To make myself more clearly understood, some operators are very deft with a punch-marking cue. I have samples here, one piece twenty feet long ruined by punch marks. It means a loss to Mr. Exhibitor and still greater loss to the Film Managers. Please publish this so that it may reach the small tavern operators that are unaware of this fact. Let us try and stop this unnecessary practice. Personally I don't think a first-class operator would use this method to cue changes.

Here's wishing you all the success in the world.

ANSWER:

In the first place you have shown that the name which was given to the N. A. M. L. years ago did not cover the fields of its activities as thoroughly as it might have done. For it is part of the pledge of every member in the League to keep film in good condition and while there is nothing said as to punch marks surely the clause just quoted would cover this subject. Not only mis-frames, but oily films, punch holes and torn sprocket holes come under the supervision of the N. A. M. L. In other words, this League, which we have already started is working to put on a better picture.

Your suggestion therefore, G. F. M., while a good one, has been taken care of by the N. A. M. L. If you think the idea is a good one we will gladly welcome you as a member and with a supply of labels you will then be doing your share toward ridding the country of the evils of punch-marking along with those of others we have mentioned.

Wants Amateur Cameras

ELMER W. SANTOR, who distributes Photoplays, writes from Bradley, Ill.: "It has been over a year since I wrote you last and if you will remember you will find I have been in the Film Exchange business since April 23, 1918. I have made good so far and have decided to produce comedies and scenic pictures. I have a Universal camera, also an Alamo camera to do the work. During the past year I have been very busy.

"Well, how is the N. A. M. L. coming? Don't forget that I am Member No. 698. Let us hope that the League grows larger every day.

"I have a number of calls for a good cinematograph camera for amateur use but have been unable to find one that is within the reach of the amateur photographer. Could you send me the name of a manufacturer who has low priced cameras for sale, with good mechanism, so that I may secure the agency to fill the demands of the amateur. I wrote the Simplex Photo Products Co., but they have discontinued the manufacture of the Alamo. I also wrote to Louis Hetz, 302 East 23rd St., New York. He makes a cine camera and offers it for $26. If you would look it over and let me know whether it is any good or not I would gladly pay you for the trouble.

"You may be anxious to know more of my producing enterprise so here it is. It will be known as the "Sanor Film Corp." and capital will be plentiful. Our first comedy will be "A Barrel of Money", length about 1,500 feet. Will release about the first of the year at which time we expect to put out four or five more. Our studios will be all over the country. I will tell you more of our enterprise later."

ANSWER:

As soon as we have a chance we will look at the cameras which Mr. Hetz is making and will let you know what we think of them. As for getting such a camera that will do any kind of decent work for a price around $25 we have our doubts. When pictures were first being shown most anything got by but now the public has been fed up on films to the extent that only the best is wanted. Even an amateur who tried out a camera and found that his results were too far below the theatre standard would be discouraged.

We have seen films taken by an experienced amateur, that is, to say it was not his first attempt by any means, and the screen results while interesting were not satisfactory. And the camera he had used cost much nearer $150 than $25.

Perhaps some of our readers know of a manufacturer who is getting out an amateur camera at the price you name. If so they will be doing all of us a favor by sending in his name and address.

Good luck to your enterprise. Keep us posted from time to time on your progress. And may "A Barrel of Money" bring in the same quantity of that commodity to you.

An Interchangeable Sign

That the theatre manager is thoroughly appreciative of the value of the display sign is indicated by the number of new signs which have been developed during the past year. Within a few weeks still another one has made its appearance in the market and, particularly, in Chicago and vicinity, has made an excellent impression.

The firm, which is known as the Interchangeable Sign System, is making a beautiful and practically indestructible changeable letter sign with blue background and white letters. The letters themselves are porcelain enameled, and the sign itself is not illuminated.

The advantages claimed for these signs are: attractiveness, cheaper than banners, readibility at great distance, indestructibility, can be changed in 15 minutes, low cost only about 25 cents a day for an 18 months' period. This sign is not leased or rented but is sold direct.

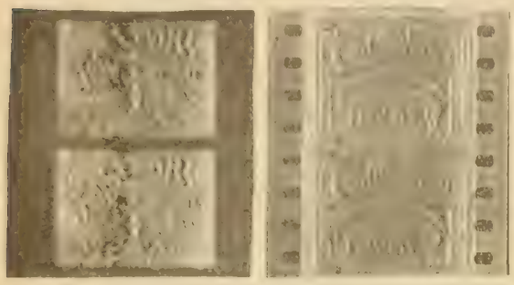
Attractive Leaders

The firm that can design something new and something for which there is a demand is assured of success immediately. Out in Los Angeles where most good things in films have come from there is a company known as the Wren Slide Co., which has recognized this fact with the usual results.



The illustrations show two "leaders" which this firm has made for the Columbia and Rosemary Theatres. These models in the first place were made in clay and then photographed. The raised letter effect gives a rich tone when shown on the screen.

There are many theatres of class throughout the country that could make good use of leaders of this nature since when they are shown just previous to the showing of the "feature" itself the effect on the audience is as if the picture had been taken for them personally by the theatre showing it.

Housing the Suburban Theatre in the South

THE neighborhood, or suburban, moving picture theatre is a difficult housing problem in most of the larger cities of the South, according to the men who have built and own them. As much depends, according to these exhibitors, on the construction and comfort of the house at all seasons of the year as on the films exhibited, in the matter of attraction of the people. The extreme heat of the summer in such cities as New Orleans, Mobile and Pensacola, and still more in the interior in such places as Baton Rouge, La., Jackson, Miss., and Meridian, Miss., make it essential that the houses be open to every breath of available moving air, equipped with fans, ice-water, ladies' retiring rooms, and similar conveniences, yet at the same time they must be of such construction as to be capable of being heated to a comfortable degree when the mercury is down around 35 and 40 in the winter.

In the summer the people flock to the suburban houses to escape the heat, especially in crowded districts of the cities, and often-times, the exhibitors themselves admit, the film is a secondary consideration. In the winter, however, "the play's the thing" which draws them from their warm homes, and if the moving picture theatre is not kept properly warmed, the neighborhood house is soon without patronage. The result has been that southern cities have developed a type of suburban house which is somewhat different from that of many of the cities of the North, especially those in which the summer heat is not excessive, or in which cooling breezes from the sea keep the temperature down to some extent at least at night.

In New Orleans, which offers a good example of the highest development of the suburban moving picture theatre in the South, these structures are of sufficient height to accommodate two stories, yet have but one floor, with high windows, provided with two sets of shutters, one which shuts out the light but admits the air for summer use, and the other solid shutters which closes out the wind and the cold in the winter. One of the most typical of moving picture houses of this arrangement is The Fern operated by Peritz and Yoachim, about 50 blocks—nearly four miles—from the center of New Orleans. This is one of the most profitable of the neighborhood theatres of New Orleans, largely because it provides thoroughly for the comfort of its patrons, and figures on the failures of some twenty-five moving picture houses in the suburbs of that city during the past five years show that in the main they were low, one-story structures, poorly provided with accommodations for the patrons, uncomfortable in summer and winter alike. It is the belief of Mr. Peritz and of other suburban exhibitors that this lack of proper cooling and heating systems has been the cause in at least seventy-five per cent of the neighborhood houses which have failed to make good in southern cities.

There are approximately 75 moving picture theatres in New Orleans, of which twenty are in the center of the city and the remainder in the suburbs. Those which are succeeding are virtually all of the type shown in the photograph published herewith. "The people must have as much comfort in the moving picture theatre near their home as they get in the theatre or the moving picture theatre downtown," says Mr. Peritz, "or they will go down town at night to find their amusement instead of finding it in their own neighborhood."

Gets Sun-Light Arc Lamps

In keeping with a determination to have the newest and best innovations in the mechanical line for its studio at Dongan Hills, Staten Island, where King Cole Comedies will be taken, the Motion Picture Producing Company of America has followed the lead of Famous Players-Lasky and other companies erecting dark studios, and signed contracts for the use of three Sun-Light Arc Lamps.

The lamps will be used exclusively when the company begins shooting the comedies, within a few weeks.

Make Projection True to the Film

Many a masterpiece so far as the film itself goes becomes a failure under poor projection. Even as the film should be true to the subject, the projection should be true to the film.

The Columbia-Silvertip combination has solved the problem of direct current projection. The Columbia upper and the metal coated Silvertip lower are the carbons to specify for a light that without a doubt brings out all there is in the film.

A World Known Organist

MR. WALTER SIMON, whose picture adorns this page, can justly be called one of the first progressive Motion Picture Organists, in the United States. It was in 1912 when Mr. Simon composed the first music score for a picture produced by the Kalem Co. This was seven years ago when even the motion picture industry was in its infancy. Mr. Simon has exhibited extraordinary ability during the past few years in manipulating all makes of organs as well as overcoming the various obstacles encountered during his long years of experience in playing for pictures.

Mr. Simon is playing for the Mount Morris Theatre of New York City, for the past four years, and to our knowledge this theatre is advertising Mr. Simon as the "world's greatest organist." It is quite risky on the part of the management to issue such a superlative statement regarding Mr. Simon's abilities, but we will not attempt to diminish the truth of it. We have heard Mr. Simon play at various occasions, and we believe it to be a difficult task to prove that the management is wrong in their assertion that Mr. Simon is "the world's greatest organist."

Mr. Simon has written an innumerable amount of compositions and incidental music for the films which have been mostly published by Belwin Inc., 701 Seventh Avenue, New York City, N. Y., and are considered to be among the best incidental music issued. Some of the numbers which are scoring a tremendous success in film interpretation are the famous "Stampede" for Western scenes, "March Bizaar" for Oriental scenes, and "The Round Up" a Western characteristic.

Mr. Simon is of the opinion that the organ embodies everything necessary for a perfect musical accompaniment for pictures. He claims that a capable organist who knows how and when to use the enormous wealth of this king of all instruments, is bound to create a musical atmosphere in his theatre, which will not only be satisfactory to the management and its patrons, but also will result in great financial betterment for the organist himself. Some of Mr. Simon's opinions regarding organ playing and the instrument itself are very typical and characteristic, and we herewith reproduce some of his best statements.

"Synchronization is the secret of perfect musical interpretation and the only medium is the organ and the good man at it."

"The organist is the only man in creation with an orchestra at his finger ends."

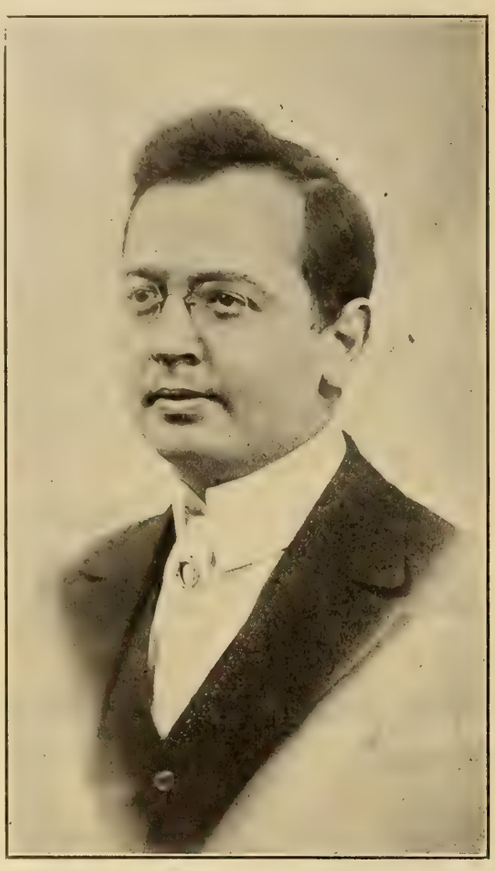
"The organist is only an individual and yet he has at his instant command resources of a great variety of stops enabling him to represent every conceivable instrument known in the history of music."

"He can produce every possible shade of expressive musical thought from the softest pianissimo to the loudest fortissimo."

"There is no episode that the organist cannot make thrilling, touching and enjoyable to the audience."

After listening to Mr. Simon's remarks, we came to the conclusion that it would take a mighty good orchestra under excellent leadership to do the work of an up-to-date and modern American organ.

THE EDITOR.



Walter Simon, organist at Mount Morris Theatre, N. Y.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles," the beautiful waltz by Kendis and Brockman. One of its many charms is the originality. (J. H. Remick.)

2—"On Miami Shore," by Victor Jacobi. This is the most beautiful dreamy waltz song that this celebrated composer has written. (Chappel & Co.)

3—"My Desert Fantasy," by Robert Reid. A one-step, fox trot intermezzo, which has proved to be a record-breaker. (A. J. Stasny.)

4—"Mandy," a fox trot or one-step. The sensational song hit from Ziegfeld's "Follies of 1919." (Irving Berlin, Inc.)

5—"The Hand That Rocked My Cradle Rules My Heart," by Irving Berlin. The most remarkable hit, fast becoming a sensational favorite as a dance waltz. (Irving Berlin, Inc.)

7—"Love Blossom," by Lucien Denni, a waltz predicted to be the biggest waltz hit, because it is one of the most unique and most melodious waltz melodies ever played. (J. W. Jenkins Sons.)

8—"Cinda Lou," by Chas. Beetho, a shimmie fox trot. The dance arrangement of this number, is one of the snappiest, most effective and novel ever published. (J. W. Jenkins Sons.)

9—"Karzan," by Will E. Dulmage, a fox trot, based on a real Oriental melody. (Sam Fox Pub. Co.)

10—"Chu Chu San," a Japanese fox trot by a well-known dance orchestra leader, Joe Samuels. (Sam Fox Pub. Co.)

12—"Serenade Romantique," by Gaston Borch. A charming romance of exquisite tonal beauty and most appropriate for a theme of an emotional love drama. (Belwin, Inc.)

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest catalogue. Write us today.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

Pictures Reviewed in Advance on This Page Each Week

"Shades of Shakespeare"

(Two-Reel Christie Comedy)

"SHADES OF SHAKESPEARE" is a skilfully directed, admirably acted, ridiculously funny two-reel comedy in the "Special" class. Alice Lake is a charming star and every member of the large cast registers high grad.

There is a neat little story, or rather, a real reason offered for the comedy situations which mount one upon another in rapid fashion. There is not a dull moment. The plot and theme is consistent and at the Rialto where the reviewer saw it, this Christie Comedy was the emphatic hit of the bill and not only the children but also the sedate men and women in the audience were moved to not only chuckle continuously but were shaken by hilarious laughter.

It portrays the home town amateur dramatic club just about to produce a Shakesperian play when the strains of a passing band and the sight of returning soldiers marching inspires them to attempt a war play. The son of the proprietor of the opera house will not allow them to use the theatre unless he is cast for leading man. So the hero has to be the ruthless Hun captain. And there you have the theme, and the "comedy business" injected is worth one good laugh after another.

At the last moment the city fireman and chief are induced to become the German army and they consent. Then the "villain" rings the fireball. And it has a soul kiss finish.—Tom Hamlin.

"Oil's Well That Ends Well"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox)

BUD FISHER has placed Mutt and Jeff in the Mexican oil country for this release. And before they emerge to continue their comicalities the freaks live through enough adventure to last them a lifetime. Whatever possessed them to open up a bootblack parlor in a country where shines are out of order only Bud Fisher can tell. They didn't run it long, however, for a bewitching senorita happened along and they followed—followed to rescue her from the clutches of bandit soldiers. But their brave deed nearly spelled their death. They were to be shot against a stone wall.

The ambidextrous Jeff, however, wriggled himself away from the grasp of the soldier. And he fought like one of the "devil dogs" single-handed, against several of the foe. The senorita out of gratitude told him to send a wireless and he asked for two battleships or three marines. And it was lucky for Mutt that the shells dropped into the courtyard and saved him from execution. One huge projectile chased the tall fellow and finally tagged him for a fall. And he became unconscious when he saw little Jeff beaming with happiness because of his newfound love.

The cartoon is not Fisher at his best. The burlesque is not always funny. It is hard to keep the freaks in their best form especially when they have to appear in new roles every week.—Laurence Reid.

"Scenic Succotash"

(One Reel—Robert Bruce Scenic—Educational)

A VERY novel idea of introducing miscellaneous scenes of striking grandeur has been introduced by Robert Bruce in his latest scenic distributed by Educational Films.

An imaginary cooking recipe for succotash is used and the sub-titles are very witty and descriptive of the great variety of scenes pictured. The majestic mountains, the great forests, the peaceful lakes and rippling creeks, immense water falls and pleasant valleys, all combine to form a compelling array of nature's beauty unadorned by the hand of man.

This is perfect artistically from a photographic and laboratory standard and will prove a most acceptable filler on any screen anywhere.—Tom Hamlin.

"A Tropical Eggs-pedition"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox)

THIS is one of the funniest cartoons ever conceived by Bud Fisher—a cartoon which will rock any picture house with laughter. The two freaks are not seen here punishing one another. Each works individually and the idea behind their operations would bring a smile to the face of a mummy.

Mutt and Jeff are in the tropics to hunt wild game. The lanky fellow with the long nose spies a duster bird which will net him a large fortune if he can bring it home. The specimen is different from the ostrich because it has a tail similar to a feather duster. And its principal form of amusement is to tease a worm before eating it. It dusts off the spot where the worm hides and waits for the wriggly thing to come to the surface.

Well Mutt takes his shot-gun and peppers away at it without success. Jeff in the meantime has fallen in the quicksand clear up to his bullet head. And he hollers to Mutt for help. The duster bird naturally mistakes him for a worm and pecks away at him. He has further troubles when an ostrich camps on his head mistaking it for an egg. And soon a dozen baby ostriches are hatched. And they add to Jeff's worries. Finally the mother bird takes him across her knee and gives him a spanking and when this is over Jeff is sent spinning through space where he is lassooed by Mutt. The tall freak had thought he was roping the duster bird. A novel cartoon and a funny one.—Laurence Reid.

"Her First Kiss"

(Sunshine Comedy—Fox)

THIS Sunshine presents the ever present conflict between a country girl and a city slicker. And how slap-bang the conflict is all things considered. Daughter is happy and contented until a villain arrives for his vacation. Now the girl and her mother make a great fuss over him but he only toys with their affections. His indifference causes the girl to attempt suicide but she is saved by a goat who lifts her out of the water according to his own Hoyle. The slicker eventually learns that the country bumpkin has been left a prosperous store in the city and this piece of good news is sufficient to make him warm up to the girl. She signs the fatal papers and finds that he has vanished. So she finds herself with a wild horse on her hands.

The fun becomes fact and furious at this point. We next see the country girl as a slavey in her own store. The slicker becomes a genuine villain here and attempts to frame her as a shoplifter. But she is a husky amazon and she soon shows him who is boss. A big portion of action has been crammed into the comedy and the scenes of the store are broad burlesque.

The players who deal out the fun are Ethel Teare, Slim Summerville, Harry Booker and Laura LaVarnie. Each one is gifted with a large sense of humor. Miss Teare is rapidly forging to the front as a comedienne to be reckoned with. And praises can always be given in Mr. Summerville's favor. He is one of the best burlesquers in the picture business. Frank Griffin produced the comedy for Fox.—Laurence Reid.

"They're Off"

(Two-Reel Capitol Comedy with "Smiling Bill" Parsons—Goldwyn)

WILLIAM PARSONS has introduced a couple of real "villains" in his latest comedy. They try the familiar "badger" game upon the fat fellow with the aid of a beautiful girl. The villains spy his roll after a winning streak at the race track. He had placed the money on a horse named "Prohibition" and won without the aid of the Anti-Saloon League. Just plain horse sense.

He meets the girl and the couple proceed to see Coney Island. And right here the picture is not only good comedy but is just as enlightening as a scenic. The couple shoot the chutes and enjoy many of the nerve-shattering concessions.

The villains are always closely following and eventualy "catch" their prey and the girl in a room and demand blackmail money. The victim pays against the warnings of the girl, who now regrets her part in the proceedings. Then he has the three arrested and when they are up against the judge in the morning who should the judge be but the victim, the old fat fellow himself. He fines the men and sends them to jail. He takes the girl in his arms.

Then he wakes up and it's the dream thing over again. This is a fast running, thoroughly entertaining and amusing comedy for any theatre. A novelty in sub-titles is used; a double-header sotto-voice effect, and it's good.—Tom Hamlin.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 11, 1919.

CRIMSON GARDENIA, THE (BEACH-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST (MAY 18).....JUNE 28
"Different from stereotyped productions."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great, Extra big to big business three days." "Very good, great. Big business two days, extra big third day." "Good plot but not much drawing power. Story does not ring true. Just got by. Poor business three days." "Excellent in every way. Much credit due Goldwyn for the careful selection of the cast. The direction 100 per cent. More favorable comment received than any picture for a long time. Big business all week." "Pleased my patrons. Good comments. Big business."
Consensus—"Excellent picture, big puller."

CRY OF THE WEAK, THE (PATHE) FANNIE WARD (MAY 4).....APR. 26
"Fannie Ward in an absorbing play of crime and punishment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good program picture. Star very good. Average business."

DADDY LONG LEGS (FIRST NATIONAL) MARY PICKFORD (MAY 11)..MAY 24
"Star's initial First National has much comedy and sentiment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Mary is good. Picture is good but Mary is not as good as she used to be. Big business first two days, average third day." "Pickford's best. Broke our records for four days, doing extra big business." "This picture was thoroughly enjoyed by nearly all of my patrons and second day's business was larger than first. First-class patronage. Big business two days." "Mary's best picture and one that can be advertised to the limit and advanced prices be charged. Business very big all week despite extremely hot weather. Will play it again in the fall." "Record breaker by $1,000. Extra big business all week." "Big business two weeks." "Broke all previous records with weather 90 in the shade." "The best Pickford ever made of that type of picture. Did capacity for three days." "A great picture. We did the record business of this theatre at an increase in price. Extra big business four days."

"THE WESTERNERS"

(B. B. HAMPTON-HODKINSON)

Western Picture Is Absorbing and Colorful

HAMPTON-HODKINSON has in a picturization of Stewart Edward White's novel, "The Westerners," a well constructed, absorbing and colorful melodrama. There is no denying, the strength of the feature since it presents a canvas which is remarkably rich in "western" dramatic ingredients. And to augment it the director has dipped his brush into heightened colors which compose a most picturesque background.

All the elements which go to make up a "pioneer" melodrama are in their accustomed places and so it does not sound anything new on that score. Yet the treatment, the truthfulness of detail, the lifelike interpretation of the characters, the salient points of the narrative have all been so splendidly realized that a new western screen language seems to have been given exprssion. It appears a trifle more vivid in its reflection of the stirring times than what is usually depicted. There will be those who will carp over the familiar pattern, but to us it suggests an earnest of the slogan—"fewer and better pictures."

Nothing is amiss, least of all the action. In fact certain scenes are so elaborate with this element and are so vividly drawn as to make you forget your surroundings. You are with the players; you are in the picture itself. Praise must be given Director Sloman and the members of the cast for expressing such commendable realism. The players who are conspicuous for their achievement are Roy Stewart, Robert McKim, Wilfred Lucas, Frankie Lee, and Mildred Manning. "The Westerners" has everything that its title indicates—punch and pathos—action and atmosphere. It has been transferred from the make-believe world and given the breath of life.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A Great Authors' Production, "The Westerners," will be the attraction at the ———theatre on ——— of——— week. This is a picturization of Stewert Edward White's famous novel of the same name, produced by Benjamin B. Hampton, and enacted by an eminent cast that includes Roy Stewart, Wilfred Lucas, Robert McKim, Graham Pettie, and Mildred Manning. Mr. White needs no introduction to ———patrons, nor do the players. The first has gained his place in American literature as a fictionist of the first rank, while the members of the cast have been stars of many a screen play.

The story is laid in the Black Hills at the time of the gold rush and tells in an impressive manner of the implacable revenge of Michael Lafond, a half-breed Indian, against Jim Buckley, scout, who caused the former to be driven from a wagon train for insulting one of the white women. The revengeful half-breed assumes the leadership of the Indians, murders the woman, and kidnaps the child whom he raises as his own daughter. Years elapse and in the mining town that has sprung up, Buckley is the commanding figure. Lafond comes to take care of his saloon and when he recognizes the scout his revengeful spirit is faned into flames. Buckley cannot recollect where he met Lafond before since the latter is disguised with a beard.

The little girl is now the belle of the camp and her "father" is planning to force her into the life of a dance hall woman. Luckily, Cheyenne Harry, a reckless young miner, who has fallen in love with her, comes to the rescue and teaches the father a severe lesson on how to bring up a daughter. Meanwhile the half-breed has succeeded in disgracing Buckley in the eyes of his fellow-men. He is forced to fight his way out of the settlement. How Lafond is recognized before following in pursuit, how his plans are frustrated in a thrilling fight, how Molly is saved by the man she loves while the half-breed meets his just deserts in a plunge down a steep embankment in a buckboard, brings a smashing climax to an absorbing story.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ——— takes great pleasure in announcing that the first of the Great Authors' Productions, "The Westerners," which is a picturization of Stewart Edward White's famous novel, will be seen at the ——— theatre at an early date. This announcement should awaken keen interest in our patrons not only because of the place the author holds in American literature, but because it is one of the biggest pictures having to do with the pioneer days of the West that you will ever have the opportunity to see. Perhaps the majority of you have read the story, but that needn't deter you from witnessing it brought to life on the screen.

SUGGESTIONS

You can go the limit on this Great Authors' Production. It is a big picture in every way. First you have the name of one of the greatest fictionists to advertise. Stewart Edward White is a name which is widely known and read. So play it up big. Mention that his novel is one of the biggest sellers in the history of modern fiction. And the cast. Every principal has been a star in his or her own right. Your fans are all familiar with their names. Feature them in big letters and run stories about them. And the story. Tell that it is a big, sweeping tale of the pioneer days of the West. Concentrate upon the theme and run excerpts from it in the papers. Link up with your bookstore. The producers have arranged with the publishers to put it before the public again. Take advantage of this.

"THE DARK STAR"

High Class Melodrama Should Draw

A MELODRAMA set in high places with many adventures and a very slight love element. This "Spy" story moves along briskly and sustains the high interest and suspense because of the "chase" which has been injected. The locale is laid in New York and Paris before the war. Direction is clever; interior and exterior scenes are most excellent and there is a capable cast in support of the star.

The star herself just about gets by, either she is camera-shy or the possibilities of the role were beyond her. The original mystery image of the author as the direct cause of the war was left at the post and lost after the first subtitle. Both the director and continuity writer evidently preferred to sacrifice the Robert W. Chambers story and present their own interpretation of what the screen really demands. It is a well produced high class melodramatic photoplay that will entertain the majority of audiences.

After the death of her father, a missionary in Turkey, the heroine moves to America with his effects. Concealed in an idol are certain plans that the German and French secret service men are battling for. Adventures in New York City, perils on shipboard bound for France with the image containing the "papers," with the climax following a raid and thrilling fight in a Paris cafe, bring the hero and heroine to a realization of their romance and places the "papers" in the hands of the French government.

This should be a big draw everywhere and completely satisfy the majority of audiences.—Length, 6 reels.—Released July 27.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Robert W. Chambers' great novel "The Dark Star," comes to the———theatre beginning———in screen form as a Paramount-Artcraft Special.

Marion Davies has the leading role and appears as Rue Carew, the young daughter of an American misionary in Turkey who was born under the influence of a dark star.

After the death of her father she moves to America with his effects. It seems that among these effects is an image which contains a receptacle where important military plans are inserted. German and French secret agents are after these plans as the action takes place but a short time before the beginning of the great war.

The plots and counter-plots of the two groups trying to secure the papers lead to many fights and is said to be filled with thrills. And then there is the love and romance with the stirring adventures. The girl meets Jim Neeland a young mill owner whom she later meets again in New York. He was really in the service of the French government but the German plotters led her to believe that he was a German spy and should not receive the plans.

On shipboard bound for France the plotters of both groups are aboard and many melodramatic scenes are enacted. Finally in a Paris cafe a raid is made and young Neland succeeds in rescuing the heroine who had been kidnapped by the Teutonic agents.

And after this thrilling series of fast moving events she was happy in finding peace and happiness with Jim Neeland. And the French government received the important plans on the very day that war was declared by Germany.

Besides Marion Davies the cast shows Dorothy Green, Norman Kerry and Matt Moore, all stars in their own right. Allan Dwan directed this unusual production.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you should handle the exploitation in a high class manner. There are several points to emphasize. In the first place you have an author to exploit. Robert W. Chambers is too well known to need any introduction. And then you have the title. "The Dark Star" has been read by so many that it should be a big draw. And of course the fact that it is a Paramount-Artcraft Special means something in the way of exploitation as this is a well advertised brand.

But don't forget another good bet. There are four of the players who each have a fairly large following. Therefore you should capitalize the names of Marion Davies, Dorothy Green, Norman Kerry and Matt Moore. No circus stunts or freak lobby displays should be utilized. Present it in a high class manner and principally through the daily newspapers.

PROGRAM READER

She was born in Turkey and her father was an American missionary.

They told her that she was born under the influence of a dark star; an evil planet.

And when her father died she found among his effects an image or idol in which had been inserted certain plans of Turkish fortifications much desired by both French and German secret agents.

For this was before the great war. The girl soon became the storm center of fast moving events. And then she met Romance.

Stirring adventures, fights and thrills, plots and counter-plots, in New York, on shipboard bound for France, and at a famous cafe in Paris; until finally she was rescued by her hero and found happiness in America away from the influences of the dark star.

And the French Government received the important plans the very day that war was declared.

Robert W. Chambers, famous American novelist, wrote "The Dark Star," and Allan Dwan the well known director produced it as a Paramount-Artcraft Special.

"The Dark Star" with Marion Davies, Dorothy Green, Norman Kerry and Matt Moore in the principal roles, will appear at this theatre next week.

"THE WOLF"
(VITAGRAPH)

Adaptation of Play Is Mildly Interesting

ALTHOUGH this is the day of five-reel features, occasionally a picture comes along which would be a winner if condensed into three reels. Such a picture is Vitagraph's adaptation of Eugene Walter's melodrama of the North, "The Wolf," in which Earle Williams is starred. The play is built around one central situation and on the stage it kept one in a suspensive mood because of the colorful dialogue and the swift development of the action. But as a picture this important element cannot be told in subtitles and it spends itself quickly because of its one dominant idea.

The denouement can be guessed as early as the first reel with the result that there is nothing to hold the spectator at attention further than the big elemental fight that is promised as a climax. And this important detail is a long time arriving. And because it threatens to appear much earlier the strength of the situation is destroyed. The play revolves around a mere handful of characters. A French-Canadian's sister has been lured to degradation and death and it is her brother's purpose to vindicate her honor. You can imagine how five reels of "watchful waiting" will react on the spectator.

The players have nothing to do but group themselves and converse until the aforementioned climax puts in an appearance. And this belated action can hardly compensate for the display of picturesque scenery which forms a background. The star is hardly suited for the role he enacts. He does not suggest the Canuck for a single moment and he might have carried on his conversation in dialect. This would have created some illusion. The picture is constructed well enough and Mr. Young's direction is capable. But he could have turned in a better product with half the footage.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Earle Williams, the popular Vitagraph star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture production entitled "The Wolf." This is an adaptation of Eugene Walter's famous stage success and awards him the thoroughly congenial role of Jules Beaubien, a French-Canadian trapper, whose sole mission in the story is to mete out vengeance upon the man who wronged his sister. He has been absent two years and on his return with the girl's fiance, Baptiste, he discovers that she is only a memory. Jules wins his friend's consent to be the man who will execute the vengeance and if he fails the mission will fall upon the latter. They venture to the home of Andrew MacTavish, a Scotch settler, whose daughter Hilda is Jules' beloved.

There it is that fate takes a kindly hand and introduces the American, MacDonald. He is the guilty one, but he is wily enough to hide his secret. However, in a moment of proud boastfulness he admits to his companion, Huntley, that he is responsible for the tragedy. And the news reaches Jules. The trapper is not ready to strike. He must first provide for the safety of Hilda who has fallen into the clutches of the American. Her father has never forgiven her for her resemblance to her pleasure-loving mother. So Jules must convince the father that she is a dutiful daughter.

The time arrives for the execution of vengeance. The crafty Frenchman lures the American to the edge of a river and in a terrific duel he accomplishes his mission. Thus the shadow gives away to sunshine for Jules finds happiness with Hilda. Mr. Williams is singularly well suited for the role of Jules and plays it with a dash and grace that are admirable. His support is headed by Jane Novak as the girl and by Brinsley Shaw, Robert McKim, and others in prominent roles.

SUGGESTIONS

The best plan to concentrate on in this feature is the one developed in the program reader elsewhere on this page. The main fact is that the hero starts on a man-hunt. There is an old adage in the North country which is that when a wolf howls alone in midwinter some man must die. Play up this note. It lends mystery and atmosphere. Use it as your leading catch line. But feature the central idea. And make a lot of it. Give a brief synopsis in the papers and run mats and electros. Your patrons have undoubtedly seen it in the original for it was a great stage success. So they will be more or less familiar with it.

Tell that it is written by Eugene Walter, one of the most successful playwrights, and the author responsible for such dramatic thrillers as "The 13th Chair," and "The Knife." He always writes with a punch and his plays are remarkably vivid. Play him up big and tell your patrons that a big treat is in store for them. If you are decorative in your lobby scheme you can emphasize the picture by displaying the trimming and trappings that are worn and used in the North. Use stills of the star. He does some very good work here. Use catch lines liberally. The title is suggestive for that sort of thing.

PROGRAM READER

Jules and Baptiste had bid Annette "au revoir" as they departed into the wilds to set their traps. The former was her brother, the latter, her lover. They little suspected that a shadow would some day fall on their horizon. But when they returned they found a mound on the side of the mountain. It was her grave. And so Jules and Baptiste started on a man-hunt. They swore to mete out terrible vengeance upon the beast who caused their loved one's death. They swore to hunt the wide world over if necessary until their mission was accomplished. And they wandered to the cabin of Andrew MacTavish. The Scotchman's daughter, Hilda, had long fascinated Jules.

But who was this stranger, MacDonald? Could he be the wolf? He was wily and never gave an inkling of his experience with the girl he had wronged. He even forgot the incident in his search for a new adventure with Hilda. So Jules had a double purpose. To save the girl from his clutches and to mete out vengeance upon him, for he discovered he was on the right track. The wolf had howled at night and this means that some man must die. How this picture is brought to an end is told in a striking climax. See Earle Williams in "The Wolf" at this theatre next ———. You're in for a genuine treat.

CATCH LINES

See "The Wolf"—a tale of the Northwest where wolves howl in pack and sometimes alone. When a wolf howls alone in midwinter—someone must die. Did this adage come true? You will find out when the picture is shown at the ——— next ———.

The two trappers went away happy and contented. When they returned they found the dearest human being in their lives was dead. And so they hunted—hunted without rest until they found the man who had brought them their sorrow. See "The Wolf."

"CAREER OF KATHERINE BUSH"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT SPECIAL)

Drama Will Draw and Generally Satisfy

A DRAMA based on the desires of a poor but pretty and ambitious working girl to arise from her common-place environments and move with the elite. And although in this Elinor Glynn story she has no particular scruples about how she gets there, the heroine will appeal to all but the most prudish.

The director and continuity writer were able to keep the story from becoming crude and their efforts were augmented by the star and her support. The settings were appropriate and the photography up to the standard. While this may not be generally considered as a criterion to the impression many persons may possess on the qualities of Paramount-Artcraft SPECIALS, it is nevertheless a photodrama that will generally satisfy and it should have big drawing possibilities.

She leaves her lowly home in London and meets a young nobleman with whom she spends two nights. She speedily regrets her action after finding that she is possibly farther away than ever from the fashionable class whose society she craves. Securing a position as social secretary to Lady Garribardine she meets a Duke and he finally proposes. He spurns her when she confesses to him her first and only false step, but finally forgives her and they are married.

This should draw quite strongly at first run houses in the larger cities and also at high class neighborhood houses. It will generally satisfy as a picture. The draw should be above the average in the popular, family and laboring class houses, and as a picture will generally satisfy the popular and labor audiences, but may not so generally satisfy the family audiences as a picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 13.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An Elinor Glyn story screened as a Paramount-Artcraft Special, and starring beautiful Catherine Calvert, will appear at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

"The Career of Katherine Bush" is said to adhere very closely to the novel and was directed by R. William Neill. The screen version boasts of a big special cast of well known players.

Katherine Bush is not satisfied with life and considers her own hard-working English family as dull and unrefined. She aspires to the heights in society and argues to herself that she does not care by what means she may adopt to win her desires.

And she meets a well known young nobleman in London who took advantage of her high social ambitious, but after a few days she was disillusioned and knew that she had sinned without advancing one iota towards the higher strata of society.

The beautiful young girl then secured a position as social secretary to Lady Garribardine, and is then surrounded by the environments which she craved. But there was a certain young duke whom she very much admired. And as affairs developed it seems that the same young duke learned to love her and finally proposes marriage. He was a member of the British House of Lords and all her early ambitions seemed about to be realized.

Then came the great problem. She found that she actually loved him. But she finally won the great victory by confessing to him her early and only sin. And he scorns her and goes away. But he returns to forgive and both happiness and affluence are the rewards of Katherine Bush.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you should give a little thought to your audience, and if they like the so-called ginger or sensational stuff you should make that the feature in your advertising and the predominant angle in all your publicity. Of course they will not find anything really sensational in the picture, but it will bring them into the box office and will generally satisfy them as a picture.

On the other hand, if your audience is a family crowd, containing several prudish ones, you should emphasize that, although this is a daring subject, it is handled in a very delicate manner, and that because it is a Paramount-Artcraft Special that fact should speak for itself, etc., etc.

And she finally wins love and affluence.

This is an Elinor Glyn story screened as a Paramount-Artcraft Special, and comes to this theatre next week. It is a daring story anent moral problems and the film producers have handled it in a delicate manner. Calvert."

A dramatic moment in "The Career of Katherine Bush," the Paramount-Artcraft special from the novel by Elinor Glyn

PROGRAM READER

Her folks were commonplace. They bored her. She was beautiful and felt that she could secure some of the good things in this life.

New environments seemed possible to acquire after she met a young nobleman in London, but she was soon disillusioned and found that she was trying to enter by the wrong door.

Nevertheless the young girl was not entirely discouraged nor did she cry out to the world that she was ruined, and she did not try to drown herself in the nearby Thames River. She was just as determined as ever to become one of the small group that occupied the high places in life.

"THE LOVE CHEAT"
(PATHE)

Frail Story of Society and Sentiment

ALBERT CAPELLANI'S starring team, Creighton Hale and June Caprice, have a decidedly frail entertainment to offer in "The Love Cheat," an adaptation of a French play. It is mostly a spray of sentiment which could best be told as a short subject instead of feature length. And because of its frail character it hardly suffices to keep one constantly interested. While the story presents a good enough appearance, scene by scene, yet it is only too obvious that it has been extensively padded to round out a full hour of entertainment.

Credit must be given to Mr. Capellani however, in the manner he has elaborated the slender material and made it lambent with charm and sentiment. Nevertheless the thought arises that he is capable of better things than sponsoring such delicate pieces. The average patron has outgrown the idea of a poverty-stricken artist who falls in love with an heiress and through his pretentions represents himself as "class." He knows from the start that their differences will be settled after a series of pretty poutings and playful attitudes have been struck off. And so it is over and the word—"average" can be written after it.

Mr. Hale makes a likeable hero and acts with admirable repression. Would that Miss Caprice might gauge her values as well. There is no fault to be found with her work except that she uses her smile too often. Alfred Hickman's talents are wasted in a saccharine role. The technicalities are well arranged allowing for an over indulgence of close-ups.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 24.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Albert Capellani's newest production to be seen at the ——— theatre next ——— afternoon and evening, with Creighton Hale and June Caprice in the stellar roles, is "The Love Cheat," an adaptation of a brilliant French comedy-drama. As scenarioized by Peggy McCall and directed by George Archainbaud, it brings into play a typically American romance—a romance of an heiress to millions and a poor, struggling artist.

Louise Gordon and Henry Calvin meet under most unconventional circumstances. The young man is scheduled to keep an appointment at a certain hotel where Louise is giving a "coming out" party. Of course he does not belong to society and naturally hasn't received an invitation. But when he turns to leave he finds that he has a guest's overcoat on, with one of the choice invitations in the pocket. And being an opportunist, he decides to stay and participate in the refreshments. His manner is so ingratiating that he makes an instant hit not only with Louise, but with her parents.

His heart rebels at any deception, but a friend, who hapens to be a guest, urges him to play the game out, inasmuch as Louise is deeply in love with him. The friend even loans him money to carry his bluff through, and with this good fortune he decides to give expression to his love. And he thinks so much of her that he hasn't the heart to tell her that he isn't sincere. The engagement dinner approaches and Henry is unable to muster up courage since his friend has deceived him. And the guests are surprised to learn that Louise has consented to marry a discarded lover, Herbert Rand. Eventually events happen that restore Henry his self-respect and when Louise discovers his sincerity she decides he is not a love cheat, but an earnest young man in love. And so they are happy. The stars have roles that are admirably suited to them, while the supporting cast is in every way commendable.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a romantic comedy-drama which should please the patrons of your theatre regardless of their years. Make known that it unfolds the art of winning a bride according to the adage, "All's fair in love and war." Catch lines would be a particularly good angle to advertise the pictures. We have written some with that view in mind. Use such teasers as "All the world loves a lover." You can bring out that the hero is somewhat mercenary. He is poor and he never saw the heroine before he met her at a "coming out" party. So he deceived her. Then he was sorry after he fell in love.

Make your audience curious about the plot. It hasn't any big dramatic moments, so the best plan would be to make your audience curious as to what it is all about. Play up the stars. They have made good in "Oh Boy!" and undoubtedly pleased your audience. Bring out that it is a Capellani production. Mr. Capellani is responsible for "The Red Lantern." Mention that fact. Use all the cut-outs available, also one-sheets for windows. And all the larger sheets too. Bring out that it is an artistic production in every way. Run stories of the stars and the producer.

PROGRAM READER

Making love to a girl under false pretenses is an old established game—especially when that girl has loads and loads of money. But your conscience will trouble you if you are built like Henry Calvin when you feel yourself slipping—slipping into love. Then you realize what a contemptible trick you've played. To give her up is to feel deep sorrow. Yet it is the only thing to do. Perhaps she will like you better when she learns how sincere you are.

These are the threads running through the fabric of "The Love Cheat," which will be the main feature at the ——— theatre next ———. The manly hero confesses and thus reveals his traits of honesty and modesty. And does the girl receive him with open arms? You must find out for yourself. Creighton Hale and June Caprice play the lovers. And they will delight you in their parts. See this picture of love and springtime. It will chase dull care away.

CATCH LINES

A poor, struggling young artist met a rich heiress. He did not belong to her circle, but she liked him above the men of her acquaintance. And he liked her. Their admiration grew into love. But his conscience troubled him because he thought himself a love cheat. Did he marry her? See "The Love Cheat."

What is a love cheat? This young artist, who was madly in love with the rich heiress, couldn't be called a love cheat, could he? You must decide when you see Creighton Hale and June Caprice in their latest picture.

He couldn't be blamed too much for cheating because all's fair in love and war. So he fell for his friend's promotion scheme of engineering a love affair. You'd do the same thing, wouldn't you? See "The Love Cheat."

Did she chase him? You bet she did. She chased him with an overwhelming love. Did she get him? You bet she did. Why? Because when she made up her mind to get something she usually got it. She "The Love Cheat."

Dramatic Picture That Will Generally Satisfy

A DRAMATIC story of the Orient with all scenes and action placed in China. This is not a spectacle but portrays celestial intrigue balked by American diplomacy. It is away from the beaten paths and quite heavy and tragic in spots, but should prove of general interest as it gets away from the light society and comedy themes and thereby gains by offering a subject different from the regular run.

Direction, continuity, sets, cast and photography measure up favorably and this can be branded as a generally satisfactory photoplay.

On secret service in China the young American learns that Tai, a woman of Chinese and French mixture, is one of the chief plotters in a threatened rebellion that may imperil American lives. She becomes infatuated with the American and he secures from her a list of the prospective victims. Tai's lover becomes jealous and plots against the American. He even abducts the American's sweetheart and her father who happened to be visiting China collecting relics. Tense situations and rapid action in many spots help enliven the picture.

The draw will be strongest at the big city first run houses and high class neighborhood theatres. It should appeal to them as a satisfactory picture. In the family, popular and labor class theatres it should have an average draw and prove satisfactory entertainment.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 4.—Tom Hamlin.

Supervised by Jesse D. Hampton.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

H. B. Warner comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "The Pagan God," a screen production based on the American balking of Oriental intrigue.

This photoplay is described as having a charming love story between the American secret operative in China, and the daughter of an American collector who is visiting China, with her father, who is in search of relics.

Tai, a woman of Chinese and French parentage, aspires to become the next ruler of Mongolia, and she becomes infatuated with the young American secret service man. He secures from her the list of prospective victims in the imepnding revolution.

His own American fiance scorns him for his apparent desire for the society of the Chinese Cleopatra. Tai has an Oriental lover who also becomes jealous of the American. And he plots to put him out of the way.

He causes him to be falsely accused of the theft of the Pagan God. And he abducts the American girl and her father. The rescue of his sweetheart and her parent is responsible for a number of thrills, and the hero finally succeeds in also overthrowing the chief conspirators in the impending revolution.

A tragic ending for the Oriental plotters and future happiness for the hero and heroine is the finale of "The Pagan God."

H. B. Warner, the star, is supported by a most excellent cast. Marguerite De Lamotte portrays the role of the American girl and Carmen Phillips interprets the part of Tai, the Chinese-French Cleopatra. Ed Piel, Jack Abbe, Carl Stockdale and Walter Perry also have prominent roles.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked it will stand for quite a little unusual exploitation. The title should suggest a morning matinee especially for ministers and priests by invitation and free of charge. When the newspapers announce that you have invited the Christian ministry to see "The Pagan God," it means a lot of free newspaper publicity in the reading columns which you otherwise could not buy. You might even announce that you will devote a certain percentage on one day to some well known foreign mission fund calculated to aid the spread of the Gospel in China.

State boldly in the newspapers that "The Pagan God" has held sway thousands of years longer than Christianity and claims more adherents. All this will give you a good tie-in with the title of the photoplay. But tell them the truth. State frankly that

H. B. Warner is back on the screen in "The Pagan God," a Jesse D. Hampton production for Robertson-Cole, released by Exhibitors Mutual

"The Pagan God" is NOT a religious play, and that you see no reason for any extended controversy among the church people. Then they will not feel hoaxed when they see the real theme of the photoplay which is not at all religious.

PROGRAM READER

He was compelled to let his American sweetheart believe that he was in love with a Chinese Cleopatra.

And the whip-lash of her scorn made him wince.

But it was all for a good cause and meant the saving of many American lives in the threatened Chinese rebellion.

When he rescued her from the group of Celestial plotters she began to realize that she had been traveling around in the encircling meshes of danger. American diplomacy and bravery on the part of her hero succeeded in defeating Oriental intrigue.

Thrills galore and tense situations innumerable are interspersed in this charming romance.

And it will be shown on the screen at this theatre next week when H. B. Warner comes in his latest production, "The Pagan God."

CATCH LINES

"The Pagan God" has held sway for thousands of years. It will hold sway only ——— days at the ——— theatre.

Christians and Jews should not be frightened. "The Pagan God" will only appear for ——— days at the ——— theatre.

Genuine Drama in Hayakawa's Latest

"THE GRAY HORIZON," the latest picture in which Hayakawa appears, rests upon a secure dramatic foundation and because it is sound in this respect, the feature is well worth while. There is an intensity to the scenes and situations which build to a climax the force of which cannot be denied. The characterization is deeply sympathetic and together with the plot they hold the spectator at strict attention. Hayakawa is an actor who always makes his work compelling. There is in his repressive methods a reserve strength which is always felt by the observer. The result is, his audiences never lose interest. And he cannot be called a lens robber for every member of his company is granted full opportunity to score his or her points.

The drama is based upon vindication of a woman's honor. The hero's sister has married an Occidental who arbitrarily falls in the clutches of the Jap. The conflict is felt when the American's widow sponsors the Oriental's artistic endeavors, though he never realizes at the time her relation to the man he has killed, nor does she have any idea that her husband met his death except by accident. The picture sweeps on to a forceful climax and the Jap, honorable to the last, confesses.

There is very little love element, but such a factor isn't missed. The author and the star have incorporated other points which more than suffice. The assisting players give a good account of themselves. The picture is framed against an enchanting background, the scenery ranking high in its picturesque appeal.—Length, 5 reels.—Released in August through Exhibitors' Mutual.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Sessue Hayakawa, the well known Japanese actor, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest photoplay entitled "The Gray Horizon." This presents a absorbing story of a Japanese artist whose sense of honor comes above every thing else. He receives a visit from his sister who informs him that she is in search of her American husband who has so cruelly deserted her. This man lives in the immediate neighborhood and is happily married to a woma of his own race. Fate lures him to the Jap's cabin where opportunity is presented to him to make amends. In a struggle he accidently kills the woman and escapes. But the infuriated Jap pursues him and finishes his earthly career.

Then into his life comes the widow of the scoundrel. She is igorant of her husband's death and the Jap has no knowledge of her relationship. The shadows which have crept out of his life return to torment him for when she employs him to paint a portrait of her husband the awful truth dawns on him. He goes through with his hated task out of love and respect for the beautiful white woman. But when the canvas is finished the likeness arouses his anger to the highest pitch, and with one stroke he slashes the painting. How the shadow mounts in ihs life, how he confesses to the crime but spares the widow the evidence which would free him because she had thought her husband noble, marks a climax which is intensity itself.

"The Gray Horizon" is filled with dramatic moments from start to finish. Mr. Hayakawa and his players take full advantage of them. This support is headed by Eileen Percy as the heroine and by Bertram Grassby as the American. The picture was produced under the direction of William Worthington.

SUGGESTIONS

The central situation of this subject which is dramatically worked out is the one to concentrate in your exploitation. This situation revolves about the star's character who holds his happiness and that of the woman who had meant so much to him. You will find this situation played up in the catch lines and the program reader that are printed elsewhere upon this page. If you handle it for its value you should have no trouble in building up interesting copy.

Of course you know how far to go with the star's name. He is an exceptional actor and you can go the limit in describing his talents. No one is better equipped to portray the sort of role he has here. Just how far he is a drawing card in your theatre only you can tell. But it is worthy of mention that he is now getting the right sort of vehicles—vehicles which will not jar, nor antagonize the spectator. Play him up big. And use stills liberally. There is no mistake about it he is a fine looking Jap. And he is a favorite with feminine picturegoers. Use the soft pedal about the contrast of the character he represents here and the contemptible American of the story. You might offend some patrons.

PROGRAM READER

Fate drew its web around the man who had wronged his sister and the wretch fell completely in his power. To the Japanese artist this meant one thing—revenge. And it was executed in terrible form. The fate continued to draw a shadow over the Oriental. His past was swallowed up in the living present. A beautiful woman had entered his life—the very woman whose husband was killed. But the Jap never knew her identity until she asked him to draw a portrait of her husband. And so the awful truth was realized.

Would it be better to reveal the tragic circumstances? No—she was ignorant regard- the victim of an accident. She believed him the victim of an accident. Better to keep still and ease the shadow in her life. Besides he loved and respected her. And didn't she mean a great deal to him? The portrait was completed and the artist painted more truthfully than he realized. And his hatred knew no bounds when the likeness sneered down at him. With one stroke he slashed the canvas. And the truth dawned on the widow. The conclusion of this forceful drama is told in a sweeping climax. The picture is "The Gray Horizon"—the star, Sessue Hayakawa. Next ——— is the date.

"THE PRAISE AGENT"

Breezy Farce and Amusingly Entertaining

A FARCE comedy with a breezy little romance and built around suffragist campaigns. Co-stars and support are well cast and the picture does not lag for a moment. It is very well directed and has a smooth continuity. The sets and exteriors fit the story and the sub-titles are clever. For amusing entertainment this is the best picture that World has turned out for some time.

The hero is the press agent of a theatrical company which has gone broke and he becomes publicity man for a suffragette group led by the wife of a Senator. The heroine is the daughter of the Senator and works also for equal suffrage, much to the disgust of the Senator who does not approve of his wife and daughter doing picket duty for the hated cause. After a series of clever incidents and amusing situations the hero and heroine win the consent of both diametrically opposite parents for their marriage. While the satire on the suffragist cause is quite pronounced at times in the picture it should not give offense to the ardent supporters of equal rights.

This should draw better than average at first run and elite theatres and amusingly entertain. At the family, popular and labor class theatres, it should draw exceptionally well and register heavily as a picture with those audiences.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 11.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Woman Suffrage divides a house against itself in "The Praise Agent," a World photoplay to appear at the ———theatre beginning next ———.

Arthur Ashley and Dorothy Green are the co-stars and it is described as a refreshing farce comedy with romance and some thrills injected.

The hero is the press agent of a theatrical company that goes broke. He then becomes publicity agent to a woman suffragist group led by the aggressive wife of a Senator. The Senator himself hates equal rights but his charming daughter enlists in the cause with the mother.

And right here is where the publicity agent had plenty to do. In the first place he fell in love with the daughter and she reciprocated. The Senator promised his consent to the marriage if the publicity man would keep his daughter out of the jail that was yawning for the militant suffragists.

And the mother agreed to approve of the match if the press agent would convert the Senator to support the equal suffrage cause. That was the rub and it led to a complication of rapidly transpiring events that would have driven anybody else but a versatile press agent fairly mad.

But he manages by a brilliant coupe to snatch the heroine from the arms of a determined policeman by adroitly substituting the former leading woman of the defunct theatrical company. And he gets the best of the Senator in a business deal and places the wily old politician so much under obligation to him that he wins him over for equal suffrage and thus gains the mother's consent.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you should concentrate all your publicity on the theme; —Woman Suffrage. Of course the producer, the title and the star must be coupled, but your best bet is the theme. Catch lines on "throw-aways" and quarter sheets should attract attention in addition to your regular newspaper advertising.

Any discussion that you can provoke between the Suffragists and the Anti-Suffragists would certainly help you and be an excellent tie-in. You know your local conditions and how far you can go. If you do some missionary work you can surely secure the results at the box office. A controversy anent the policy of picketing the White House pursued by the women would be immense if you could engineer it.

Arthur Ashby and Dorothy Green in a scene from "The Praise Agent," World

PROGRAM READER

"If you can keep my daughter out of jail you can have her," said the father.

"If you can convert my husband to woman suffrage you can have my daughter," said the mother.

This was some job for an ordinary man.

But the hero was no common ordinary mutt;—he was a press agent;—the same as the man who is writing these sentences.

And he accomplishes the seemingly impossible. The father was a United States Senator and when you get one of those fellows to make up his mind it's like trying to break ice with a frail tooth-pick.

This press agent was versatile. He realized that there were greater questions and problems to be solved than Woman Suffrage. He felt that Love was the greatest thing in the world. But if he had to solve a puny question like Equal Rights in order that Love would run smooth;—well, so be it.

You can laugh to your heart's content next week at this refreshing photoplay which comes to the ——— theatre next week. It is a World Picture starring Arthur Ashley and Dorothy Green and entitled; "The Praise Agent."

CATCH LINES

"Votes For Women" is wanted by "The Praise Agent" at the ———theatre.

"Equal Rights" is demanded by "The Praise Agent" at the ——— theatre.

"CHEATING HERSELF"
(FOX)

Mild Satire on the Simple Life

IT is difficult to characterize Peggy Hyland's latest, since it sort of leads a dual existence as a mild satire and a slap-bang comedy. One thing is certain, it shows no partiality toward either phase, but serves up an abundance of gentle comedy and exaggerated burlesque. And these phases have their virtues since they more or less eliminate the plot shortcomings. It is really much ado about nothing for there is an absence of story and characterizaiton.

A daughter of the rich conceives the scheme of taking up the simple life and before she learns that it is out of harmony with her culture and that of her family, the spectator is conducted through the slapstick school of "below stairs." Father, mother and daughter must needs scrub the floors and wash the pans. A surprise twist is introduced in the story which introduces a burglar as the power behind the plot. The heroine had planned to rob her father's safe, but the v-i-l-l-a-i-n beat her to it. The picture suffers lapses in direction since the players are permitted to do things far removed from actualities. This would have been all right had the burlesque phase dominated the action.

Miss Hyland is not exactly at home in these exaggerated roles. She is not a comedienne, but a pleasing ingenue. At that she manages to keep one interested even when she is carrying the whole burden of the story. The picture is adequately staged and will suffice as mild entertainment.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 3.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Patience Hilton.....Peggy Hyland
Hale Thompson.....Harry Hilliard
Mrs. Daniel Hilton.....Molly McConnell
Caroline Hilton.....Mrs. Jack Mulhall
Dugan.....William Elmer
Dan Hilton.....Edwin Booth Tilton
Magnus MacDonald.....Edward Jobson
By Charles Mortimer Peck.
Scenario by Ruth Ann Baldwin.
Directed by Edmund Lawrence.
Photographed by King Grey.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Peggy Hyland, the vivacious Fox star, will be seen at the ——— theatre in her latest picture, "Cheating Herself," on ——— of ——— week. This is the story of a madcap girl and was written for the star by Charles Mortimer Peck and produced under the direction of Edmund Lawrence. "Cheating Herself" is said to be even better than "Miss Adventure" in the possibilities it offers the star.

It provides hr with the role of Patience Hilton, a young woman who is the exponent of the simple life. She despises the devitalizing pastimes of the idle rich and is convinced that if her family can be persuaded that they are poor and forced to work for a living they will be far more content and happy. So Patience arranges with her father's secretary, one Magnus MacDonald, to join her in a fake theft of the family fortune and thus reduce them all to poverty. As the girl and the secretary are blowing the safe, after a lesson in burglary by a reformed crook, two men in police uniform spring into the room, gag and bind the pair and walk off with the fortune.

Consequently the Hilton family are obliged to perform their own household duties. The result is Patience learns that poverty is not a bed of roses. Indeed, she is convinced that poverty is something to be avoided. Luckily, Hale Hamilton, her fiance, coms to the rescue and he successfully trails the bogus policemen to their lair. So the Hilton fortune is restored to its rightful owners and Patience is no longer required to scrub floors. Hale heaps more pleasant cares upon her shoulders by asking her to be his wife.

The role of Patience fits Miss Hyland admirably well. Her romance, her adventures are all interesting to the extreme, so cleverly have they been handled by author and director. The picture is rich in humorous highlights. The star receives competent support.

SUGGESTIONS

Probably the best feature to play up in this film is the fact that it is a pleasant satire on the simple life. Concentrate upon the theme and outline how the heroine, a daughter of the rich, firmly believed that more happiness could be achieved in being poor. Tell how she planned to become poverty-stricken and how she dragged her family to the lowest level. The picture doesn't have any big moments, so it would be advisable to feature the star a great deal. Tell that it is a comedy-drama that sparkles with humorous situations. Play up that it is a tale of society and poverty. And how the rich people take up the simple life and find out that it doesn't pay.

Peggy Hyland, and two unusual members of the cast in the Fox offering, "Cheating Herself"

PROGRAM READER

Patience Hilton had thought it a great thing to take up the simple life. Although her rich father permitted her every indulgence, she didn't care a fig about the idle pastimes of society. She wanted to be poor because she believed that poor people were more contented and happy. Now, there was only one thing for Patience to do. She must rob the family safe. Accordingly the impulsive girl took a lesson in burglary by a reformed crook and just at the moment that the safe was robbed a couple of men bound and gagged her.

How she stepped into Poverty Row and dragged the other members of her family with her; how, when she took up the scrubbing brush, found out that pouring tea was much more delightful, how the family fortune was restored, and how the girl became contented after her trying experience in the simple life are situations which make this picture teem with bright moments. It has an unbounded wealth of humor and is cleverly staged and acted. "Cheating Herself" will be at the ——— theatre next ——— with Peggy Hyland as the star. Be sure and see it.

CATCH LINES

She was a firm advocate of the simple life, and though she was a member of the idle rich, she longed to live on Poverty Row. But when she became a little daughter of the poor her spirit rebelled. What happened? See "Cheating Herself."

See "Cheating Herself"—it is a humorous journey to Poverty Row by a rich family. Peggy Hyland swaps golden spoons for spoons of tin. Follow her adventures in the simple life.

HER GREATEST PERFORMANCE
(TRIANGLE)

Dramatic Vehicle Peculiarly Suitable for Star

A DRAMATIC story with scenes laid in England and portraying the love of a mother for her son. This is not a society, costume or war picture, nor is it a thrilling melodrama. But it holds the interest and satisfactorily serves as a highly suitable vehicle to display the histrionic abilities of that eminent English actress Ellen Terry, who portrays the mother.

It is good straight-way directing without tricky frills and the continuity is perfect. The photography is not exceptionally good but the scenes and sets are accurate and entirely in keeping with the story. The theme pictures an old retired actress overjoyed to see her son elevated to stardom on the stage. But he celebrates at cards and drink afterwards, and strikes a man who is afterwards killed by the "villain." The hero gets ten years and when an old woman eye witness of the murder is on her death bed she confesses to the mother that her son has been falsely convicted. The retired actress makes up like the dying old woman and forces a confession from the "villain," and her son is free to wed his fiance.

This picture should give satisfaction generally anywhere and if highly exploited will bring them in. It may not be considered strong enough in some theatres for a very long run but it is a good, and better than average photoplay.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 24.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Mrs. Lovelace.....Ellen Terry
Supported by an entirely English cast in a story written especially for her screen debut.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Ellen Terry, foremost actress on the English stage has made her first motion picture and it is entitled "Her Greatest Performance." This Triangle photoplay comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

In her screen drama Ellen Terry portrays the greatest of emotions—the love of a mother for her son. All the exceptional histrionic ability that made this great star so popular with her audiences is said to be displayed while she interprets the mother role in "Her Greatest Performance."

Portraying a favorite actress who has retired from the profession and anxious to see her young son elevated to stardom, the old mother visits the theatre and witnesses his great triumph.

She shares honors with her son at the dinner given for him afterwards and goes home alone where she lives with her son's fiancee. The son celebrates with the boys at the club and afterwards becomes involved in cards and drink. During this time the son strikes a man who is afterwards killed by another man who is wealthy.

The son is sentenced to ten years in prison for manslaughter. There has been an eye-witness to the killing however. Blackmail silences her for awhile until on her death bed the old woman confesses to the retired actress that the wealthy man had committed the crime that her son had been convicted for.

Then the great actress was called upon to render "Her Greatest Performance." She made herself up as an exact likeness of the dead woman and demanding in that character more hush money from the wealthy man she leads him to actually confess the crime in the presence of hidden witnesses.

And her son is free to join his mother and wed his fiancee. A notable English cast interprets all the roles in the photoplay and the many dramatic situations are described as tense and of compelling interest.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture the exploitation can only be concentrated upon the well known star, Ellen Terry, and that it is her first motion picture. This, in connection with the exceptionally good title, "Her Greatest Performance," should suffice. It is not a photoplay that can be exploitated by special advertising stunts or any extra array of lobby or stage effects.

A classy invitation addressed to a selected clientele from a high class list should answer the purpose admirably and at a small expense outside your regular newspaper advertising and .publicity. This invitation should read about as follows—"Ellen Terry, the eminent English actress, cordially invites you to see her first motion picture just released and to be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is conceded to be just what the title implies—'Her Greatest Performance.'"

Ellen Terry, beloved of stage fans for more than a generation, in the one and only picture she has made, "Her Greatest Performance," released by Triangle

PROGRAM READER

She had retired after a successful career of many years on the stage.

Her son had just been elevated to stardom and she was justly proud.

Then the blow fell. He was unjustly convicted of a crime and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment right at the beginning of his promising career.

When the eye witness, of the actual crime for which her son had been convicted, was on her death bed she told who the actual criminal was. And the role that the old mother determined to play was then decided upon.

She made-up with skilfull technique aided by a thorough knowledge of the art, until she was a perfect likeness of the dead woman.

When she visited the real criminal who thought she was the blackmailing eye-witness of his crime.

And, in the presence of three hidden witnesses, she forced a confession from him by adroit questioning and incomparable acting. And her son was set free.

This achievement would be possible in the hands of an eminent actress. And Ellen Terry, the noted English actress portrays the mother role in her first motion picture which comes to this theatre next week.

It is a Triangle photoplay and entitled, "Her Greatest Performance."

CATCH LINES

A great actress in "Her Greatest Performance" is the limit of artistic refinement. See Ellen Terry at the ——— theatre in her first photoplay.

"Her Greatest Performance" is the title of her first photoplay. And the photoplay is all that the title implies. And the star is Ellen Terry, at the ——— theatre.

August 5th
1919.

Congratulations on "The Westerners." This, at last is a real visualization of an actual novel.

I think it sets a new pace for western pictures and is corking entertainment from start to finish. The suspense is perfectly maintained, and the acting is way above the ordinary. It is very gratifying to find such pictures being made.

Sincerely,

Julian Johnson

AND THE TRADE PRESS CRITICS CONFIRM HIS JUDGMENT:

VARIETY: Stanton Leeds: This is a great picture! Full of sure-fire detail; love and sympathy, pathos and fight. It rings the bell every hundred feet. Who is responsible for putting the unexpected in this picture?

MORNING TELEGRAPH: "The Westerners" comes under the head of fewer, better and bigger pictures. If the rest of the companies that are promising us improved films in the Fall offer productions of the caliber of "The Westerners" fans and exhibitors will suffer no disappointments.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: One of the best box-office attractions of the season... Red-blooded and with acting and story to hold the attention of any audience.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: Laurence Reid: The story of "The Westerners" has been so splendidly realized that a new language has been given expression. It has everything: punch and pathos, action and atmosphere. It has the breath of life.

WID'S: "The Westerners" is largely straight screen narration... Pictorially effective... One of its chief virtues is the work of the players. The director has seen that they do not spoil their work by over-acting. It has punch.

TRADE REVIEW: George T. Pardy: "The Westerners" carries a punch in every moment of its swiftly-pulsing action—a story well worth the telling and told as it should be in pictures.

SENSATIONAL, SAYS WID'S : GREAT, SAY OTHER CRITICS

WIDS' DAILY: Those who made "The Volcano" succeeded in getting over their message....A picture with many interesting features...A story that touches many ends...Will stand sensational methods of exploitation...A picture that will go over well with real Americans...Much sympathy will be obtained by those parts in which a returned wounded soldier takes part...A strong love interest running throughout the story helps considerably...Leah Baird gets away splendidly with a part that keeps her much in the foreground. "The Volcano" is out of the ordinary. Leah Baird and Augustus Thomas are a good combination.

MORNING TELEGRAPH: Leah Baird is splendid as Ruth Carroll, a school teacher fighting radicalism, in "The Volcano" and the picture itself is highly interesting with a big news flavor.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: "The Volcano" is a forceful drama that will win the applause of the American masses. This picture will serve a good purpose. Leah Baird gives a splendid performance. The cast is fine.

HOW TO PUT AN IDEAL INTO PLAIN PRACTICE

You see these Goldwyn Pictures before you book them

NOW arises the most difficult of tests—the great distribution ideal is to be put into plain practice.

The producers built up the beautiful idea of no iron-bound contracts; no program; no automatically produced-and-accepted films. But instead, a newer, cleaner, finer way. See a picture and then book it or not, as discretion dictates. The announcements and promises were spread across the prints and newspapers of the industry. Goldwyn decided on this process of booking, fixed the method as the goal of the institution, sent forth the promises and policies of the new season.

Now to the test—the first Goldwyn pictures under the new system are in the Goldwyn Exchanges throughout the country. You will certainly not take them unless you are convinced of their excellence and the possibilities they hold in exploitation methods, to fill your theatres and please your patrons.

In point, let it be spread broadcast—

The new Capitol Theatre and the Strand Theatre did book the pictures of this group which they saw.

Now If You Could Get Married Without A License

Here's a funny thing—no license required, wealthy Eva finds herself married to the ugliest man with the funniest face. It was at the party—you know the kind of games.

Suppose "no license required" went into effect? What all might happen? Think it over and you'll begin to realize a fraction of the fun that bubbles all through this picture.

WILL ROGERS

An Actor Who Never Acts

IN

ALMOST A HUSBAND

By Opie Read Directed by Clarence G. Badger

When this picture was first selected, there was just one man in the world who could play the principal role, and that man was Will Rogers, an actor who never acts, who makes you laugh just to look at him.

If human nature is the same as it used to be, then Will Rogers is the one of all comedians before the film public today who will carry off first honors. A plain looking man to be sure, he gets the plain people by his sympathetic manner and the bigger folks by his dry humor.

What Realart Is

¶ The money of the principal nations is made from similar stuff, but it is not all equally valuable.

The same basic ingredients enter into most cake, but all cake is not equally good.

Nature is as much evidenced in stormy as in fair weather, but its efforts are not equally prized.

Star, story, direction and photography are the essentials of a motion picture, but motion pictures do not possess equal quality

The STORY is the heart of the picture, the ACTOR its soul, the DIRECTOR its brain, and PHOTOGRAPHY the atmosphere it breathes. Perfection is attained only through harmonious functioning of these parts.

REALART stands for the accurate blending of all the essentials of motion picture production. Realart Pictures are so perfectly balanced, so smooth-running, that one is conscious only of their absorbing appeal and marvelous entertainment value.

Realart insures satisfaction to your patrons and reflects its unusual quality in increased box-office returns!

You can learn today about the Realart idea and Realart service at branch offices in all the principal cities of the country.

Alice Brady
REALART PICTURES

What Makes An Actress Great?

YOUTH, Beauty, Talent. Yes, and a Genius for hard work. She must give of her best. Absolute Sincerity marks the relation of the great artist to her public.

ALICE BRADY

has singularly demonstrated these qualities through triumph after triumph--an unbroken record of stage and motion picture successes, in which she has endeared herself to the whole amusement loving world.

Charming, captivating innocence amid morally sordid environment--innocence that is protected because of its truth--such is the role in which Miss Brady achieved one of her biggest stage successes--a role in which she is to be seen throughout the world through the medium of Realart Pictures--little "Mary Horton" in

SINNERS

New York and the country have paid exceptional tribute to Miss Brady as the stage star of this great Owen Davis drama. Now exhibitors everywhere are to have the opportunity shortly of profiting from the great screen production being made under direction of Kenneth Webb.

HARRISON'S REPORTS

TO ALL EXHIBITORS

$5,000.00 Value Given to You for Only $10.00

This is no Press Agent stuff; it is an absolute fact

If I were on your pay roll, reviewing pictures exclusively for you, you would have to pay me $5,000 a year. By becoming a subscriber to HARRISON'S REPORTS, you get exactly the same service for the insignificant amount of $10.00. Isn't this the best bargain you ever had in your life?

If HARRISON'S REPORTS do no more for you than put you wise to one bad picture in a whole year, and make you avoid booking it, will not your money have been well invested? But it will do more than that, it will help you know every picture. You will soon learn to consider HARRISON'S REPORTS your bible.

Charles G. Branham, that live wire of a manager, who can take any old run down house and make it pay, a man who once brought about the unconditional surrender of a competitor with unlimited resources, now manager of the Strand and Colonial Theatres, in Birmingham, Ala., books his pictures guided by HARRISON'S REPORTS.

The Northwest Exhibitor's Circuit, Inc., of Seattle, Wash., are heart and soul back of HARRISON'S REPORTS.

The Theatre Owners Association, of San Francisco, Cal., are back of HARRISON'S REPORTS.

The KANSAS STATE EXHIBITORS ASSOCIATION, of Wichita, Kansas, are back of HARRISON'S REPORTS.

Crandall's Theatres, of Washington, D. C., are on our list.

Chas. H. Williams, manager of the Million Dollar Strand, of Providence, R. I., is a staunch supporter of HARRISON'S REPORTS.

THE SUNDAY NEWS LEADER OF CLEVELAND, OHIO, HAS SECURED THE EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGE OF PUBLISHING HARRISON'S REPORTS IN THEIR SUNDAY ISSUES WORD FOR WORD.

An exchangeman from Dallas, Texas, asked that SEVEN copies weekly be sent to him.

Are these names a sufficient guarantee to you as to the fearlessness, impartiality and accuracy of HARRISON'S REPORTS?

Sit down and write your check of $10.00, for a year's subscription. You don't have to write any letters, nor fill any blanks. Just write your check and send it in. When we receive it, we know what it means. If the name of your theatre is not printed on your check, just write it on. But do it now, don't put it off for another day. Don't miss any of the red hot Editorials. Mr. Herb L. Weil, Port Huron, Mich., writes they are worth as much as the reviews.

P. S.—To exhibitors using old service we give free advice on pictures they wish to book.

Which is Closest to Nature?

At first he thought the quiet of the mountains and the dull peace of a rustic retreat would give him a vacation close to nature. But the ups and downs of a farmer-directed boarding-house seemed closer to a well-known place where our best friends are told to go.

So he packed up and despite their good natures were none too comfortable—until they came to the seashore.

Smiling Bill Parsons presents

Mr & Mrs Carter De Haven

Bathing Girls— Closest to Nature

The surf was kindly, the girls were dressed down to the latest fashions. There were no cows, nor were there any mountains or rustic pools. Nature in her own garb was missing except in the presence of the ocean populated with a Broadway crowd.

But it was close to nature, no doubt of that. He liked it, and she did, but not correspondingly well.

Of such corking material is the "vacation comedy" woven. It's a capital Capitol comedy:

in Close to Nature

The world of motion picture has no other clean comedy couple to compare with the Carterdehavens. Isn't it so? 'Course it is.

NEW YORK

If some producers could see the way we have spent money on "The MYSTERY of 13" they would holler about the dent in the old bank roll.

But the result is a constantly growing interest, and a deeper and deeper mystery that is going to pull them in as readily in the fifth and the ninth episode as at the first showing.

The first, biggest and best, really FIFTEEN WEEKS SERIAL.

The Other

Directed by
KING W. VIDOR

Creator of the "TURN IN THE ROAD" and "BETTER TIMES"

Half

ANOTHER Brentwood creation of even greater merit than "The Turn in the Road" and "Better Times" is this broad heart-gripping story of "The Other Half." It is not a ranting, railing, damnation of one class by another, but it is a gentle unfolding on the screen of the good that Lincoln said was in every heart. It is a story so simple, so well told, so well acted, that you never miss an inch of film.

IT deals with one of the most important questions of the day, Capital and Labor, but the manufacturer and the worker can sit side by side in your theatre to see this picture and they will leave it hand in hand. There is not a line of hatred in it. There is a heart grip, a suspicion of tears, a human sympathy that gets you whether you are a millionaire or pauper if you are human.

Important to Exhibitors

Your service of the Bray Pictographs will not be interrupted. Merely notify your Goldwyn Exchange that you wish the service continued, as in the past. The change in distribution arrangements will mean better service without the slightest inconvenience on your part.

SPECTACULAR FACTS

1. The BRAY STUDIOS originated the animated cartoon.
2. The BRAY STUDIOS invented the processes by which animated cartoon are made and by which the single reel has reached its greatest development.
3. The BRAY REEL was the first animated magazine in existence. It is different than the news reel. It is a magazine put into motion pictures.
4. The BRAY PICTOGRAPH now will have the greatest development of its existence.
5. The capitalization of the company has been increased to a million and a half.
6. Beginning September 7th opportunity for the public and the exhibitor will be materially increased through the new arrangements of distributing through Goldwyn.
7. The GOLDWYN-BRAY PICTOGRAPH is a new and greater Bray Pictograph, because—

There will be these new features:

A wonderful new type of cartoon, made under completely new processes, by which such astounding perfection in animation is reached that people cannot believe they are made from drawings.

Popular Science Romances and adventures, taking the observer to far-off planets and revealing the hidden forces of nature. Under the editorial direction of Waldemar Kaempfert, editor of "Popular Science Monthly," these popular science features have the backing of that most important national magazine. They are made by special processes controlled by Bray.

Exceedingly interesting studies of sports, travels, curious novelties and news, extraordinary personalities, the wonders of nature.

The greatest achievement in the history of the single reel will be shown in the new, natural color photographs and the new cartoons in color which will make a sensation throughout the industry.

READ THIS CAREFULLY:

"Crimson Shoals," an electrifying melodrama of punch, suspense, mystery, action and marvelous photography, presents Francis Ford, the serial player supreme, in his greatest achievement of the screen. Ford portrays vividly three (3) distinct characters of Son, Father and Grandfather, appearing in the same scenes at the same moment. His remarkable performance, combined with the astounding photographic effects abounding in "Crimson Shoals," will prove the sensation of the year.

Mr. Keenan is the commanding figure of the screen; a man who depends not upon "stunts" or a matinee idol personality for his popularity, but upon unequalled powers of acting; upon an Art that shone upon the stage and now enriches the screen.

"The World Aflame" is a superlative picture; one that will be talked about and argued about for months after it is shown in every town and city in the land.

Pathe Exchange Inc. invites every exhibitor who wants BIG pictures, the BEST that money can buy, to have "The World Aflame" screened for him at the nearest Pathe exchange.

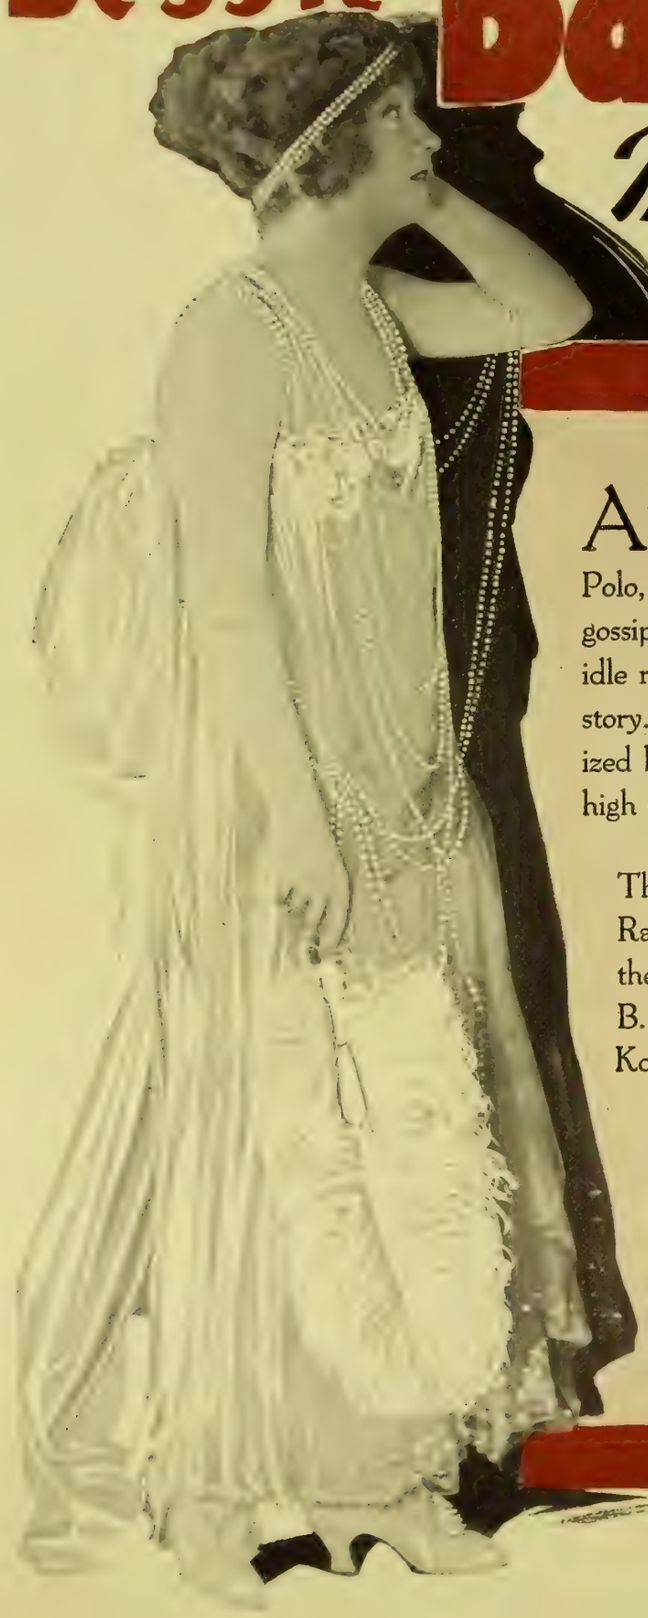
The Woman Michael Married



A FASCINATING picture of life in the high-flying fast set of society. Polo, dancing, hunting, bathing, flirting, gossiping, and all the diversions of the busy idle rich are shown in this daringly original story. The entire production is characterized by a supreme richness of detail and a high standard of excellence.

The play is from the story of Du Vernet Rabell in Ainslee's Magazine, adapted to the screen by Fred Myton, produced by B. B. Features, and directed by Henry Kolker.

This is the sixth great Barriscale triumph of 1919. She has achieved phenomenal success in "Tangled Threads," "Josselyn's Wife," "A Trick of Fate," "Hearts Asleep," and "All of a Sudden Norma."

In September

¶ Worth-while theatres from coast to coast will inaugurate the new season of 1919-1920 on Labor Day. The annual "sprucing-up" process is commendable, and is certain to result in added interest on the part of moving picture patrons.

The live theatre manager is sparing no effort that will make his new program better than any of previous years. He has come to the realization that the novelty and "audience appeal" of his attractions will depend upon his choice of short subject material.

He knows that a wise selection of short subjects will double and triple his opportunity of pleasing his patrons. His past experience has taught him that in many cases it has been the single reel that has satisfied his patrons and really built business.

¶ Consistent quality and variety have established the absolute leadership of the Educational organization in the short subject field. There is a personal guarantee back of every Educational release, and a real desire to know that every subject can "make good" on any high-class bill.

The coming season will see an extension and development of Educational that is to be the triumph of five years of specialization. The Bruce Scenics, "International" cartoons and "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement" are to be augmented by the new releases of the American Red Cross and other features not yet ready to be announced.

¶ It is our aim to make the Educational product the mainstay of the careful manager who seeks just the right measure of variety and balance. We intend to safeguard the exhibitor who banks on "Educational" quality, and make certain that he need never lack attractive entertainment. Any part of "the Complete Short Subject Program" will be available for booking at conveniently located Educational exchanges.

The Big Business Era

Capitalizations are being increased; a huge investment, probably close to one hundred millions, has been suddenly poured into the building of new theatres; the making of pictures is being internationalized; world markets are being considerably extended; national and even international advertising appropriations of large size have been made; new and big producing plants are shortly to be built.

There are various causes for this expansion.

The after-war period is having its effect upon this business as upon all others.

Capital is more fluid; a good deal of it has been idle, and a good deal of new capital has been made. It seeks investment or reinvestment, and the picture field is most attractive.

Prohibition has had and will continue to have an inestimable effect upon theatre attendance in this country.

Europe, on the other hand, is turning to the picture theatres to forget the war and to learn of and hope for the new future.

In the new era of social reconstruction facing the entire world the picture, along with newspapers, magazines and books—but with a scope and force far greater than any or all of these—is to play a very great part, a part which in the years to come will be clearly known and will stamp the picture for what it is—the latest and greatest of all mediums of expression.

There are these various causes; and there is nothing abnormal about them except insofar as we may make them abnormal—by inflation, that is to say by over capitalization, or over building of theatres, or over production of pictures.

The one big cause for expansion is the world demand for pictures.

It is a matter of demand.

The bigness of the industry—and today it is entering the ranks of big business—was inevitable. It is big because of the big possibilities of the motion picture. From the very beginning this industry has been swept along by its own momentum. And that is just what is happening in this present period of expansion.

The business of the picture, as we have often pointed out, is not the business of the stage. It must not be so rated.

Individually the picture theatre is a show place and its management is a piece of show business. But the industry which supplies the theatre with its show goods is vastly different from the business of stage play production.

It is a modern industry with a weekly world market. Its trade machinery is exactly like that of any other trade dealing in any other commodity; its producers, distributors and exhibitors are the manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers of other industries.

It calls for plants and organizations. It uses a large selling machine. It demands national advertising direct to the consumers. It calls for manufacturer-dealer cooperation.

The Big Business Era

As an industry it is subject to the fundamental business law of supply and demand—and to all those economic laws which rule all other industries.

In its progress the industry has already and it always will show the guiding force of these business laws. It may be diverted into strange bypaths, it may shoot off now and then into alarming angles, but all in all this industry will steer a straight course. It will do this of itself because the industry and the business laws which guide it will prove greater than the mistakes of its leaders.

The present bigness of the industry calls for new vision and foresight and equipment.

The makeshift days are gone.

Organizations and organization made pictures will rule the market.

Substantial capital is needed to build and back organization. Capital must be planned not merely to make pictures, but also to advertise them. This is of the utmost importance. The time will come, and shortly, when the advertising appropriation will, as in other businesses, head the annual budget.

Above all, it behooves the leaders of this business to study other big businesses, their methods of organization and merchandising and their safe and sane policies of development.

Barring the Social Disease Pictures

¶ Through its recent resolution, unanimously adopted at Rochester, the National Association of the Industry has made a plain declaration to the makers of the social disease pictures that every legitimate effort will be made to exclude these pictures from the distributing channels and picture theatres. This applies also to any other such objectionable picture.

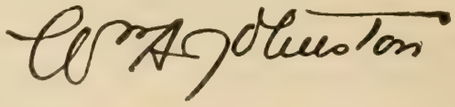
This is eminently right.

The reform element, of course, will seize upon the news and distort it to suit their ends. They will call the resolution an admission from the industry that unfit pictures do exist, etc. The liberal mind, the unbiased mind, we might say the ordinarily human mind, knows that no industry, no community, is proof against the entrance of an undesirable citizen: that the salacious play, book, story and still picture has existed right along until the law takes a hand; that it is utterly unfair to charge the ninety-nine per cent decent element with the one per cent or less of indecency and irresponsibility.

But since we may expect no fairness whatsoever from the single track hobby-horse brigade, and since we know it, why use silk gloves?

The plain fact is that this industry has foisted upon it now and then a picture of which it is ashamed. This picture is the direct cause of the agitation of the preposterous idea of censorship: it is the ammunition of the professional reformer. We don't want these pictures, and "we" means practically the entire membership of the motion picture industry.

Therefore, if our National Association has one supreme duty facing it, it is the frank, open arrangement of the intruder and the taking of every step within its means to shut tight the industry's machinery against it.



Dealing in Personalities

THOSE rumblings that bespoke news all during the first part of the week around the Universal corner on Broadway evoluted into a real announcement as we went to press that half-way made up for the lethargy being experienced along film row these summer days. Yess'r, Universal came to bat and made a clean hit with the news that it is interested in what is hailed as the first American-Italian film organization extant.

And, furthermore, it is promised the capitalization of $5,000,000 is not of the brand left following the lunch hour on the Astor Hotel tablecloths to furnish food for the laundry.

Maybe it will not be much news that the new organization intends to keep its best eye on the foreign market, as Old Man Foreign Market is keeping quite a bunch of attention focused on him these days, but it is worthy of note that Universal is, as usual, right in the van when it comes to keeping pace with things. And another point of interest is that P. A. Powers is president and R. H. Cochrane is treasurer. And you can get a list of directors from the detailed story which is carried in this issue before the other publications get a crack at it.

Speaking of new organizations reminds us that we have a prediction to make. And to make it a double-barreled one we'll expect to announce two new producing companies under the wing of Herbert Lubin and his partner, Sawyer, about the time we tear a sheet off the calendar. As we're always late with that calendar thing, that'll make it about Sept. 5. Lubin left last week for the Coast, stopping off on the way long enough to consume three weeks' time before reaching Los Angeles.

We notice they all take their time on the way out, but coming back—well, the ticket reads straight through.

MORE activities and preparations that gave the lie to the established legend that film row is "deadernhell during the summer" were in evidence all week around the Metro headquarters, Times Square, U. S. A. Here the staff was all aflutter to hail the return from Europe of the chief, Richard A. Rowland, who went abroad about two months ago. As we went to press it was expected that Mr. Rowland would sail into the North River and unload himself from the liner on August 14 or 15, and all ears are at attention to hear some interesting conversation as a result of the trip just as soon as Publicity Director Jack Meador gets the typewriters well oiled.

It may be significant that the Metro president was among the few American producers to journey personally to Europe to give things the up and down that spells progress in producing and distributing. William Fox was another.

'Personalities" claims the "scoop" of being the first to publish a smile picture ecured at random during the Rochester convention. The wearers of the smiles are H. H. Bruenner, manager Biograph; W. E. Shallnberger, president Arrow, and Samuel L. Rothapfel, exhibitor and producer.

W. H. Productions Company helped bulge the news columns this week with the hot-off-the-griddle announcement that it has secured the world rights to "The Lost Battalion," a timely picture that is making its mark throughout the country. You can't stop that W. H. company from plugging ahead, even when every one should be taking a vacation. And that's "Everybody's Business," according to H. J. Shepard.

IT'S a wise trade journalist who can get by a week nowadays without having to pound out something about that all important subject, longer runs. This week it is United Artists' fault that we turn over a few lines here to the worthy cause. We have just looked over a list of bookings of the Douglas Fairbanks film, "His Majesty, the American," and it looks like Paul Lazarus has used up a ream of white paper in writing "three weeks," "six weeks" and even longer runs at the various theatres. Maybe we'll soon experience picture runs for a season all over the country, thus making the slogan of "fewer and better" pictures a concrete fact and long awaited reality.

In the progress of events, the Douglas Fairbanks picture is setting a precedent by avoiding the Chicago Loop on its first-run trip to the Windy City. The Castle is the theatre to draw the premiere, and we'll wager this is a bit of film history that is not going unrecorded in the books of the observing.

Charley Pyle favored Broadway and the bee hive of industry at 729 Seventh Avenue with his presence last week. This man Pyle is making a splash with his changeable sign proposition and is reported as making more headway than a belated director rushed for time. (Adv.)

THE fountain of information from which we secure our exclusive tips gurgles in our ear this week that pep and ginger are the watchwords at 218 West Forty-second street, where Inter-Ocean Film Company makes good use of the whole building. This rumor, maybe, would not have survived to reach our desk had not Bert Adler been noticed around town when he was expected to be on a well-earned vacation in the mountains. It is our guess that Inter-Ocean will break forth with some unusual news in the near future, among which we can expect to see the information that the organization has secured the foreign rights to "The Long Arm of Bannister."

We would even go further, and say that Inter-Ocean may possibly take under its wing a Brenon picture with Marie Dora as the star.

If these public-spirited members of the industry don't delay all usual fall activities until cool weather we'll soon lose track of the seasons.

"Personalities" would be amiss if it did not recognize genius, so-called or otherwise. For that reason we announce that Richard Barthelmess, who helped make Griffith famous, may abandon acting for directing or combine the two. Here's a lad who might easily wear the shoes of Donald Crisp and Marshall Neilan if he sets himself to the task.

WHILE on the subject of directors we'd like to mention Hampton Del Ruth, a Fox fixture who directs six other directors. And we admit that it's SOME job.

Only a few years ago Del Ruth made his debut in motion pictures in the editorial capacity, stepping soon into the managerial end of the industry and distinguishing himself immediately by the new departures he introduced in the field of film comedy. Then he joined the staff of directors under William Fox and became supervising director of the two-reelers, known as Sunshine Comedies. To be frank, Mr. Del Ruth never attracted our personal attention until he organized the Sunshine Beauty Brigade of feminine fairness. But, after that, well, we had to acknowledge he knows what he's about. It is rumored the director is busy planning some novelties for forthcoming productions which may be expected to knock a glass eye out.

Maybe General Manager W. E. Atkinson of Metro will think we are a bit too reserved because we refuse to get excited over an announcement that 610 laughs were counted in the stage version of "Lombardi, Ltd." What we would like to know is: Are these laughs, or chuckles, to be registered in the screen version made by Screen Classics? If so, will they be in the titles or in the action?

"PERSONALITIES" rejoices at the news that Thomas D. Soriero is enjoying a vacation this year after four years of the

What Is Your Policy?

Putting the Shoe on the Other Foot, an Exchangeman Comes Back with Pointed Question to Exhibitors

By Paul H. Bush

Manager of Universal Exchange at Kansas City, Mo.

"MR. EXHIBITOR, what is your policy?"

That is the manner in which one man would interrupt the flow of producers' plans and have them pause for a moment. Furthermore, he asks, "Is the main point in the discussion and expounding of plans by producers being lost sight of?" Are the producers letting loose of a wealth of pent-up energy in a wild and undirected fashion that will net them nothing? This man seriously believes that this is so and takes the point of view of the salesman, of the man who has come in contact with the exhibitor and knows what he, the exhibitor, wants. He believes that instead of the exhibitor asking the question, "Mr. Producer, what is your policy," the question should be re-stated and read, "Mr. Exhibitor, what is your policy?"

Paul H. Bush, manager of the Universal Film Exchange at Kansas City, Mo., is the man who draws this conclusion from his large experience in handling the middle-man not only in motion pictures but in other lines of industrial pursuits. And the lessons that are learned in other industries can be applied to the film business with good effect, Mr. Bush believes.

"We read and hear much of the policies that the different producers are putting out for the consumption of the exhibitor," he said. "The sales forces and the managers are called to the home offices and given instructions that such and such is the policy for the ensuing year. All of which is restated to the exhibitor that they will be benefitted by the policy. Such is the producers' line of reasoning. But what is the fact, not theory, in the field where the films are bought by the exhibitor?

"The sales manager and the salesman find that the situation is turned exactly around! Instead of the exhibitor asking, 'Mr. Producer, what is your policy?' it is, 'Mr. Exhibitor, what is your policy?' That is the condition in fact and not in theory in the field. And that is the condition that the producer will have to meet if he is to cope adequately with the real problem of the film business. In the last analysis the exhibitor makes the policy; he makes it as a result of coming in contact with his public, and it is to him that the producers through their representatives must come if a real plan or policy is to be worked out.

"The exhibitor makes the policy, then. And what is his policy? TO MAKE MONEY! A simple answer but the truth; so simple that it sounds laughable to mention so evident a fact. Yet—that is just the point that the producers are losing sight of with their plans and policies with which the exhibitor has no interest. Mr. Exhibitor wants his policy; he wants to make money; and all the policies of the producers will net them nothing if the exhibitor does not buy because he can make no money out of the picture whether sold by any plan submitted by the producer. All boiled down the producer must answer, 'Does the exhibitor make more money by this plan or that plan? Does that make him sell more pictures; does it draw the crowds? Does it make him more money?' If it does not the exhibitor is left in the same predicament that he was last year, the year before last and every year before that.

"So the question is, 'Mr. Exhibitor, what is your policy?' Answer, 'TO MAKE MONEY!'

"And the simplest way of all is to help him make money by seeing that he gets a fair return on every picture that he books. He must be helped to sell his picture to the public and not left to flounder about until he sinks. In the end it is his success that makes the producer's success. That is a truism not only in the film business but it is also so in the industrial world at large. The man who puts a new brand of tobacco on the market does not wait for the merchant to push it for him. If he did he would be marked for failure. The merchant has goods; it is the producer who pushes the goods. The middle-man is just the cog in the wheel of reaching the public.

"The very same thing holds true in the moving picture industry. The success of a picture depends upon the public buying the picture. It is up to the producer to see that the picture is pushed, that the public know about it, that it is properly exploited, and not merely that the exhibitor gets and has the picture. And the film industry has it on the others because the exhibitor, unlike most merchants, wants to get all the help he can in exploiting every picture that he runs. Universal has found this so, and so will the other producers who are adopting the plan of aiding the exhibitor.

"So all talks and expositions of plans and policies, as far as the salesman is concerned, end in the query. 'Mr. Exhibitor, what is your policy?' If the producer listens for the answer and heeds it, success is his as well as the exhibitor's. For it will mean a fifty-fifty proposition with satisfaction for both. And that is the way any and all successful industries are run."

They Go Wild, Just Wild

Being Another Instance in Which the Motion Picture Proves Its Worth

"WHEN is a chaplain not a chaplain?"

"When his name is Charlie!"

The sing-song reply was in chorus from five hundred voices, the owners of which were already in their places for the Big Show, although it was more than an hour before the real performance would begin. Eagerly anticipating the show that was scheduled to be given by the American Red Cross Hospital Cinema Service in France, these wounded doughboys were cheerfully slandering each other as well as all the "noted" celebrities of the day. It was a capacity house, too, that precluded even a mention of S. R. O. As a matter of fact, it looked enough like a New York subway train at rush hour to be its twin brother.

"They go wild, simply wild—" The song ended most abruptly, prematurely, for the screen announced that the play was beginning. The hush was momentary. For the next two hours the audience laughed unrestrainedly at their favorite heroes, heroines, and other screen folk, who amuse with their antics and are gone like shadows.

"The End" and "Good Night" were in due time cast impartially at them from the screen. But they did not budge one inch. They looked at each other, grinned and clapped vigorously and uproariously, while the few hundreds of boys outside were becoming more impatient to have a turn at seeing the show. A riot was imminent. A compromise was therefore effected speedily and consisted merely of the promise of an extra picture on the next evening's program (for every night is picture night there). Even that invisible force, the operator, is sometimes called upon to use his powers of diplomacy, although the Red Cross is glad to say that "the movies were generally considered by the boys as a spontaneous source of pleasure."

As America's hospital population in France grew, there was an increasing need for mental diversion among the patients. Many of the hospitals were situated in out-of-the-way places; in spite of any obstacle that confronted the undertaking, however, a Cinema service was started by the Red Cross—on a small scale at first, to be sure, but with a growing range in keeping with its growth in popularity as American-made films supplanted the French films, the latter being the only ones available at the outset.

Are You Lazy? Or Just Indifferent!

Springfield Newspaper Man Insists Cobwebs Are Clogging Brain of Many Exhibitors

By W. F. Dagon

Motion Picture Editor of the Illinois State Journal, Springfield, Ill.

AS an advertising solicitor I have called on a great many business men in my time, but the fellows that really "get my goat" are the "lazy" exhibitors. I suppose mine is the same experience that has fallen to many others. If so, they will bear me out in some of the statements I am going to make, and some of the accusations.

It is not hard to spot a theatre run by a lazy exhibitor. You can tell by the front of the house generally the type of man who is trying to run it. The sidewalk is usually littered with paper and dirt that has been blown in and around the lobby, or that has been thrown there by people coming in and going out of the theatre. You will find handbills, paper bags, peanut shells and popcorn from the edge of the sidewalk right into the main aisle and down to the edge of the screen. The glass in the box office may have been wiped off at some time or other, and the inside of the box office is usually a dumping ground for circulars, magazines, papers, lithographs, photos and all the paraphernalia needed in the business. The box office is the one place of all places where it is not needed.

Going into the theatre you will find some of the lights out that are supposed to be burning. There will be others burning that should be out. The electric fans may be out of "whack," but they will be fixed, you will learn if you ask, when Jim gets around to it. The piano player is playing the jazziest two-step Irving Berlin ever turned out, yet Robert McKim or some other good villain may be dying on the desert sands, far from water and Broadway. If you sit down in a seat you are liable to get hung up in some way and lose the pocket out of your best coat. Sometimes the seat will go down, if you push hard enough and are of the "sticker" type. After you get seated you may notice that the air in the place is not Florida-water perfumed.

YOU wait for the picture. The lithos outside said that Dorothy Dalton would be seen in "The Flame of the Yukon." The show starts. Imagine your surprise when W. S. Hart is thrust on the screen in "The Two-Gun Man," or some other oldtimer. If you go out to the box office, or ask the doorman if Miss Dalton is showing today you will be told: "No; Jim put out the wrong paper. She don't come till next Tuesday."

You may think the above is exaggerated but it is being done in many cities in this country every day. But the biggest fun of all is trying to get advertising out of the "lazy" exhibitor.

You go and try and find out from the manager what he will show tomorrow. After as many as ten trips to a theatre I have caught the manager. "Let's see, what have I got tomorrow," is usually the reply. "Oh, yes, tomorrow I have Mary Pickford in 'Rags.'" No, it wouldn't do to advertise it, as everybody knows Pickford and if they want to see her they will come in. So after you have argued yourself black in the face, you may be given an advertisement so that the manager will be rid of you.

He has no press matter. He has no cuts. The paper hasn't come in yet, it ought to be at the express office now. Fix something up; something good. The matter is left to the advertising man. He knows, perhaps, more about the picture than that exhibitor knows, so he rushes back to the office, goes through his books, finds some good stuff on "Rags," digs up a swell cut of Pickford, and gives the manager a good run for his money. Next day he goes around, by the purest luck bumps into the manager, asks him what he thought of the "layout this morning" and gets this reply: "I dunno; ain't seen your paper."

I have argued with exhibitors for as much as four hours in one day what that exhibitor ought to run on a picture. And I have won out several times. And every time I have won out I have had that exhibitor tell me to go ahead and fix up the ad and notices, leaving the matter entirely in my hands! He, and there are many of them, never as much as looked up a piece of publicity to help out after having agreed to spend as much as two hundred dollars in advertising. If the advertising pulled the business, all well and good; if it didn't, the exhibitor would be found with a grouch, and firm in his conviction that "advertising don't get you nothing."

THERE are many exhibitors who have absolutely no idea of what to advertise in a picture. The reason for this is that they do not take the time nor trouble to find out. Some of them discover at the last minute that the press book has been lost, or it hasn't come, or that the cuts weren't ordered. And if its a pre-release it may be that nothing can be found on it. Imagine having to fix up a quarter page ad and a half column reading notice on a picture that you haven't seen, that no advertising has been run on, and that you don't know a thing about! Can you expect to pull business for an exhibitor who is so careless in his affairs?

To illustrate this article we had to get a snapshot of a wide-awake exhibitor, as a lazy one could not be found. He's telling the author that live exhibitors CAN be found.

I am writing this from the angle of calling on theatres who do not employ advertising men, but who let newspaper men do all their work for nothing.

I have called on exhibitors who made it a point to reach the theatre punctually at six o'clock in the afternoon. Of course the show had been running from eleven or twelve o'clock. The exhibitor would ask the box office girl a question—how many tickets had been sold—and then leave the place to play pool or rum for the rest of the evening, not returning until time to lock up.

I have asked exhibitors if the picture they had on was a good one, and have been told "they didn't know, they hadn't seen it," and it had been showing for three days.

I have called on exhibitors who never knew until it was time to start the first show whether they had the right picture in the box in the booth or not. I have called on exhibitors who have lost a whole day's business by not getting their show on time, because the exhibitor was not on the job to see that it got in. And I have called on exhibitors who have run off shows that took an hour's time to fix the films for proper presentation, leaving the spectator sitting down in the dark, and wondering what in h-ll was the matter.

I have called on exhibitors who booked the cheapest pictures they could buy, the oldest and "crummiest" comedies on the market, and had them foist them on the patrons.

I HAVE called on exhibitors who have kicked at every ad they ever ran in the paper, and complained that their competitors were getting all the best of it. I have called on a great many exhibitors who knew all about running a newspaper, yet they had never worked on one, and had been horseshoers all their life.

I have called on exhibitors who complained that rates were too high, and yet the same exhibitors were charging the top admission prices.

I have called on exhibitors who complained that business was rotten and yet they were making money hand over fist, and were afraid if they said it was "good" that they would be asked to advertise. I have called on exhibitors who made it a point to insult every newspaper man in town at every opportunity, and then expect to be "taken care of" if anything happened at the theatre.

Under the heading "Lazy Exhibitor" I class all the above men. Laziness is responsible for all of their ills. They don't care about anything, yet they expect to see the end of the month show the regular handsome profit.

In conclusion I ask, do you know a "lazy exhibitor"? If you do, try and get him to wake up, for he is missing a great chance. Either that or have him sell out and get into a business that does not require brains and "pep." I'm tired of calling on him.

Motion picture machines were installed in the recreation huts of all our large hospitals in France. Small portable projection machines were used in the wards where patients were well enough to be amused but unable to go to the recreation rooms. The operators were, in the majority, French reformes, recovered wounded who were not to be returned to the battlefield. This idea worked out very well in its efficiency, as well as giving work that would in itself help maintain the morale of these worthy patriots of our ally.

Of course it was necessary to establish a circuit for the plays. The Hospital Cinema Service therefore established its headquarters in Paris, and upon a working basis might be likened to a large wheel, the hub being a small three-story building on Rue St. Honore, where all the operators came to obtain their weekly consignments of films. Two motor trucks were kept busy transporting the operators and their precious cargo to and from the railroad stations. This idea of having operators travel with their films proved to be the more satisfactory way, as it obviated loss or delay, either one of which would have caused no small amount of inconvenience to the audiences.

The Cinema Service of the American Red Cross will continue its activities until every sick doughboy comes floating up the Hudson. Until then, it will continue to unreel its 1,418,000 feet of film featuring favorite comedies and current events of the U. S. A.

Pertinence and Poetry Pertly Put and Partly Pun

The ravages wrought by the bites of the strike germ the country over are felt the more because of the existing state of under production.

A strike could scarcely damage the M. P. game along that line, however.

Keeping Both Eyes Open?

Or Are Exhibitors Missing Some Good Bets That Flourish Under Their Very Noses?

ARE exhibitors overlooking their best exploitation bet?

It seems that they are, from results accomplished recently by S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., and by Robert Lieber, president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Are showmen who have applied diligently every known method of promotion and who are constantly seeking new ideas, unconsciously neglecting a little trend of preferment that means tremendous crowds and profits?

This seems to be the case, according to the success of an exploitation campaign planned by Messrs. McCormick and Lieber which brought forth the biggest two weeks' business in the history of the English theatre in Indianapolis, despite the fact that the weather for these fourteen days was the hottest days of the year.

The new idea and which appears to be probably the most important in exploitation is the creation of publicity items by the attractions and by incidents surrounding its presentation.

An entirely new line of publicity, different from anything that had ever before appeared in Indianapolis in conjunction with the presentation of a motion picture attraction was the campaign waged by the English theatre under the direction of Messrs. McCormick and Lieber. Perhaps the decided success should not be attributed entirely to them. However, it is unquestionable that their judgment and handling of the exploitation cards caused their victory.

And here's what happened:

The good old town of Indianapolis emitted several thousand astonished gasps when a sensational assortment of advertising matter announcing "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian and of which First National Exhibitors' Circuit is the official distributor, began taking the star spots on all billboards and in all newspapers. This was not altogether different from the policy of the well-known McCormick because he always exploited his attractions. But this exploitation which featured "Auction of Souls" was unusual because it was considerable more pronounced than anything which he had previously been responsible for.

And with Mr. Lieber attending to the business and commercial end of the exhibitor and with Mr. McCormick devoting his efforts to the artistic phases of the presentation, these two experienced exhibitors made the sweltering population of the Hoosier capital forget all about the heat and turn out en-masse to see their attraction.

The extensive exploitation campaign in billboards and newspapers started several days in advance of the opening of the picture.

Large American-Italian Amalgamation

Universal Is Local Firm in Newly Formed Roma-New York Corporation; Special Attention Is to Be Given to the European-Asiatic Market

AMALGAMATION of foreign and American film interests on a large scale was recorded last week with the formation of what is claimed to be the first American-Italian film corporation. The concern will be known as Roma-New York Pictures Corporation, and is capitalized at $5,000,000. The American company is represented by Universal, and the Italian interests by General Guisippi Garibaldi and Captain Ezio Garabaldi.

Universal points to the amalgamation as the first evidence in the important world reconstruction which is the topic of general interest at the present time, and as the predecessor to many other big American and Italian combinations.

Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane and P. A. Powers were the three Universal officials responsible for the alliance.

Growing Foreign Market

The two Garibaldi brothers who represented the Italian interests are two very famous men in their country. The Garibaldis are of the family that has been prominent in Italian history and General Garibaldi is one of the heroes of the Italian army, having served in many of the important engagements of the recent war. The two Garibaldi brothers are among the most influential and successful business men in Italy.

The officers of the new Roma-New York Corporation are: P. A. Powers, president; General Garibaldi, vice-president; Miss Ann Feinman, secretary; Captain Ezio Garibaldi, assistant secretary, and R. H. Cochrane, treasurer. Besides the officers named, members of the board of directors are: Tarkington Baker, general manager of the Universal company, and Dan B. Lederman, assistant to Carl Laemmle. Mr. Amerigo Serrao will be director of publicity for the corporation.

The corporation, according to the statements of the officials, is to be made the largest of its kind in the motion picture industry. The proposition has been under consideration for some time by the Universal officials and the formation of this corporation enables the American interests of the company to have complete charge of the distribution of the Italian films made by the company in this country. Besides the releasing of the films made under the American directors of the corporation—the company will have access to all the Universal foreign exchanges as well as the distribution in Asia and the Orient through exchanges of its own which are to be established in the near future.

The largest film producing companies in Italy are connected with and interested in this new alliance. The more prominent of the Italian producers who are represented in the corporation are men who were actively engaged in the production of such famous film successes as "Cabiria," "Quo Vadis," "Giulio Cesare" and other successful plays; the Bertini Film Co. and the Kerenne Film Co.

The statement was made that special attention would be given to the European-Asiatic field and the Russian market. The Italian producers, even at the maximum production, have never been able to supply the demands of this large field. General Garibaldi said: "If every theatre in Italy were to be closed and the entire output given to the near-Orient and Russian fields, we could not satisfy within forty per cent the demands that are constantly coming to us from those markets. With this new corporation we will now be able to cover the entire field."

Carl Laemmle, of Universal

Within recent months more than one of the larger American producing companies have sent players overseas for the purpose of making a number of productions. The supposition can be allowed that it is only a matter of time before these companies with studios, American owned, will endeavor to invade the European field.

Lynch Adding to His Florida String

It is reported in Tampa, that the S. A. Lynch Enterprises have acquired the Court and Arcade theatres in Fort Myers, Florida, and also the Royal theatres in Tarpon Springs and Clearwater, Florida.

It is also reported that they have secured a location at Lakeland, Florida, and will erect a $30,000 house there.

EXHIBITORS PICNIC GUESTS OF MARY MILES MINTER

DEDHAM, Mass., will be the Mecca of New England exhibitors on Sunday, August 17. From a distance of fifty miles or more around Boston, they will assemble at Dedham for a big picnic, the features of which will include the filming of several scenes for a photoplay, luncheon, games and the meeting of Mary Miles Minter.

Miss Minter, assisted by her company, is to be the hostess of the occasion, and the exhibitors will be present in response to invitations personally sent out by the Realart Pictures star. Miss Minter has been in Dedham for about three weeks making scenes for "Anne of Green Gables," under the direction of William Desmond Taylor.

The picnic is the result of visits which exhibitors have made within the last two weeks to the location where Miss Minter is working. The interest they manifested suggested to Miss Minter the desirability of giving the picnic.

Country Solid on Tax Repeal

Reports Are That Sentiment Is Universal; United Picture Theatres Aiding

SENTIMENT favoring the repeal of the motion picture taxes is reported sweeping the country. Reports received this week by Louis F. Blumenthal, chairman of the Committee on Legislation and Tax of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., show that the organization of the committee's fighting machine is 90 per cent. completed.

From California, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Michigan, Indiana and the states of the Northwest came reports that meetings of exhibitors in those states resulted in the adoption of the committee's plan of action. Hundreds of petitions have already reached Washington and will continue to pour in. In most of the states the necessary funds to carry on the fight are being provided, the Cleveland plan of financing the fight having been adopted in many cases.

Patrons of theatres are showing their willingness to back the exhibitors by eagerly signing petitions which are being circulated in cities of all sizes. Hundreds of theatres are showing slides and working up a genuine sentiment against the taxes. On top of this many Congressmen who were backward in replying to the committee's initial questionnaires are writing favorable replies to exhibitors in their districts.

The movement received fresh impetus on Monday last when an organization representing all lines of industry, following the lead of the motion picture exhibitors wrote to President Wilson and every member of Congress asking for a repeal of all the war time taxes.

Every member of the United Picture Theatres of America, will know this week that there is a real campaign on. Through the co-operation of J. A. Berst and Milton Goldsmith the front page of the United Exhibitor sent out to each member of the organization was devoted to the tax campaign.

Allens Acquire Two More Houses

Two more theatres were added to the rapidly growing chain of the Allen Theatre Interests during the past week with the opening of Allen's Danforth in Toronto, the home city of the circuit, and the reopening of the former Royal theatre, Peterboro, Ontario, as the Allen.

The Danforth is the first of six new neighborhood or suburban theatres now building for Messrs. Jule and Jay J. Allen who claim that in this theatre they have set a new mark in neighborhood house construction, for the building is one of the handsomest in all Toronto and does not suffer by comparison with any of the downtown houses. The Danforth seats 1,800.

The Royal theatre, Peterboro, has been completely refurnished and redecorated since having been taken over by the Allens.

Realart Sales Manager in Los Angeles

J. S. Woody, general sales manager for Realart, arrived in Los Angeles this week after a trip over the coast, during which he opened offices at Denver, Seattle, San Francisco, and is now looking for a location for an exchange in Los Angeles. Orrin Woody, who has been manager of the Select office at Denver, is to serve as manager of the new Los Angeles Realart Exchange.

Managing New Theatre

J. H. Michael, former manager of the New Academy theatre, Buffalo, which recently was sold to a Chicago burlesque syndicate, has been appointed manager of the Victoria theatre, the big neighborhood house built by the late Mitchel H. Mark at the corner of West Ferry and Grant streets.

State Exhibitors Prepare for Big Fight

Executive Body of New York Organization Discusses Protective Measures Against the Alleged Producer-Owned Theatres

FREEDOM of discussion and unanimity of opinion marked the meeting in Rochester, on Aug. 5 and 6, of the Executive Committee of the M. P. E. L. of New York state. The problem of protecting the exhibitor from unfair competition, which it was alleged was threatened by certain interests, was discussed at length.

It was pointed out that unless action was forthcoming these picture interests would dominate the exhibiting end of the field, to the injury of thousands of exhibitors.

The use of the screen to advertise manufacturers' articles was condemned by the committee, over which Jules Michaels of Buffalo presided.

Co-operative Booking

The matter of co-operative booking occupied a good deal of the deliberations of the Committee. On motion of Mr. Earl Crabb of Buffalo, the meeting adopted as its own proper sentiment an "Exhibitor's Creed" a copy of which is to be sent to the trade press and to every exhibitor in the State of New York, and later possibly to every theatre owner in the country.

The following committee was appointed by the Chair to formulate plans for co-operative booking: Leo Brecher, H. Rachmiel, B. Crob, Sydney S. Cohen, Charles L. O'Reilly, Walter Hayes, John H. Springer, Lawrence Bolognino, William Dillon and Ira T. Mosher.

How to meet the threatened aggression of producing interests and to protect the exhibitor in the possession and control of his theatre was discussed very thoroughly and earnestly. The matter was finally left in the hands of a committee consisting of Messrs. Walter Hayes, Harold Franklin, Ira T. Mosher, David Picker, W. H. Linton and Sydney S. Cohen. The committee in the preparation and maturing of its plans will have the guidance and legal advice of Mr. John J. McInerney, the attorney for the League.

The question of certain remedial and protective legislation to be sought by the League at Albany at the coming session of the Legislature was taken up and most carefully considered. The officers of the League were empowered to introduce and promote legislation substantially modifying the present law, against the admission of minors into the motion picture theatres. The officers of the League were given full power to have introduced such other legislation as was deemed necessary to protect the interests of the exhibitors of the State of New York and also other legislation beneficial not only to the exhibitor but to the great mass of motion picture patrons will be submitted and their adoption urged.

Messrs. Berman and Hayman who had attended the meeting at St. Louis and there defined and submitted plans for the basis of a genuinely national and democratic exhibitors' representation, reported on their mission. Their actions at St. Louis were fully sustained and approved. The committee

APPOINTING COMMITTEE EXECUTIVES

PRESIDENT WILLIAM A. BRADY, of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has requested the member companies to nominate executives for service on the various committees of the Association for the coming year, with the understanding that nominations will be equivalent to appointment by the president.

This plan of allowing each company to pick the men it wishes to see as its representatives on each important committee was initiated last year, and worked so well that it has been decided to continue it. To the committees has been intrusted a great part of the work of the Association, and to their efforts a substantial portion of the concrete accomplishment of the organization during the past year must be credited.

At the Rochester meeting of the Association printed reports were submitted covering the general activities and accomplishments of the body during the year on Sunday opening, film theft prosecution and various other important subjects.

Harmony Rules Convention

Wind-up of New York State Exhibitors Session Marked by General Good Will

AS the culminating feature of the convention of the New York State Exhibitors League at Rochester on August 5 and 6, the delegates were the guests of the Picture Play News at a dinner at the Hotel Eggleston. Plates were laid for 86, and the event was made memorable by the expressions of good will and co-operation that graced the dinner, exhibitors and film men hobnobbing on the best of terms.

Erwin J. W. Huber, editor of the Picture Play News, was responsible for the dinner and made the opening after dinner address. Mr. Huber commented on the significance of seeing all of the prominent exhibitors of the state sitting down at the same table, a thing that would have been almost unheard of a few years ago.

"Now that we are all here together," he said, "we realize that perhaps there was no reason why we shouldn't have been here long ago. The time has passed when the exhibitor can gain anything by calling all the film men highway robbers and the film men need to go around among the exhibitors with six shooters in their jeans for self protection. We are all in the same business and have practically the same interests and the sooner we realize that pulling together is the way to bring results the better it will be for all of us. After all, we are all pretty good fellows and might much better be friends than enemies."

Addresses along the same lines were made by other prominent exhibitors, including Ira Mosher and Jules Michaels of Buffalo, Lew Dillon of Ithaca, Sidney Cohen and Charles O'Reilly of New York City. Assemblyman Harry Crowley of Monroe County, who voted for the Sunday opening bill, also spoke briefly. John J. McInerney, legal adviser of the league, was toastmaster. Mr. McInerney told of the work of chasing film thieves.

THE EXHIBITORS' CREED

FOLLOWING is the "Exhibitors' Creed" adopted by the Executive Committee of the M. P. E. L. of New York State at their recent meeting:

"Inasmuch as my livelihood is wholly or partially dependant upon the exhibition of motion pictures, I feel it is my duty to support a movement for fair play and closer co-operation among all my fellow men throughout the entire industry. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York pledges its support to film producers whose efforts are entirely devoted to the production of better films to be sold at live-and-let-live prices, and further go on record as being wholly opposed to encouraging film producers that are acquiring theatres in competition with theatres already established. Fair play is our motto, and the same consideration is expected from producers whose products we will use in the future."

Back from Perilous Mission

Photographer Who Toured Europe for Hoover Pictures in Many Experiences

"THIS is a dangerous mission, Mr. Seiden. It is only fair to warn you of this fact in advance. If, knowing this, you believe that you can carry an undertaking through to success, you can be assured that anything which the United States government can do for you will be done."

Such was the statement of Commander George Barr Baker, chief assistant to Director General Herbert Hoover of the American Relief Administration. The young man to whom it was addressed was Joseph Seiden, who had been selected to act as the official motion picture representative of Mr. Hoover, and the mission to which he had been assigned was to direct a complete cinema picturization of all the relief and political activities of the American Relief Administration on the continent of Europe. The above conversation occurred in Paris early in May, and on the thirteenth of that month Mr. Seiden, in a war correspondent's uniform and equipped with a portfolio of government credentials, passports, and letters of introduction, left Paris with the American Mission to negotiate peace in Russia.

That the warning of Commander Baker was amply justified was proven dozens of times in the three strenuous, adventurous months that followed. Through thirteen different countries of Europe Mr. Seiden journeyed, and in several of the smaller nations far up on the Baltic Sea a motion picture camera had never been seen before.

Mr. Seiden has just returned to America, and says that the final disposition of the Hoover films will depend on the decision of the U. S. government. It has not yet been decided whether they will be released publicly or not. In the meantime Mr. Seiden is busy perfecting the organization of a new company and it is rumored that he expects to go back to Europe within two or three months.

Hunt Stromberg Leaves Goldwyn Pictures

Hunt Stromberg, who founded the Service Department for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and for the past fourteen months director in chief of its service and exploitation divisions, has resigned from the Goldwyn organization to become director of service and exploitation for Selznick Pictures, effective August 18.

Stromberg is a former newspaperman and prior to his affiliation with Goldwyn, owner of an advertising agency executing national merchandising campaigns for a number of prominent advertisers.

Successful Reopening

The opening of the remodeled Strand Theatre at Flint, Mich., drew an invited society audience of 700. The theatre is considered the most beautiful in the city and seats 1,900. The recent remodeling is said to have cost in the neighborhood of $50,000. Mr. and Mrs. Lester Matt are sole owners.

also went on record as fully endorsing the statements made in the trade press in reply to Mr. Alfred S. Black, who was elected President of the St. Louis meeting.

Detailed reports of members were read in reference to their activities on behalf of the exhibitors in the campaign for repealing the film tax.

The League proposes to send a letter to Mr. Eastman suggesting to him that the proposed "Academy" be conducted as an institution for improving methods of presentation in pictures and not as a commercial proposition to enter into competition with the regular motion picture theatres of the City of Rochester.

Much applause followed the reading of the communication from the Miami Valley Exhibitors representing theatre owners in the States of Indiana, West Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio. This statement announces the intention of the Miami Valley men of joining with New York in an effort for a real one hundred per cent exhibitors' association national in scope.

Simultaneous Stage and Screen Show of Play

For the first time in theatrical history the stage premiere of a drama and the first showing of a photoplay taken from the same drama were given in Cleveland, August 11, when "The House Without Children" a play by Robert McAughlin had a simultaneous presentation at the two leading legitimate theatres.

The dramatic premiere occurred at the Subert Colonial with Clara Joel in the important woman part, and the picture premiere at the Klaw and Erlanger Opera House. Richard Travers who starred in the photoplay is playing the same role in the dramatic version and making personal appearances in connection with the showing of the film. Both theatres are doing a capacity business.

England and U. S. Rivals

Correspondent Cites High Feeling Running Because of the "Invasion"

THE following expression of the feeling prevalent in England anent the so-called "American invasion" is written by G. M. Jeffries, London correspondent of Motion Picture News, and purports to be an unbiased report on how the wind blows as regards American pictures, throughout that country:

"The sole topic of conversation between any two film men in this city is of the Famous Players-Lasky new venture. The trade papers, too, are full of it, both for and against.

"As correspondent, please note that I am impartial, and that I am merely writing in the light of the British film man's view.

"I need not reiterate the position, which has been quoted again and again in the British film trade papers, but would like to express the opinion that the present scheme in force is likely to seriously prejudice the American producer.

"At the Glasgow Conference of the Exhibitors' Association, a resolution was passed that all contracts with Famous Players-Lasky be cancelled, and that no further contracts be signed. Showmen who were not members of the C. E. A. before, are joining in large numbers, in order to have the support of the Association.

"What does it mean? If the 'American invasion' continues, British showmen and British producers will rise en masse and American pictures will be barred completely.

"Also they ask, is it fair? For the last five years the British film trade has managed to keep its head above the water, but that is all. No building has been allowed, and even now, when plans for fresh cinemas are submitted to various local councils, labor members protest and state the workmen's dwellings are the first consideration. When, however, apart from local protests, general building once more commences, over comes an American firm and more or less tells the British exhibitor that, by means of his large capital, he is going to cut the British exhibitor out of the business all together.

"We are Allies in war, and we are fond of our American cousins, but we are rivals in trade. Have, by force of arms, firstly knocked the German commercial invasion on the head, and then a military invasion has been prevented by our magnificent navy, yet we are still prepared to resist an American trade invasion.

"Therefore, I say, (and again I only reiterate that I am speaking, not for myself, but as correspondent for the views of British film men) let Americans beware, and remember that British people firstly want British films, acted by British people, and although they also want American films, yet in order to resist an invasion, they will fall back upon French and Italian films, especially the latter, as Italians are now producing from British novels, with scenarios written by British writers.

"On the 15th of July there was held at the Holborn restaurant a mass meeting of all who are connected with the trade, in order to discuss the ways and means of combating the American invasion.

"I was there, and on every face was a fixed look of determination, and a resolution to the effect that the aid of the British public be called in to assist the trade in resisting, was passed without a dissenting voice. There is also a movement on foot to prevent building by other than British companies for the period of five years.

"The Topical Budget, one of the three bi-weekly news features on this side, has made a claim to a record of the quickest reproduction yet performed.

"Their photographer was at the march in Paris on the 14th of July, which was completed by 3 a. m., and a film portraying this was actually shown at the West End Cinema in London at 10:20 the same night, the negative having been conveyed by aeroplane."

Continue Blacklisting "Open Your Eyes"

The Board of Police Commissioners of Providence, R. I., have upheld Sergt. Richard H. Gamble, amusement censor, in his decision in putting the motion picture "Open Your Eyes" on the blacklist. Several attempts have been made to show the picture to mixed audiences in this city and another attempt was made last week when Dr. Jewett, representing the Health Film Company, called on the board after having been refused the right to project the film in Providence by Sergt. Gamble.

The commissioners refused to have it shown as part of a regular program in any theatre here, although they expressed a willingness to allow its projection under the supervision of proper authorities.

"Dr. Harry W. Kimball, State Director of Venereal Diseases, has been showing 'Fit to Fight' to male audiences under the supervision of the Public Health Service and the State Board of Health, and we would allow the showing of 'Open Your Eyes' here under similar circumstances," says the commissioner in answer to Dr. Jewett's request.

Radical Innovations in New Moss Theatre

B. S. Moss has inaugurated some new ideas in the theatre which he is erecting at 181st street and Broadway, New York City. Among the innovations which Mr. Moss has introduced in his new picture and vaudeville house is an entirely new type of organ, which will be in addition to the forty-piece orchestra.

The organ will be suspended above the stage and will be entirely invisible to the audience, but by delicate devices the full graduation of tone will be conveyed to the patrons of the theatre. This organ is known as the vibratory magnetic type and is operated by giant electric magnets, which at the touch of buttons controlled from the orchestra pit operates its musical chords.

Another feature of the new theatre is that access to the balconies is gained by an inclining runway, up which an automobile can be driven with perfect ease from the lobby to the highest gallery. There will be absolutely no stairways.

At Reins of Windsor Theatre, Toronto

Max Allen has assumed the management of the Windsor Theatre, Toronto, Canada, to succeed J. Harkin. The Windsor is an Allen house. The new manager for seven years has been in Edmonton, Alberta, in charge of the Allen and Monarch theatres there.

Mark-Time Policy on Actors' Strike

Industry Refuses to Become Excited Over the Legitimates' Troubles; Producers Silent, Though Some Players Are in Sympathy

DESPITE that several motion picture actors and actresses have expressed their sympathy with the striking members of the Actors' Equity Association, and that the names of others figure in an action instituted by Producers, as a whole there is little or no interest being shown in the tangle existing in the legitimate, by the picture producers.

The same report comes from the West, where it is said the Coast players are incurious, and that the organizations of players there are not affiliated with the Equity excepting Motion Picture Players Union, Stage Employees Union and Projection Operators Union, which are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. To date the Equity has not flat-footedly declared it is connected with the A. F. of L.

Actors Named in Suit

Random statements credited to a few hot-headed members of the Equity to the effect that if the picture people were not behind them they might suffer through a calling out of operators, etc., were given little credence. Though there are complicated angles arising out of recent combinations of picture and legitimate interests, it is apparent those magnates involved are keeping their skirts clear in the altercation. The prevailing feeling is that the picture players are dealt with as individuals in a fair way, and little is to be gained by dragging this business into the stage fight.

Alfred S. Black, president of the M. P. E. L. of A., who was quoted as being displeased at the action of the producers' and distributors' branch of the National Association in opposing the demands of the Actors' Equity Association, emphatically denies that he made any such statement.

An attitude of watchful waiting is apparent throughout the industry, pending a definite turn one way or another to the existing trouble.

Virginia Pearson, through her husband, is credited with contributing $250 to the Equity Association, and promising $750 more. To date she is the only actress engaged in pictures who has publicly contributed in money to the strikers, though many others are said to be in sympathy with their cause.

The suits brought by the theatrical managers against the Actors' Equity Association and 300 of its members names a number of prominent picture folk as defendants. Among these are Ernest Truex, whose reported walk-out from "A Bashful Hero" prevented its Broadway premier; Francis X. Bushman, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, William Farnum, Dustin Farnum, Elsie Ferguson, Alla Nazimova, Frank Keenan, Fred Stone, Harry B. Warner, Florence Reed and George Beban.

The strikers' headquarters announced receipt of a telegram from the coast expressing sympathy, and speaking of "the injustice of managers," to which was signed the names William Courtleigh, George Fawcett, Vincent Serrano, Milton Sills, Bert Lytell and Earl Browne.

INCORPORATIONS OF THE WEEK

THE following new incorporations were reported in the past week:

Roma New York Exchange Film Corporation, manufacture and deal in and with feature films, etc., $5,000,000; T. L. Croteau, M. E. Spencer, A. M. Hoover, Wilmington, Del.

Aremby Film Corp., Manhattan, motion pictures, $10,000; J. Machson, J. Richman, E. Berman, 240 East 5th St.

Sun Film, Inc., $100,000; P. B. Drew, C. L. Rimlinger, H. E. Knox of Wilmington.

Graphitum Motion Picture Corp., $50,000; Samuel B. Howard, George V. Reilly, Robert K. Thistle, all of New York.

All-American Film Service, Inc., $200,000; M. C. Kelly, S. L. Mackie, J. D. Frock, of Wilmington.

Post Pictures Corp., Manhattan, $20,000 to $100,000.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Manhattan, $3,000,000 to $5,000,000.

Strike's Effect on Pictures

Publicity Man Sees Possible Benefit to Industry in Dispute Now Raging

ONE possible result of the Producers-Actors battle raging in New York and other sections now may be the production of better pictures at less cost. This thought is put forward by Horace Judge, Publicity Director of the United Picture Theatres Inc. He writes:

"On the principle of the old saying that 'it's an ill wind that blows nobody any good' motion picture producers are watching with active interest every move made in the threatened deadlock between the 'legitimate' managers and the representative body of the leading actors and actresses of the American speaking stage, because of the direct bearing the impending struggle may have on the field of motion picture productions.

"Coming at the moment when a tendency seems to have set in towards the resuscitation of Eastern productive activity, if recent signs and announcements are a guide, the threatened impasse between the Producing Managers Protective Association and the Actors Equity Association, should it develope into an open rupture, would throw open to motion picture producers a wealth of talent and artistic ability beyond all measure of what has hitherto been available particularly at this season of the year, when ordinarily the supply of stage talent is busy making its contracts for the ensuing 'legitimate' season.

"Producers and managers in the 'legitimate,' it is true, are at this moment busily announcing productions for the season at hand, and these production plans are more numerous this pre-season than ever, a result of the rich harvest of the latest two seasons with their packed houses encouraging the producers to increased output. But at the same time the players association shows every sign of confidence, and, fortified as they now announce, by an affiliation with Labor ranks, the prospect of a big fight increases.

"Should neither side yield or compromise (and compromise seems to have been definitely rejected by the managers) and should the ranks of both sides remain loyal, some thousands of high ranking actors and actresses will be compelled to seek some outlet other than the speaking stage productions of the managers with whom they have for year after year been accustomed to engage themselves for the regular season.

"And what is that outlet to be? Vaudeville, doubtless, will be the answer for some, but vaudeville presupposes an 'act' to be gotten up and booked. And that's the rub, the getting 'time,' as many have proved. In the supporting casts for acts some will find their winter's work. Stock will receive others, but the motion pictures palpably offer the best solution to the actor, and thus the cream of the 'legitimate' talent is likely to be available for the screen, if, as looks likely, the Producers-Equity impasse persists.

"Recrudescence of Eastern activity in screen productions will help to attract the legitimate actor."

Special Showing at a Statistical Meeting

David K. Niles, general manager of the non-theatrical distribution department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will show a series of special motion pictures Friday, September 5, at the sixth annual Babson Statistical Organization in Wellesly Hills, Mass. At the conference various questions pertaining to industry and its relation with labor will be taken up and discussed by experts from all over the country.

Plot Adjoining Rivoli Theatre Leased

Sydney S. Cohen has leased the remainder of his property at 1612 Broadway, northeast corner of Forty-ninth street, adjoining the Rivoli theatre, to the firm of Berdon & Walker for a term of fifteen years at an aggregate rental of $450,000.

STANLEY CO. ENTRENCHES IN CAMDEN

THE Stanley Amusement Company, according to announcement of its President, Jules E. Mastbaum, has further added to its string of houses with the acquisition of the Grand, Princess and Plaza theatres, all located in Camden, N. J. The Stanley organization takes charge of these theatres the first of September.

The Stanley Company some time ago assumed control of the Colonial theatre on Market Street, Camden, and with the Grand, Princess and Plaza it now has the principal motion picture theatres in that city, located in various sections and catering to the best elements of the population.

Tenth Anniversary of Garfield, Chicago

Charles J. Schaefer's Garfield theatre has had ten years of continuous success and will celebrate its tenth anniversary with a festival week, from September 1 to 7, inclusive.

Charles Ryan, Mr. Schaefer's house manager, has been right in his element since the 1st of August, paving the way to make the celebration a thing to be remembered for many days by the clientele of this properly conducted neighborhood theatre.

"Will You Come to Our Party?" is the question asked on all of Mr. Ryan's programs, sent out weekly.

Strike Pictures from Advertising Angle

Reports from Seattle indicate a battle forthcoming over the request by theatre censors, that they be given power to censor advertising of motion picture houses. The reason given for the request is that patrons may not be misled about what they may expect to see. At last reports no action had been taken by the City Council.

Dealing in Personalities

grind of managing big-city theatres. We could add another six months to that, but what is a few weeks after you've forgotten what a vacation looks like.

Manager Soriero was, until recently, at the Park theatre in Boston, and would not have taken his hat off the peg if the house had not changed hands. But when he departed he left with the satisfaction of knowing that a half dozen managers before him had failed to make a success of the Park—and he stepped in and proceeded to lift the theatre out of the rut. That's not so unusual if you happen to know that he managed parks, theatres, dance halls, stock companies and skating rinks, and is considered a pioneer in the picture industry.

What do you think of placing a nut (regular tree variety) in front of an editor and leaving it to him to find out the purpose thereof? That's just what Sidney Reynolds, of Supreme Pictures, did last week in an endeavor to break the summer time monotony of the newspaper offices. You guessed it; inside the nut was publicity material.

WE could not close without imparting to authors a cheering message entrusted to us by Hugh Ford. Said authors may find consolation for past grievances in the Ford utterance that "better and more lucrative days are at hand for authors in both the theatrical and motion picture field." Do we hear an "aye" from Carl Laemmle that "the play's the thing"?

Or did Mr. Ford hope to calm the writers and avoid seeing them walk out as strikers in sympathy with the actors?

Which leads us to explain that Equity Pictures Corporation is not affiliated with the Actors' Equity Association.

Park Theatre, Boston, Changes Hands

The Park Theatre, Boston's first run theatre has changed hands, the Beacon Theatre Corporation, a Boston corporation taking over the title. Thomas D. Soriero, who managed the Park for several years and whose policy has been universally successful, has severed his connection with the theatre and will avail himself of the opportunity to enjoy a vacation for a time before accepting another business connection.

It is rumored that a new house seating 1,500 will be constructed next door to the Park on the Bailey building site. In fact plans are now being drawn for the new theatre. Boston capitalists are behind the project.

New S. A. Lynch Branch

The S. A. Lynch Enterprise Co., Inc., exclusive distributors of Paramount and Artcraft motion pictures for eleven states, is opening a branch office at 126 W. Third Street, Oklahoma City, Okla. The office will employ 25 men and women. Joseph H. Gilday is the local manager.

Exchange Managers' Meeting

New England Men Gather at Boston on August 9; Distribution Methods Are Hit

THE New England Film Exchange Managers' Association, Boston, New Haven, Connecticut, Portland and Bangor, Maine, held an enthusiastic "Get Together Meeting" afternoon at Pemberton Inn, Boston, August 9. Managers, assistant managers and salesmen, traveling out of the different New England exchanges, as well as all the bookers were present, when Frederick B. Murphy, of the Boston Photoplay Company and president of the association, called the meeting to order and extended a hearty welcome to those attending.

President Murphy outlined the purposes for which the meeting was called, and said that he believed it was the first gathering of its kind ever held. His speech explained the reasons for the organization of the New England Film Exchange Managers. He convinced his hearers that the existence of this association was for the express purpose of bettering conditions in the New England States, and for protecting exchanges and exhibitors from unfair dealers.

Secretary William H. Jenner, manager of the United Artists' Corporation, addressed the gathering on the importance of the salesman, as to how very necessary he was to the successful carrying on of the exchange's business. He made a deep impression when he appealed to the salesmen present to deal absolutely fair at all times with exhibitors and with the exchanges they represent, urging them, under no circumstances, to misrepresent their product or their competitors' product to exhibitors.

Mr. Harry Asher, district manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and chairman of the Grievance Committee of the Managers' Association, in a very interesting and able talk, went into detail in explaining why the managers had organized, and pointed out that already many benefits were derived from the association. He convinced his hearers that the work of the "Grievance Committee" had abolished almost entirely the many sharp practices used by some exchanges and some exhibitors. The manner in which the Grievance Committee handled complaints of exchanges against exhibitors and exhibitors against exchanges was clearly explained. Mr. Asher stated that it was almost impossible for unfair decisions to be rendered against those who submit cases to the committee for arbitration. He predicted this body would soon supplant in the distribution end of the business, the long drawn out methods now necessary when suits are filed in courts. Mr. Asher took particular pains to explain that exhibitors had the same privilege of appealing to his committee because of unjust dealings by exhibitors, as exchanges had against unfair treatment by exhibitors, and this without charge.

Strong Financial Condition

Half-Yearly Statement on F. P.-Lasky Contains Many Interesting Figures

THE splendid financial condition of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is clearly shown by that company's half-yearly financial statement, prepared and audited by Messrs. Price Waterhouse & Co., one of the foremost Certified Public Accountants in the world.

The statement covers the company's receipts, expenditures and investments for the half year ending June 30, 1919. A comparison with previous statements shows a steady and significant growth.

In the six months covered by the report, the net profits were also double the net profits of the entire year 1918. During that year they were $1,281,174. For the six months of 1919 they were $2,439,337. That this growth is in a steady upward curve is noted by comparing with the quarterly report, issued March 30, 1919. Profits for the first quarter were $956,805, and for the second quarter $1,482,532.

From January 1, 1919, to July 1, the tangible assets of the corporation were increased by $2,500,000. Since then, 25,000 shares of the capital stock of the corporation were sold to the stockholders at $100 a share.

In addition to having reinvested two and a half million dollars in the business out of earnings, the company paid off $600,000 in notes, and on June 30 had in cash on hand and in the banks a total of $1,082,618.

Among the tangible assets held by the corporation are stories and rights, still unused, at a cost value of $301,847. It is thus evident that there will be no lack of splendid stories for next year's production. Negatives completed but not yet released total $2,108,332.

Film rentals for the half-year total $11,994,189. For the entire year 1918 they totaled $17,259,904. From all indications a total of probably $30,000,000 in film rentals will be reached by the end of the present year.

Advertising of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures has increased proportionately. In 1918 $522,544 was spent in national, magazine, newspaper and other advertising, and for the same purpose, during the first six months of 1919, $393,000 was spent.

Omaha Film Board of Trade Meets

A luncheon of the Omaha Film Board of Trade was held recently at the Hotel Conant, Charlie Taylor took the seat of honor at the head of the table, on his left the chief spokesman, was Harry Graham.

Edmond MacIvor, manager of the new Goldwyn Exchange and William Hola of the Blank Enterprises along with Frank Wood of the Omaha Bee, were elected to the publicity committee.

Twelve New Members Join N. A. M. P. I.

Not the least tangible results arising from the enthusiasm and general publicity attending the third annual meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was the extraordinary jump in membership during last month. No less than twelve new members were received into the organization during July, a record since the inception of the association.

At the Rochester meeting Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott's report showed that a consistent growth in company members had been maintained each year. In 1917 the total was seventy-three, in 1918 eighty-two, and in 1919, ninety-three. The twelve new memberships during July are due to a growing realization on the part of the industry of the accomplishments of the National Association for its benefit. Here are the new members: Realart as producers and distributors, Burton Holmes, Edgar Lewis, Les Films Albert Dulac de Paris, DeVry Corp., Carrier Eng. Corp., Poster Advertising Corp., Nicholas Kessel Laboratory, Capital Film Co., Celebrated Players Film Co. and Unity Photoplay Co.

"Right to Happiness" Presented Sept. 1

"The Right to Happiness" the new Allen Holubat production featuring Dorothy Phillips is to be given its premier Eastern showing at the Park theatre on Columbus Circle, New York City. The opening will be held on September 1. This announcement was made by Tarkington Baker, Universal's general manager.

The production is the largest one Universal has offered since the "Heart of Humanity" picture. Universal officials are confident this newer production will receive an even greater reception than did the "Heart of Humanity," which has been run in practically every large theatre in the United States.

The new production will be given an extended run in the Park theatre. According to Mr. Baker the picture will be widely advertised and exploited in a number of the New York daily newspapers, and other advertising and exploiting plans will soon be put into effect.

GRIFFITH REPERTORY SEASON ENDS

THE D. W. Griffith repertory season at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre will close on Sunday evening, Aug. 17, with the final showing of "Hearts of the World," the current offering. Mr. Griffith's season, which began on Tuesday evening, May 13, has included one hundred and eighty-nine performances, divided as follows: "Broken Blossoms," 137 times; "The Fall of Babylon," 41 times; "Hearts of the World," 11 times.

The success of "Broken Blossoms" prevented the showing of a number of productions arranged for the repertory. These, it is announced, will be presented during the coming winter season.

GOLDWYN SECURES BRAY PICTOGRAPHS

CONTRACTS have just been signed whereby the Bray Picturegraphs become a part of Goldwyn Pictures program under the name of Goldwyn-Bray Picturegraphs. This is regarded as a deal of the first importance and a triumph for Goldwyn under the enlarged policy of the twenty-million-dollar corporation, which promises exhibitors absolutely the best in pictures of all descriptions.

Details of the Goldwyn-Bray deal, calling for material enlargement of the activities of Mr. Bray's producing organization, are now being prepared and will be announced next week.

Wide Advertising for "The Red Viper"

Mr. Raden, President and General Manager of Tyrad Pictures Corporation, producers of the feature "The Red Viper," announces that company has just signed advertising contracts with outdoor advertising firms who will distribute over New York City two hundred thousand one sheets advertising this picture. In addition to this advertising every subway and elevated station will be placarded with this one sheet. With this plan of advertising, the company feels that every man, woman and child in this territory will know something about "The Red Viper," which in turn will pack the theatres and reimburse them for the expenditure involved in carrying out this advertising plan.

Arrangements are under way to open a Broadway theatre, New York, with "The Red Viper." It is expected to take place within the next ten days. However, announcements will be made covering this plan in detail at a later date.

Rumored Loew Is to Enter Buffalo

According to gossip in that city, Marcus Loew is considering putting Buffalo on his theatrical map. It is known that both Mr. Loew and his attorney, J. Robert Rubin were in town recently. Film men returning from the Rochester convention tell of a conversation one of them had with Mr. Rubin who is reported to have said that announcement would probably be made in eight weeks on the proposition. Coupled with the announcement a short time ago of the new Metropolitan theatre which the Shea Amusement company will build, the rumor would indicate that Buffalo is becoming a real theatrical center.

Theatre Circuit Plans Expansion

Plans for expansion of their circuit in Arizona are being made by Rickards & Nace, who now have three theatres and an amusement park in Phoenix. This firm is having plans drawn for theatres to be built at Prescott and Tucson, and these will be ready for opening about the first of the year.

New Orleans Exchanges Band

Association Formed with Avowed Purpose of Correcting Industry Evils

AN organization known as Film Managers' Association has been formed by many of the New Orleans film exchanges. A copy of the trade rules adopted, and a letter explaining the purposes of the body has been sent to every exhibitor in the territory. The letter, in part, follows:

"An organization known as Film Exchange Managers' Association of New Orleans has been perfected for the purpose of eliminating certain evils to which the industry is being subjected, and from which the legitimate exhibitor is suffering as well as the distributor.

"The purpose of this organization is to make it impossible for a continuance of certain practices, of which we enumerate as follows: Sub-renting or bicycling of programs; missouts caused by non-attention on the part of some certain exhibitors to shipping instructions; mutilation or destruction of film through carelessness of operators or caused by defective projection machines; to correct, as far as possible, transportation difficulties; directing our energies toward forcing express companies (common carriers) to promptly transmit and deliver your programs, and to promptly indemnify you in the event of failure; and last, but not least, to put our own exchanges in order through a process of 'house-cleaning' to insure more efficient service, fewer complaints, promptness in invoices.

"We propose to make it impossible for a certain type of exhibitor of the 'shoe-string variety' to exist at your expense and our expense.

"We can eliminate these evils with your hearty co-operation. We feel that you are as vitally interested in this accomplishment as we are. Will you assist? This may be done by close and careful observance of the terms of the contract you have with each exchange who is a member of our organization. We are confident that you will; we are confident that you have no desire to violate, in the slightest degree, any agreement to which you signified by the attaching of your signature originally your intention of observing all of the contractual provisions contained therein."

Levey Ready for Ad Meeting

Advertisers Association Plan Grand Film Displays at New Orleans Meeting

SCREEN advertising is making ready to occupy the center of the stage at the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in New Orleans, September 21 to 25. Screen folk are determined that this year that infant of the profession—motion picture advertising — which grew into a giant in twenty-four months, shall be accorded a man-sized chair in the advertising family circle.

The principal theme of the convention this fall will be how advertising men can help bring capital and labor closer together and how to help increase production and labor to bring down the cost of living and at the same time add to workers' earnings. It naturally follows that the trump program card of the screen men will be a motion picture based on the same topic.

President Levey is determined this picture shall earn the applause of perhaps the most exactingly critical audience ever to be assembled—the 17,000 advertising experts who will gather at New Orleans. The best talent in the screen men's organization is being put into the film. The brilliant directors, scenario writers and artists have pooled their skill to make the picture the classic production of 1919.

Officers of the Screen Advertisers' Association are now holding bi-weekly conference with President Levey on the subject of a program of films which will depict the development of motion picture advertising. It is planned to exhibit films of this program from 11 a. m. to 10 p. m. daily in the red room of the Grunewald Hotel.

President Levey is one of the pioneers in the screen advertising profession. Two years ago he and one desk comprised Universal's Industrial and Educational Departments, which was the first organization to offer advertisers a comprehensive plan of exploiting their products on a national scale on the motion picture screen.

Today leading advertisers of the world are recognizing the motion picture medium as one of the indispensable branches of advertising, to be used.

Long Performance, Score of Bathing Girls

The Mack Sennett Bathing Girls who are appearing in person at the Broadway Theatre in conjunction with the photoplay, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," will play their 175th performance Tuesday, Aug. 12.

Film Pirating Lessens in Cincinnati

Elimination of "bicycling" of films was reported at a recent meeting of the Cincinnati Film Managers' Exchange at the Chamber of Commerce. "Pirating has been checked to such a degree that no marked delay in the return of films had been reported in any of the exchanges represented."

Film Clearing House Man Promoted

C. P. Saunders, former manager of the Film Clearing House, Buffalo, has been appointed manager of the New York office and has entered upon his new duties. He is succeeded in Buffalo by William Finckeisen.

Keeping Both Your Eyes Open?

Large newspaper advertisements, each wondering on the sensational, appeared in the daily newspapers during the week prior to the opening. In other parts of the newspapers were stories and photographs of Aurora Mardiganian, who was scheduled for a week's visit in the city.

But the big publicity-creation-scheme was yet to come. This was brought to light when Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Gates—the former the author of "Auction of Souls," and the latter the guardian of Aurora Mardiganian—arrived in Indianapolis, accompanied by the most fascinating Aurora, to find several score of newshounds begging for the privilege of carrying their grips, hat boxes, portfolios and Aurora's bathrobe, which she had forgotten to enclose in her grip.

Then came the publicity. Perhaps Indianapolis hadn't known much about H. L. Gates up until the time "Auction of Souls" was being presented in that city. Perhaps the population of the Hoosier city had been too busy thinking about loan drives, the early prospect of chiggars and the Federal railway threatened strike, to give much attention to Mr. Gates. But thanks to Robert Lieber and S. Barret McCormick, the great old town soon learned that——

1. H. L. Gates was a native son AND DESERVING OF PUBLICITY.
2. That Mrs. H. L. Gates was the wife of the native son and DESERVING OF PUBLICITY.
3. That Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Gates had adopted Aurora Mardiganian, the Armenian girl who had seen considerable portion of Hell in her young life, and this was DESERVING OF PUBLICITY.
4. H. L. Gates had written a number of interesting stories and was rapidly climbing the heights of jam-up authorship, and whereas he was a local boy, this was DESERVING OF PUBLICITY.

Indianapolis learned many other things also that could be described by the three-word phrase of DESERVING OF PUBLICITY.

It is enough to say that the combined newspapers of Indianapolis soon learned to spell Aurora's last name in the twinkling of an eye. (And this is some job.)

For instance, the papers printed long interviews with Miss Mardiganian. One young and ambitious cub reporter on an Indianapolis newspaper was especially energetic in turning oue a couple of reams of copy. He asked Miss Mardiganian her opinion on everything from the advisability of the League of Nations to the propriety of putting a pinch of nutmeg in a Scotch highball and serving this as sauce for flapjacks. And, as either Robert Lieber or S. Barret McCormick was present during these interviews, the Armenian miss made wonderful answers. She was rapidly developing a sense of publicity too.

Then, again, Mr. and Mrs. Gates and Aurora were entertained at a meeting of the Rotary Club, whereat the Armenian girl's eyes made a hit with the younger element, her praise for the chef's cooking made a hit with the hotel, and her praise for the grand old Hoosier state, which she had dug out of an Encyclopedia Britannica, made a hit with the membership as a whole.

'Twas a great old time for the party of three. Other dinners and social affairs followed on the heels of one another.

All of these affairs made good news stories, and Mr. McCormick saw that the best reporters on all newspapers knew about it. He continued to advertise as though there had been no publicity at all. This secured the good will of advertising departments and the weight of these persons' influence on the editorial staffs showed to wonderful advantage.

Also, there were morning matinees at which some of the largest crowds were present. Miss Mardiganian and Mrs. Gates gave illuminating descriptions of the ravage of Armenia. These stories proved to be excellent material for back-fence talks.

Furthermore, to the public it looked as though all this publicity had fallen out of a clear sky.

But the live-wire exhibitors of Indiana knew the reason for it and therefrom got a good hunch.

It was simply the creation of news matter and publicity by an attraction and incidents surrounding its presentation.

Appointed Manager of Okla-Art Attractions

Watt W. Smith, formerly assistant manager "Billy Smith" Empress theatre of Tulsa, Okla., has been appointed general manager of the Okla-Ark Attractions, Inc., with general offices at 310 Bliss Building, Tulsa, Okla.

Some of the most amusing scenes in "The Night of the Dub," the first two reel comedy starring Ernest Truex, under the management of Amedee J. Van Buren, were staged at the Century Theater in New York City.

Franklin's Program Also Distinctive

MANAGER FRANKLIN of Shea's Hippodrome, famous for his distinctive advertising of the hand drawn variety, also carries his artistic ideas into the printing of his program.

The accompanying cut is from the front page of the program used at the Hippodrome for the week of August 4th.

You will note that the quality of the page, which has all the beauty and clearness of a photograph. We are of the opinion that many a patron clipped the cut of Miss Young to be added to the ever increasing folio of movie actresses that many people are collecting.

Franklin's idea is that if you do anything at all do it well. This page from his program proves he practises what he preaches.

"Destiny" Lobby Display and "Teaser" Stunt, Wins Attention in Cincinnati

A LOBBY display which not only beautified the entrance to the auditorium but attracted a lot of attention that resulted in added dollars and cents in extra attendance, was provided by the Grand Opera House, Cincinnati, Ohio, on the first run of "Destiny" in that city.

The "Hindu" tent which is shown in the accompanying cut was easily constructed of materials that are within the reach of every exhibitor. Then the pedestal, with its books and "mystic lamp" were arranged. From within this dimly lighted tent a young lady appropriately dressed to suggest the fortune teller and with a mask which concealed a portion of her face, distributed cards to the passers-by who might stop for a moment to view the display.

On the cards was printed,

"ARE YOU A FATALIST?"

Do you believe that you can keep yourself from falling in love? Do you actually believe it?

Do you think you can alter what FATE has mapped out for you?

Come in and see that wonderful picture

"DESTINY"

How fate gripped a little group in a hand of steel.

See if they finally controlled their own destinies or lost.

This selling talk reaching the people in card form aroused curiosity that resulted in direct returns of increased business. Many people who did not enter at the time they received the cards came back later to see the Phillips picture.

There is a strong vein of superstition in most people and a belief that fate or destiny controls all lives is very common. It will therefore be seen that the questions on the card touched upon a subject in which people had a personal interest.

Your Idea and Ours

THIS two-column seven-inch display of the Strand's Hartford, Conn., serves to announce Miss Young's latest vehicle rather well in spite of the fact that there is too much matter used for the space purchased, and that the type selected is rather commonplace.

In the first place, the star's name is properly displayed above the title, and the title itself has been explained by the addition of the name of the novel from which the scenario was constructed. In the selling talk, an incident in the production has been used as the basic thought, but as this is about the only piece of dramatic action the picture contains, we do not think the Strand is wrong in using it.

The use of the names of the principals of the cast is also good, as many of them are very well known. Pictures are like dramatic stock. People get to know the players, and often supporting actors are very popular and are big drawing cards. For instance, we would say that with an average audience Lillian Walker would have as many friends as Miss Young, and therefore it is wise to let your patrons know that she is playing a part in the picture.

In times of peace prepare for war—Moral, look into the future as far as September 1.

THIS six-column ten-inch display of the California, Los Angeles is labeled a new style adopted by this theatre and as such we will withhold any great criticism until we see more than one sample.

So far as this display goes we don't think it is a world beater. The cuts failed to print well enough so the "pictures" attract any great attention and as cuts form the principal part of the space purchased it therefore isn't especially attractive except for its size, which is much larger than that usually purchased for Los Angeles theatres.

The California is paying, we presume, good money for a lot of space wasted by the heavy rule at the sides of the ad without adding anything to its appearance.

We are presuming that the billing shown is in an evening paper, otherwise we should have waited until the following morning to advertise this program.

Do you manage your theatre or does your theatre manage you?

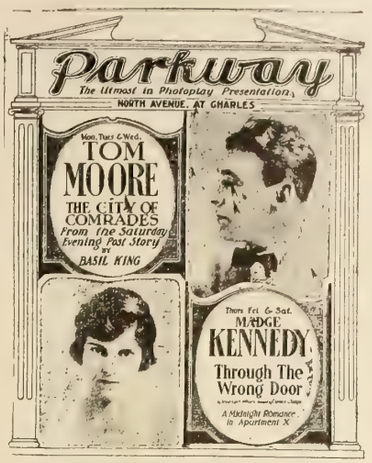
THIS display of the Strand, Birmingham, Ala., is largely producers cut but it looked rather well in its three column ten inch space and we are choosing it as an example of what can be done with very little work when first class exchange aids are available.

If you are going to play "Girls" see that you get this cut for your newspaper work. It is the best one produced for the feature.

Exhibit a pleasant face to your patrons as well as good pictures.

THIS display of the Parkway, Baltimore, where they all insist on advertising two bills in the same space each equally displayed, was the best contained in an issue of the "Sun" of last Sunday, and was three columns wide by eight inches deep.

We are not sure whether or not the Parkway uses this border and top cut regularly but if it does it has a very nice idea worked out except that it takes up a lot of space which could be utilized to better advantage.



Here we have advertised two mighty good pictures with not much said about either. It would seem to us that it would have been better to have taken the first three days bill and used the whole space purchased in tellings Baltimore what "The City of Comrades" is about. Especially does this picture present exploitation angles, which here have not been touched upon, nor is a word said about the rest of the bill, the musical program and the other things which go to make up the modern show.

As far as it goes this ad is all right, very tasty and certainly suggests that the Parkway is a high class house but we do not believe in staking your all on star and title alone nor in advertising two bills at once in the same display.

Don't be afraid of overworking your brain by putting too much time into thoughts of how to better your programs.

THIS eight-inch four-column display of the Rialto, San Francisco, comes in for complete approval. Rarely do we see a cut used which can be coupled with a title like this one of the four-alarm clocks does with "Better Times." It is certainly eye catching, and as that is what a cut should be used for principally, we say that this is good.

The billing of the title as it has been here also pleases. If it were not for the fact that putting the title ahead of anything else in an ad usually makes it look topheavy and spoils every chance for an artistic appearance we would always recommend it so in view of the fact that this ad does not have this fault, we have no criticism to make.

The selling talk is good, and the whole display has a very proper balance.

If this production had a star whose name would mean anything we would say that should have been brought out. However, this is evidently a picture played because the "Turn in the Road" has proven a big success, so we will not suggest further. It is a mighty good ad, worth clipping as an example of first-class work.

Let well enough alone, is an axiom that has no place in the show business.

SELECTED from a number of ads used by the Liberty, this strikes us as some very excellent work in billing a double feature without having the ad look as if it ought to be split in two. This display was three columns wide and 16 inches deep, and was printed in two colors, red and black.

Miss Phillips name has been given preference over Miss Fischer's which is correct. The title line "Destiny" is also properly display above the other feature.

We like the selling talk on both pictures, as it suggests what is to be seen without giving away the plot of the story.

Another thing which we commend is calling attention to the fact that Miss Phillips was the star of the "Heart of Humanity." This picture made a great hit and no doubt made many friends for its star who have not as yet identified her name.

The cuts used have been artisically arranged and the whole display looks good to us. It is hard to advertise a double bill but the Liberty has accomplished it without falling down.

What Live Wires Are Doing

IRENE CASTLE is fortunate, not that she has married a rich husband who is also a real man, but that the producers' cuts provided for her first starring engagement with Famous Players-Lasky are all mighty good, and in consequence more good displays are being made on "The Firing Line" than any picture now demanding exhibitor's attention.

This one-column ten-inch display of the Piccadilly, Rochester, N. Y., is pretty nearly all producers' cut, but it stands out as a mighty attractive display. Care should have been exercised to have had the sentences added by the Piccadilly set in time similar to that used in the cut. This would have further beautified the display. However, it is very good, even as it is and should producers ever be able to keep their exhibitor's aids to this standard, much of the work of this department would become null and void. It does seem as if after seeing what can be done, that producers would attempt to use more artistic taste in the designs accepted from their artists. But apparently trying to standarize pictures there seems to be no possibility of standardizing cuts. Some are good, and more of them are bad.

Never worry so much about the other fellow's show as you do about your own.

HERE is another lurid display on "Auction of Souls," for the space seven columns wide by half a page deep, that we should say for other picture was much too crowded, but inasmuch as this gets the attention by its size and from the fact that the title is big enough to reach the eye instantly, it passes as good.

You will note that the head cut of Miss Mardiganian in the center prints up well and with stars name below, followed by the title you have the interest from the start.

This is not a picture on which to be conservative. Make your talk strong as the Colonial has done.

The selling talk under the title line we reproduce for your benefit as we feel sure that this ad is going to be used as copy.

"It presents the true story of the sole survivor of half a million Armenian girls, Aurora Mardiganian (herself) the beautiful Armenian girl who escaped to America after two years of unspeakable adventure and frightfulness in the hand of the Turkish raiders, slave markets and Turkish harems. Every amazing practise of barbarism shown in this picture was actually the fate of Miss Mardiganian. It is picturized from her own story with herself as herself."

You will also note that the Colonial, has added a local touch to this ad by stating that the story from which it was taken, ran as a serial in the Toledo Blade. This is commendable. Never miss a chance to give a picture local color if it is possible. This always ads interest.

HERE is the advertisement of a new theatre, the Palace located at San Antonio, Texas. The display copied was a quarter page and for its kind with most of the burden of the selling talk devoted to the opening announcement we should say that this passes.

TO MOVING PICTURE PATRONS:
The Palace Theater, Houston Street's newest picture house, will open next Thursday, July 30. This is to be an exclusive picture theater—no vaudeville or musical comedy of any kind will ever be a part of the program. The pictures will be carefully selected, and will be second to none, being shown in the city. Great care will be exercised in selecting pictures that are clean, as it is the intention of the management to make this strictly a "Family Theater," with popular prices that are within reach of all.

The ad in a way contradicts itself in that a policy of "clean pictures" is announced which is generally inferred to mean, that sex stories are to be barred and then it goes on to announce the opening bill as "The Eternal Magdaline," which is frankly a story of this sort no matter how delicately the subject may be handled.

Doing what the Palace has done leads us to admonish you in always being consistent in your advertising. Don't say things you don't mean.

We aren't criticising the Palace for running "The Eternal Magdaline." Rather we criticise trying to carry the idea that you are going to run a "Sunday school theatre" and then letting people know right off the bat that you are doing what every one else is doing, booking pictures which you think will get some money. We pass this black rule as not offensive for an all type ad, which has been set as heavy and black as this one has.

When you are tempted to book a picture which you think will get business because it is risque, go home and talk it over with your wife.

THIS little two-column display of the Forrest theatre, Philadelphia, was three inches deep, and serving as it does to announce an indefinite engagement, without recourse to the use of cuts, we would say that it is ideal for its size.

It is more or less orthodox with nothing unusual about it, but what was to be said has been stated clearly and in excellent language.

The title line has been well displayed, and the fact that Mabel Normand's name is not mentioned does no particular harm since it is apparent that in the six weeks the film has been playing at the Forrest, every one will have come to know what "Mickey" is about, and who is starred.

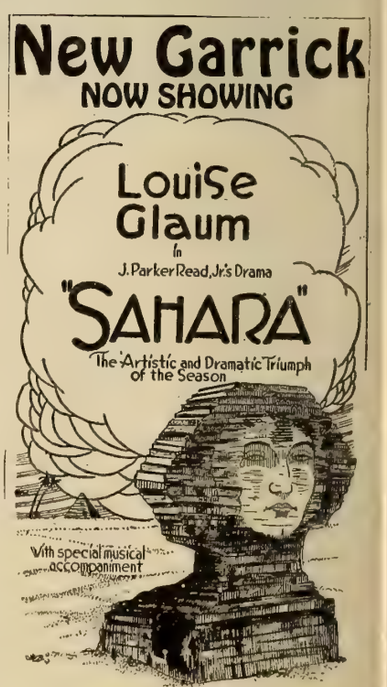
The exhibitor who first asks the price before he knows what the picture is, usually doesn't get the best stuff.

THIS display of the New Garrick's, St. Paul, is novel in the type of cut used only. The rest of the ad has been built by simply adding a little type matter. The display was two columns by ten inches. However, since it is the result from an advertising standpoint which we are to consider, we should say that the New Garrick is successful. The "sphinx" idea attracts attention and suggests the character of the offering and the lines announcing the star and title are well balanced. A little more pains might have been taken with the top and bottom portions of the ad to have the style of lettering conform more to that of the cut and some selling talk, most important nowadays, should have been added, but this passes as better than average display.



How do you judge a picture? By the amount of money you made on it or the number of people who were pleased. Sometimes these two don't go together.

From 100% to Zero

THIS two column six inch display of the Empress, taken from the Beserst News, says about as little about two bills as is possible and still doesn't look so bad if you believe in this kind of advertising, meaning using two features at once and staking your appeal on the title and star.

It would seem to us in advertising this Gish feature that a great deal depends on letting your audiences know that this is a burlesque of a serious plot otherwise we are afraid that a lot of people will not see the point.

The Empress has done this to a degree but the idea should be carried still farther. In stating that the second feature is not one for children's view, it may be that the Empress hadn't seen the production and expected it to be as risque as the novel or else they figure that telling people in this way that something off color is to be shown is sure to attract a certain class. However the feature has been very properly expurgated and such warning as is given in the ad is unnecessary

A 300-store show can't buck a 1,500-seat new motion picture palace, so if you own one of the former don't try putting the new place out of business.

HERE is a three column five and a half, which advertises a western picture very well. The Royal is located at Des Moines, Iowa, not so many miles from where people still ride horses for more than pastime.

The cut used in this serves to lend an atmosphere which is carried out in Carey's productions and still leaves plenty of white space in the center of the display.

Carey's name has been given the best of the billing but we believe this is correct as the story of a western picture usually is not of exceptional merit and Carey's riding and the action of his pictures, are the thing in which his followers are interested.

The selling talk used in the cut is good and practically tells the plot of the picture, while the supplementary reading matter under the figures of the horsemen also adds a good touch.

These we reproduce for you:

If you can't get out on the range and ride a horse, go see Harry Carey in his new big whirlwind Western drama—the story of a man who promised his mother he'd never shoot, but had to take his promise back. It's a thriller.

This may not be very literary but it is the kind of stuff which will appeal to Carey followers and is to be recommended. In fact the whole ad strikes us as being first class.

Never turn down an idea in the show business as "harebrained" without first giving it some thought.

THE West has the East beaten forty ways when it coms to good newspaper advertising on pictures, and Seattle leads the West in this respect. From no other city do such big displays not alone by one theatre, but apparently all of the larger houses emanate. This display of the Strand, Seattle, was four columns wide and a full-page in depth. While it is true that it is not noteworthy except for its size it does succeed in letting Seattle know that Dorothy Dalton is in town, and we see no excuse for its not pulling.

Ordinarily in an ad as large as this we should recommend a good bit of selling talk, but inasmuch as this is a feature where telling too much of the story would be detrimental, its absence in this will not be considered an advertising sin. The selling talk used does suggest the sort of picture, "Other Men's Wives," is and as curiosity is one of the things which brings them in to see a picture of the character the title of this suggests, it is doubtless good judgment not to tell too much. As for the cut used, this could have been half as large and still been just as attractive. The "bull's eye" backing looks rather queer.

If your ushers insist on telling stories in the lobby when they could be working, get some new ushers.

FROM out of the West, Sioux Falls, comes the first bad display we have seen on "The Firing Line" and this quarter page is bad for the same reason that the others have been good—the producers cut.

Not only is the cut a meaningless nothing so far as suggesting any thought as to what the picture is about but it fails to print well enough so that the characters represented can be distinguished.

This is also an example of trying to work a cut where a circle is used to outline the scene. Except for a head or something small they are not good. The Jewel would have done better to have left the cut out altogether. The selling talk used is excellent for a story of this kind and a star who has the reputation of Miss Castle. The Jewel has played up the Chambers book, and the stars reputation for being well dressed and hinted at the sort of production the Chambers novel has made. That is enough for the space provided.

You may not feel like giving the clergy the "preacher's discount," but you ought to feel pleased if they patronize your theatre.

THIS quarter page of the Rialto, Denver, advertises "Nugget Nell" in the right vein. As the picture makes fun of melodrama, the advertising should do the same thing, and the Rialto has done this very trick.

However, as this display is nearly all cut including the selling talk the Rialto ad man is entitled only to the credit of having good judgment, but inasmuch as results are what count, this goes down not only as an example of good exhibitor's aid but a mighty fine display for the picture.

This display was from the Denver Post.

Science says that we begin dying when we stop growing, which may be applied to a theatre. It either is improving or going backward.

THIS display on Chaplin, double column by eight is a bit different from anything that has come to our attention,—that is in the matter of selling talk.

The Strand, has made mention of what Chaplin does in "Sunnyside," without saying so.

This selling talk probably does not add anything to the pulling power of the display as we believe that Chaplin pulls on his name alone rather than on a title unless the picture be a reissue but at the same time this IS selling talk and that is what we are always preaching to you about using.

It would seem to us that a little more space should have been alloted to "The White Heather" as this is a picture which deserves exploitation.

Scoring Hits and Errors

However the Strand has rightly figured that "Sunnyside" is the better drawing card and that the dramatic feature will be lost sight of in the Chaplin announcement.

THIS display of the Amuse, Cheyenne, Wyom. (which we have turned sidewise to fit the column), isn't at all modest in what it says concerning the "Outcast of Poker Flats," but as this story is an excellent one, by a most famous author, the extravagance of the claims for "John Oakhurst" may be pressed with charity.

This ad was of rather peculiar shape, being five columns wide and only three inches deep, and for this reason most of the reading matter has necessarily been strung out rather too much, and the stars name billed big enough for a circus catch line. If Carey is popular enough so he dominates even so famous a story as this one, why all very well, but this we are inclined to doubt, so we would say that if the title line and the star line were switched for size it would be better advertising.

In fact, the advertising starts off to bill a character in a book, but gives the best of the argument mechanically to the star with the title coming for second place. Now this is contrary to the theory of advertising so we will have to say this ad is not framed as it should be to get the best results both in appearance and from a pulling standpoint.

THIS three column, nine inch ad of the Modern, Providence, R. I., is rather attractive for all it speaks rather boldly and looms up pretty black. This sort of a picture or rather the sort of a picture people think this is, calls for this kind of advertising and the cut certainly carries the same idea.

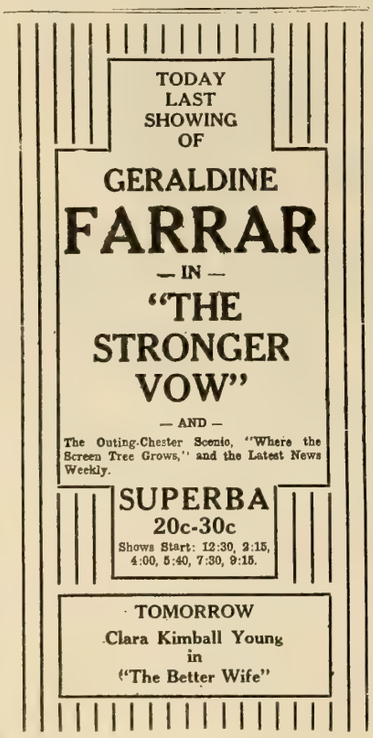
In the selling talk a question is asked for which we imagine most people will have hard work to find an answer from seeing the picture but as it is of the "teaser" variety which a production of this sort fits, so we have no fault to find with it. It would seem that the Providence theatres have reformed in their idea of trying to give two features on one bill equal attention and in this particular instance the Modern has given about the right space to the Lila Lee feature. Certainly the Calvert picture is the business getter and so should be billed ahead of the second offering.

HERE is a two column eight inch display of the Superba, San Diego, Cal., which may be termed a novelty. We can't say that we think it is anything more than that because the appeal is entirely based on the title of the picture and the star's name.



However using this light rule for a border prohibited adding any selling talk and this did show up well on the page of the San Diego Sun from which it was taken. It is probable too that this last days showing had been proceeded by other ads which did tell something of what the "The Stronger Vow" is about.

You must expect a reasonable number of mistakes from your employees —they are human the same as you are.

THIS three column, fourteen inch display of the America, Denver, strikes us as attractive especially as to the use of cuts and border.

There is a bit too much reading matter all set in eight point but as it is good selling talk and the mechanical design is such that it gets instant attention, no doubt this matter will be generally read. If that is the case then all has been accomplished that could be.

Personally if we were to change this display, we would have left off the last sentence beginning with "His Bridal Night" and made the type used in the box ten point. Here is a name cut which is worth borrowing.

BIG SPECTACULAR PRODUCTION
"THE MAN WHO TURNED WHITE"
H. B. Warner
Starring H. B. WARNER—BARBARA CASTLETON
Direct from The Broadway Theater, New York

HERE is an unusual way of attracting attention to an ad, using a big "head" cut of the star. This display taken from the Schenectady Times, was three columns wide and thirteen inches deep, the cut of Mr. Warner being six by eight inches. You can imagine how this looked out from the page from which it was taken.

However the Palace did not follow up its advantage by properly displaying the title of the production or the name of the star. In fact the reading matter has been very carelessly handled. There are too many "caps" all of a commonplace type without display on any one thing.

We would have placed Mr. Warner's name over the cut in a type of some dignity and then billed the title under the cut in a tall thin letter which would brought "The Man Who Turned White" into more prominence than it gets here and still not taken any more space in width. The "Direct from the Broadway theatre, New York"; could have been boxed in smaller type somewhere and accomplished just as much as it does now.

When women come into your theatre and ask "fool questions" don't be so foolish as to answer discourteously.

HERE is another typical display used by Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. Note its symmetrical beauty brought out by plenty of white space. You may not with the facilities you have in your city be able to duplicate this display, but at least you may admire it. By adopting a style like this Manager Franklin is able to secure all the publicity of big space denied him by prohibitive newspaper rates. This was three columns wide and three inches deep.

Charity begins at home, but the kind of charity which encourages too long a free list should stay there.

The standing line which fought to see "Mickey" when it played Flint, Mich.

The Result of Extra Exploitation Is Bigger Business, Says Momand

WE have just been able to secure a photograph of one of the waiting lines with which C. Edgar Momand, manager of the Garden Theatre, Flint, Mich., was blessed during his run on "Mickey."

Crowds like the one shown were the rule rather than the exception at the Garden during nearly every performance of the several days' showing and prove that when you go after the business in a showmanlike way, unless you are running a house out in the desert, you can "get 'em out" to see a good picture.

When Mr. Momand booked the Normand production he realized that it presented opportunities for extra exploitation, and he planned his advertising campaign carefully and in detail.

Letting every one in Flint know that he was going to run the feature wasn't enough for the Garden's enterprising manager. He told his story in the newspapers, on the bill boards, in the store windows and with heralds. The song "Mickey" was utilized to good advantage. For several days before the first day of the engagement, Flint heard or saw something about the picture at every turn. By the time he was ready to begin his first performance people were standing in line, clamoring to get in to see the picture they had heard so much about. Some couldn't make it the first day and had to go home and that was the best advertising "Mickey" could have. The picture pleased and that helped, too. Big business on this feature has been the rule rather than the exception, but for the population and opportunity no one has done better with it than the Garden.

There are lots of "Mickey's" going unheralded and playing to just ordinary business because the managers who book them don't use their best efforts to "put them over." There is much food for thought in the unusual success of this picture. Was it because of its extraordinary worth as a feature offering or because it got the right publicity start and just naturally kept on getting the advertising as it played city after city? The trouble with many a manager is that he has to have the trail of showmanship blazed for him.

"What Every Woman Wants," Lends Itself to Co-operative Advertising

THE fact that successful exploitation may be carried out just as well in a small town as in the cities is once more proven. In a town of about a thousand inhabitants, Vicksburg, Mich., Manager Koons of the Wonderland Theatre secured the full and hearty cooperation of all the merchants in the exploitation of "What Every Woman Wants."

"What Every Woman Wants" was made the slogan of all the business men on the day the picture was shown. Every merchant in town arranged his windows and held special sales on articles which were believed to answer that question. If certain things did not appeal to the feminine heart, she was advised to go next door for they might have "what every woman wants." And lastly, the ladies were all advised to go to the Wonderland Theatre for it positively had "What Every Woman Wants."

The local newspaper, The Semi-Weekly Commercial played up the story on its front page, giving the theatre and the much some very good publicity. Advertisements covering two full pages, captioned "What Every Woman Wants," contained the ads of twenty-two merchants, suggesting that they had the answers to "what every woman wants."

The Wonderland Theatre reported record-breaking business due in large measure to efficient publicity and cooperative advertising campaign.

Building a Lobby Display with Exchange Materials

THE fact that an attractive lobby display may be made from the usual stock advertising material is well demonstrated by the attractive appearance of the lobby of the Rivoli theatre, Denver, Colorado, when it showed H. B. Warner's picture, "The Man Who Turned White."

A twenty-four sheet mounted on canvas was suspended in the dome of the lobby above the ticket booth. Cut-outs from three sheets gave a silhouette effect in the frames on each side of the lobby. About the interior cut-outs mounted on black backgrounds were placed in frames. Three large cut-outs from twenty-four sheets were mounted on cardboard and placed in front. The general effect was conservative, attractive and very pleasing to the eye. There was a uniformity and dignity about the display that was especially commented on.

Signs painted in black and white served to exploit H. B. Warner to the fullest extent. They were four in number, placed above the silhouettes and uniform in size and lettering.

Big Lobby Display Used by Doric

A BIG display that brought results was used by the Doric Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., when it showed "Destiny," in which Dorothy Phillips was starred. Though it was bigness that attracted the attention of the public it was the simplicity of the effect that brought action on the part of the theatre-goers to enter and see the performance. A six-sheet of Miss Phillips, which is a piece of art in execution, hung high above the side-walk and drew the attention of the busy up-town folks for blocks on each side of the theatre.

This picture was made the prominent part of the display in one-sheets in front of the theatre. A special display was made to fit around an electric light pole in front of the theatre. The name of the play was put on a level with the eye of the passerby so that no one on that block could miss the name. The effectiveness of the display was helped by advertising, in which plenty of white space was used to good advantage. The star's name and the name of the play with only a little catch-line was used in the newspapers to fill a two-column four-inch advertisement.

Artistic Stage Setting at Grauman's

Baled Hay—the Abandoned Log-Cabin, and Even Two Stray Cats Provide Rural Atmosphere

THE stage setting used to provide atmosphere for the presentation of a feature photoplay and to give audiences something a little unusual to talk about continues to thrive especially in the West, where the art of presenting pictures seems to be some months if not years, ahead of the East.

The accompanying cut is from a photograph showing the stage setting recently used by Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, on the presentation of Charles Ray's "Hay Foot, Straw Foot."

You will note that it has been scenically constructed in a high-class manner, in fact good enough for "The Old Homestead" or any of the other old rural plays that have lived these many years on the legitimate boards. The setting occupied the full proscenium opening at Grauman's, and every little detail was carried out to make the scene realistic. The baled hay used is real full-sized hay. The branches of trees projecting up from behind a fence which the illustrious "Tom Sawyer" might have been asked to whitewash, are real, not just painted imitations. Then there are the bags of grain, the two-wheeled truck used for carting the bales of hay and the bags of grain, not to mention the shovel, fork and lantern which have been added to give the set realism. Even the old log chain carelessly flung over the fence has been remembered. If you were born and bred in the country, as a lot of us were, or spend your vacations far from the hustle and bustle of the big cities, you can imagine what a hit this bit of bygone days for many Los Angeles people, made with the patrons of Grauman's.

Mr. Grauman did not stop with just the bare stage setting. He got all the realism he could out of his efforts. Two stray cats were induced to busy themselves in and about the baled hay hunting for mice, and perhaps finding some, while special lighting effects were used, the colorings giving a hint of a summer twilight. The orchestra played appropriate music as the curtain parted on the fadeout of the preceding number, that had the effect of preparing the audience for what was coming. After people had been given time to fully appreciate the setting itself, and perhaps catch a glimpse of the dinner searching cats which of course could not be depended upon to give the "act" every performance. two children, barefooted and dressed as we are wont to picture the happy carefree youngsters of the country, gave the "Hay Foot—Straw Foot" dance to orchestral accompaniment.

Not only did this stage setting give the Ray picture a big dramatic send off, but much extra business was directly attributed to it, caused by the talk the setting made and from the interest there always is in a good rural picture presented by a competent actor.

The stage setting which was prepared at Grauman's Los Angeles for Charles Ray in "Hay Foot—Straw Foot"

Personal Appearance of Comedy Star Proves Hit at Seattle

THE Clemmer theatre of Seattle, Wash., has been turning them away showing Christie comedies, coupled with the personal appearance at every show of Fay Tincher, the Christie star. Miss Tincher gave a little talk which was received with great applause by every audience.

The Strand, Tacoma, secured Miss Tincher's services for personal appearances with gratifying results.

The Clemmer theatre engagement was for a full week. While in Tacoma Miss Tincher was given a dinner by the Tacoma Mayor and other notables.

Vance of Minneapolis, Gets Dan Cupid's Aid on "Choosing a Wife"

DAN CUPID, in the guise of a press agent, as the latest addition to the forces of good-showmanship, has been pronounced a "damn good scout," by William Vance, manager of the New Lyric Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dan didn't get himself in solid with Vance overnight. It was as a result of an exploitation campaign in which Vance startled Minneapolis by offering $50 to the man who would offer wedlock to some fair maid on the New Lyric stage during the presentation of "Choosing A Wife."

That wasn't the only chance Vance offered the lovelorn of his city to make money. He went so far as to offer $50 to the couple who would get married on the stage.

And then it happened!

A man agreed to make the proposal from the stage and to be married immediately afterwards. Vance was delighted. Talk about local color for a picture. He knew he had it!

But did he break loose in advertising the fact that a couple would get married? No chance! He merely held his original announcement regarding the offer of $50 and then let public conversation discuss the marriage which was to take place on the New Lyric's stage. For several days large crowds attended the theatre patiently waiting for the ceremony to take place. A whisper circulated that the would-be groom had got a case of cold feet.

But that wasn't what had happened. The trouble really nestled in the fact that a brother-and-sister act playing at one of the Minneapolis "vodvil" houses had tried to slip something over on Vance who, surprised at the bold attempt to take his $100.00 absolutely refused to be the victim of a bunco game and he refused to let the public witness such a proceeding.

After the first three days of the showing of "Choosing A Wife," Vance was content with the record-breaking crowds he had experienced. He attributed it to his unusual offer of $50 for a marriage or a proposal on the New Lyric stage. He was very willing to forget the matter.

But the public was not, for the rest of the week, throngs crowded the New Lyric intent upon seeing a couple united in marriage. Vance found out what was drawing the crowds so he continued his offer. He wisely made no announcement as to when a marriage might take place. He did not even announce that none had, so far, taken place. He made his offer and any one in Minneapolis who was game enough was given a chance in a life time to make $100 of easy but honest money.

News spread that Vance had prevented the public from being made the butt of a big joke by refusing to allow a team of vaudeville actors to pull off a mock marriage. This inspired widespread comment and considerable favorable discussion of the New Lyric's policy.

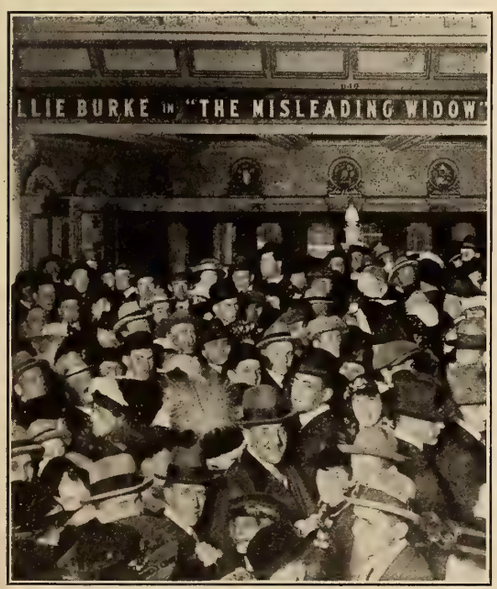
But despite the good showmanship that prompted Vance to offer two $50 sums for a proposal and marriage, the best part of his ability to put attractions over, is not seen without a little deeper thought. He did not tell when there would be a marriage. He played for big crowds at every performance. The theatregoers of Minneapolis did not know when they would chance to see some one arise from the New Lyric's audience and make a proposal on the stage. It might happen any time.

Prologue stage setting for "The Misleading Widow," an adaptation of the stage play, "Billeted"

Los Angeles Fires the First Gun of the Selective Booking Plan

THE first gun of the Selective booking plan of release so far as we can learn comes from the home of most of the producers, Los Angeles. During the week of July 27, the Kinema theatre, managed by Emil Kehrlein, and one of the big downtown houses of the Western film center, presented a prerelease in "The Misleading Widow" in which Billie Burke is starred, for a seven days' engagement to capacity business, some of which Mr. Kehrlein directly attributes to the manner in which he presented an elaborate stage setting in conjunction with the showing of the feature.

It is just another instance of what good showmanship will do. By taking advantage of an opportunity Mr. Kehrlein was able to cash in for extra money, give his patrons a pleasant surprise and add prestige to the house, which will be felt for months to come. It cost a little something and took some time and thought, but the result was worth all the effort and the expense.



A "sea of faces" who waited to see "The Misleading Widow"

The Kinema played this feature while it was hot in Los Angeles, one of the warmest spells the Western metropolis has seen in some time, but that did not keep the people away, nor dampen their enthusiasm once they were inside the theatre.

How Mr. Kehrlein staged the picture is interesting. Good showmanship prevailed throughout the presentation and the whole program was pivoted about the feature. Aside from the fact that capital was made of the fact that the picture had been secured for prerelease at the Kinema through special dispensation and considerable publicity accrued from this announcement, a special prologue was staged for the picture, entitled "The Overseas Revue."

This was particularly appropriate inasmuch as it was a "peace time" prologue revealing several soldiers in a rest billet. "The Misleading Widow" itself is adapted from the play "Billetted" and deals with the situations that arise when a charming widow takes two wounded officers into her home to care for them, so the fitting nature of the prologue can easily be discerned.

When the curtains were parted on the scene four soldiers were revealed at play. Soon after they broke into "At the End of the Rainbow There's Happiness." While this was being rendered a Salvation Army lassie passed out doughnuts. Next one of the soldiers rendered a solo and then the girl sang "Bubbles," while the scene was brought to its conclusion by the five singers in chorus.

This served as a particularly fine prologue to "The Misleading Widow" which followed immediately afterward. The picture, it is announced, appealed strongly to all the audiences that crowded the Kinema throughout the week.

Amateur Night for Bathing Beauties

JUST when jaded Broadway was about to turn with a yawn from the amusement columns to some other field than theatrical for a novelty to awaken summer lethargy, Mack Sennett stepped forth with the palpitating announcement that he will present at Moss's Broadway, in connection with his aggregation of Bathing Beauties, a bathing girl amateur night, taking place on Monday night.

The Sennett beach beauties have been appearing in person at the Broadway theatre the last several weeks, and contributing materially to their vogue in the movies. The management has been inundated with a flood of applications from young ladies, and not a few old ones, who would be bathing beauties on the cherished screen. Hence, Mr. Sennett's inspiration that gave production to his amateur night.

The great event took place Monday night, the aspirants to the new profession being presented to public view in costumes provided by the Broadway management which fully disclosed their qualifications for beach positions.

It is unnecessary to add that some passed muster, that others were not so beautiful either "above or below," and that it was quite an excitable time for both the aspirants and to the audience.

The Play vs. the Star

WHEN you are thinking of booking a picture do you first look to see who is starred and shake your head with apprehension if some well known player doesn't head the cast?

A lot of good showmen do and there has been a time when this apprehension was justified, but that time is past.

Today a good story, especially one filmed from a well known novel, will get business even if there are no names to go up in your billing, and managers are beginning to realize this fact.

The accompanying photograph is from the front of the Strand theatre, New York, where a picture without a featured player, "The Westerners," did a great business for the week beginning August 3d. The Strand advertised the title and the name of the author, Stewart Edward White, and felt no loss from the absence of a star.

A good picture will draw business if your patrons have confidence in your theatre and in you. If they haven't there is something wrong about the way you have treated them.

The New York Strand billed "The Westerners" as "A famous story"

The Best Exploitation Stunt of the Week

Lacey of Portland Bucks the Hot Weather with Good Lobby Display and Stage Setting

FROM out of the West again, this time clean to the Coast, Portland, Oregon, comes a story of real picture exploitation that measures with the best ever recorded in this section.

Frank A. Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, is responsible for the stunt and the picture on which he made his extra effort was "Jacques of the Silver North," featuring "Big Mitch Lewis."

Mr. Lacey booked this picture, a snow subject, for a hot weather week and just so that he wouldn't be disappointed the weather man ordered out the extra sizzling kind that usually sends people to the front porch there to perspire and curse or takes them out in the car, but which keeps them away from the theatre.

But Lacey knew how to counteract the efforts of Old Man Weather to place the "Closed until Sept. 1st" sign on his show shop, and for this particular subject he planned a special lobby display, decorated his theatre in the atmosphere of the picture being shown and engaged Mr. Lewis to appear in person.

Beginning in his lobby, he dressed everything with icicles, with a wall frame in snow. In the lobby he used a cut-out from a twenty-four sheet secured from the producers, showing a dog team ready to make its way over the trails of the frozen North. The effect was as if the spectator had suddenly been transported to the land of eternal snow and unconsciously one would feel that inside this lobby the weather must be cool. With this psychological effect attained business that otherwise might have gone elsewhere was attracted to the theatre.

Inside the same general plan of decorations had been carried out. Icicles which in the dim light of the theatre looked like the real thing hung from every conceivable place about the theatre. Snow, cotton snow, of course, was used in various nooks and corners, especially about the stage and proscenium opening.

Next in creating not only an atmosphere for the presenting of the snow picture but also in making the patrons of the Majestic forget that the mercury was crowding the century mark, was the stage setting. A big drop which dressed in the proscenium opening was painted, showing in perspective a road through the snow leading past a log house, and bending at the stage toward the wings, with a dog team cut from a twenty-four sheet placed in such a manner as would suggest that it was about to "mush" down the trail and over the horizon into the valley below.

Now Mr. Lacey having an artistic and dramatic soul did not let his patrons come in and view this stage managerial achievements without giving his show a proper dramatic send off, so he kept his auditorium dark until it was time to "ring up."

With the wind machine working overtime and the music playing the "storm stuff," the performance for "Jacques of the North" began.

After holding the interest for a few moments with the effects, gradually the lights in blue come on to suggest the cold winter night of the North, with a change to red producing a sunrise effect, then a switch was made to full amber, and then back again through the three changes to the screening of the picture.

"Jacques of the North" finishes with a fade out of Mr. Lewis and this was the cue for his personal appearance at the Majestic.

Attired in evening dress, he made a graceful entrance and delivered a few minutes' talk which was received on every occasion with such enthusiasm that he was compelled to take half a dozen curtain calls at every performance.

Novel Publicity Stunt Brings Results at Rochester, N. Y.

AN indication of novel publicity results that can be obtained on short notice was furnished when the Irene Castle picture, "The Firing Line," was shown at the Piccadilly theatre at Rochester, N. Y., recently. The picture was to be played the first four days of the week and on Thursday of the preceding week Arthur P. Kelly, publicity man for the house, concocted a scheme to bring to Rochester some of the gowns worn by the famous star in the making of the picture, and display them in some downtown store window.

He wrote to Miss Castle at her home in Ithaca asking if arrangements could be made for the showing. By impressing the need for haste, the publicity man succeeded in getting two of the gowns to Rochester for showing on Saturday morning in the window of the Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Company store, the principal department store of the city and right around the corner from the Piccadilly theatre.

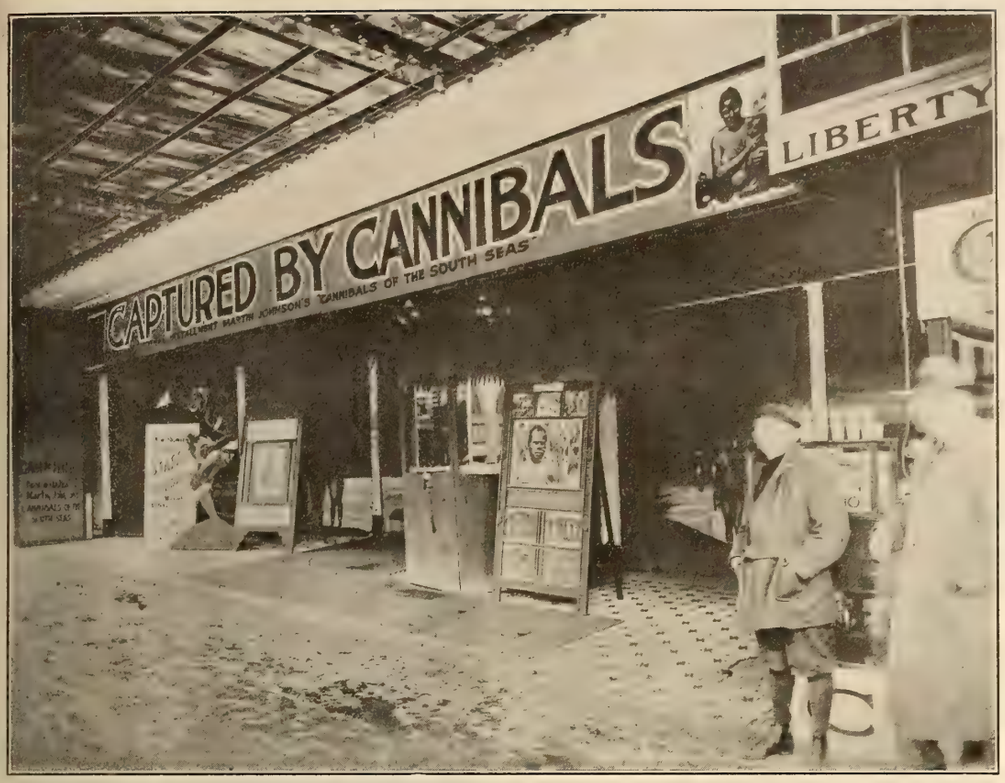
The gowns, two exquisite evening dress affairs, were placed in the choicest position in the Main Street window, appearing against a background of solid mahogany casing and standing forth with striking effect. Throughout the following three days in which they were on display crowds, made up chiefly of women, stood and admired the gowns, on which was a neat card announcing that they were worn by the famous star in the making of the picture then showing at the Piccadilly theatre.

Moore Picture Affords Novel Exploiting Angles

The manager of the Madison Theatre, Detroit, Mich., taking advantage of a police crusade against reckless drivers, made a good tie-up with Tom Moore in Goldwyn's "One of the Finest," by placing in a No. 10 envelope a traffic regulation tie-up with the picture and a copy of the Detroit traffic regulations. He also induced several cigar stores to sell Tom Moore cigars and tied this up with "One of the Finest" by lettering several cards and placing Tom Moore's picture on them for display. The manager also distributed a form letter addressed to the police officers of Detroit calling their attention to the story of the police department shown at the Madison Theatre.

Song Contests Prove Popular in Coast Theatres

SEVERAL of the west coast theatres have added a decidedly popular feature to their programs which has been named "the song contest." Each week two songs are played by the orchestra while the words are shown upon the screen and later the audience is asked to decide which is the most popular by applause. The slides used for projecting the words carry but two or three line with suggestive art drawings in black and white. This feature is a part of the program at the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, and Manager Jack Partington of that house is said to be the originator. Sid Grauman has added it to the program of his Los Angeles house, and because of its popularity it promises to be a permanent feature.



Giving a short subject a lobby display which proved a success at the Liberty theatre, Seattle

Exploiting an Educational Subject to Advantage

THE lobby display as the most effective means of attracting attention which can be capitalized into dollars and cents for the picture theatre is again demonstrated by the display reproduced herewith.

This time it is Jensen and von Herberg of the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, who have realized and capitalized the exploitation possibilities in Martin H. Johnson's South Sea Island Pictures. At the showing of each of the pictures they paid especial attention to the lobby display. In connection with their recent showing of "Captured by Cannibals" they constructed an unusual and attractive display of cardboard and cut-outs from the various sheets.

Much ingenuity was used in getting the desired effect, a section of a South Sea Island. The entire back of the lobby was used to give a panoramic effect of the island with the waters lapping its shores. This was brought about by the artistic use of colors and sections of a twenty-four sheet. Palms, trees and a darkened horizon gave the desired effect. Life-size cut-outs of figures of cannibals cut from the twenty-four sheet and the display of large cardboard cutouts of cannibals in menacing attitudes placed about the lobby gave the effect of life.

Palm trees and tropical vines hung around the ticket booth added a touch of realism. Effective use of still photos and signs brought out the salient features of the picture.

Messrs. Jensen and von Herberg claim that there was not a night that these pictures did not play to capacity business.

Thirteen Years at the Same Stand and Still Going Strong

THIRTEEN years may not be a very long business experience in shoes, or dry goods or medicine or any one of a hundred other vocations, but it is quite some period to have managed a motion picture theatre. You're an old timer at the game if you have stuck it out all that time and your ideas are entitled to consideration.

Therefore, it is fitting that we introduce to you Mr. W. W. Watts of the Vaudette theatre, Springfield, Ill., as a man who knows wherein he speaks. These are words of wisdom which he writes, after being duly and efficiently persuaded by our correspondent in Springfield, and as such are worth your reading.

If you have a million dollar corporation back of you and a beautiful big comfortable theatre built at some one else's expense there is no reason why you should not do a whale of business but here is a man who is making money from the same theatre, improved from time to time, in which he began his picture career those thirteen years ago.

Here is what Mr. Watts said when asked to give us a story for the Exhibitor's Service Bureau. "For thirteen years I have been a motion picture exhibitor, and for the same number of years I have watched changes take place in the business, changes without number, and for the better. When I first opened the Vaudette it was a small storeroom, occupied previously as a business location. The Vaudette today is vastly different, though it embraces the same store, with more space added. The sawdust is no longer on the floor as in the pioneer days; the planks and boxes have given away to real opera chairs, and we have real music instead of a squeaky phonograph. Then we have more than one machine, and it does not have to be cranked by hand. Yes, there have been changes in the picture business in thirteen years. But the greatest of all changes has been in the advertising of our shows.

In the olden days—1906-1915—when General Film had the world by the neck, it was sufficient to merely state that tomorrow we would have Mary Pickford or Clara Kimball Young or Maurice Costello and the crowd would flock to us, eager to pay its five cents to see the show.

But it is a somewhat different task to get them in now to see Mary Pickford or Clara Kimball Young—yes, the same ones—at fifteen or twenty or even twenty-five cents. The public does not come down and look at our lobby display, then make up its mind whether it will see the show or not. It knows before leaving home whether it is going to the Vaudette, or whether it is going to some other motion picture theatre. So we have to lay out our advertising so that we will make the people want to see our show as well as some other theatre's, even when the opposition may have the best attraction.

We believe our advertising is entirely different from that used by any theatre in the country, yet we always strive to keep it uniform and distinctive. We use no border on our advertisements, simply a 12-point rule top and bottom. Other theatres use borders, so our ad appears wider and catches the eye quicker. We save a little by not using a border. But that is not the prime idea.

A cut of the star or principal player is inserted in every ad. We try and select cuts that will print, and we have better luck with line drawings than with any other kind. They are not so liable to print black and smudgy.

Then we go over the press book, read MOTION PICTURE NEWS for new ideas on the picture, look over the exchanges at the newspaper offices and get every selling point on the attraction we can before the copy is prepared. Sometimes we run the picture off and find an idea to incorporate in the advertising. When we have jotted down every point we can find, the ad is written.

No doubt there will be many advertising managers of theatres who will find fault with our publicity. We admit it is not as good as we would like to have it. For one thing we are compelled to use too small space. The reason for this is because of the high amusement rates charged by local papers, and also because we advertise 365 days every year in every paper in the city.

It will be noted that our advertising features first, the theatre. Then comes the star, and then the title of the production. Minor points covered in the ad will show that the producer is mentioned, also the author—when he is well known—and some of the best liked members of the cast. If the picture has been put on by a celebrated director, he, too, is given mention. We finish up by naming our short reels, usually a comedy and a travelogue or educational.

Truth is paramount in all our advertisements. If we think it is the best picture Charles Ray has ever appeared in, we say so. Otherwise we say "his latest and one of the best."

Conditions are a trifle different in Springfield from most cities. While we are charged a high rate for advertising, we are allowed by the newspapers some very valuable extra space. For instance, if we take an eight-inch ad, we can have four inches of reading matter or an eight-inch cut gratis. This enables us to tell something about our pictures, and we believe it is just as well as running it in the ad. People are more apt to read reading notices than ads sometimes. If you don't believe this, pick up a paper from some city other than your own and glance at the amusement page. It's a foregone conclusion you will read it. We have had people tell us time and again that they never read ads, but do read the notices. Of course we want them to read our ads, too, but we catch them both ways, so that is all we can expect. But most people read the ads as we have reason to know.

In running a motion picture theatre I have found that courtesy never fails to pay. Be friends with everyone, and especially with the newspaper men. They can give you many a boost, and should they desire to be nasty they can do a great deal of harm. Make everybody a booster for your theatre, and you can afford to be a little bit less strict on some things.

If a man will run a clean theatre, clean pictures, give the place his personal attention, offer the best music he can afford, and teach his employes to be civil, courteous and "thinking," he can make a success. If he doesn't he will say things about the show business that will be derogatory to it, for he will never make it go. And the fault will be his, not the "show's."

A Little Artistic Talent Used to Advantage

How Exhibitor Collins Turned Scenic Artist for the Exploitation of "Daddy Long-Legs" in Texas

TURNING a lobby into a huge blackboard is a stunt which E. N. Collins, manager of the Liberty theatre, Electra, Texas, claims caused no end of comment, and incidentally brought many extra dollars into the Liberty till, on the recent showing of "Daddy Long-Legs."

Mr. Collins' line of action was simple but effective and also surprisingly inexpensive. In fact the whole stunt, not figuring in Mr. Collins' time, as he did the work himself (and enjoyed it) including the scenic artist part, did not exceed five dollars.

The basic idea of Mr. Collins' plan was to follow out the producers' paper style of advertising, which is largely representations of blackboards as they are used in school rooms, on which "Judy" is drawing the funny caricatures that were one of the features of the fiction version of "Daddy Long-Legs." Much of the lettering on the lithographs is also in the writing of a school girl of "Judy's" age when the story of "Daddy" begins, so it can be imagined that Mr. Collins did not have to be an experienced sign painter in order to make this "lobby black boards" match up with the lithographic material which he wished to use.

Mr. Collin's idea first involved a little carpenter work. He first had to have the blackboard. For this purpose strips of "Beaver Board," which can be obtained at any lumber yard was utilized. When he had encased the lobby walls and front with this material, he next painted the white surface with a dull black paint. This job wasn't hard either as the skill of a automobile artist is not needed to daub on paint where it drys in quickly.

When Mr. Collins had his blackboard done he was ready for his decorations. With white paint and a brush, chalk having been discarded as too susceptible to the fingers of admiring youngsters who are always present at any theatre which is showing "Daddy Long-Legs," he began his artistic demonstration.

The result is plainly discernable in the smaller cut which accompanies this story.

You will note with what realism Mr. Collins was able to reproduce the fatal jug of cider which proved "Judy's" undoing in the picture. It would lead us to believe that Mr. Collins has "drawn" many a jug of this exuberance producer, although perhaps not in just the way that he has done the trick here.

Connors "Bombs" Marion, Ind., with Advertising

THE war is over but aeroplanes still exist, for one of these crafts out in Marion, Indiana, furnished William Connors who manages the Luna-Lita and Marion theatres, with an idea of how to put over a clever advertising stunt for "Yankee Doodle in Berlin."

To be truthful, Connors borrowed the idea from the world war itself, which was to "bomb" Marion with advertising from an aeroplane.

There happens to be a discharged aviator in Marion who owns an aeroplane. To this gentleman Connors proceeded and soon made arrangements to carry out his advertising idea.

His ammunition consisted of eight thousand miniature photographs of the Sennett bathing girls who were appearing with the film.

Connors peeled off twenty-five dollars, grabbed the package of bathing beauty photographs, hopped in the plane and was off.

The newspapers told the public Billy was going to bomb 'em with bathing beauties and the public was out with eyes bulging.

The aviator sent the machine through the conventional stunts. Billy, finally recovering his breath, broke open the bathing girls and tossed them, the whole eight thousand, a handful at a time, Marionward. Everybody in the city, which means thirty thousand souls, knew that Mack Sennett's girls were in town after that.

The Luna-Lite only holds 500 people. That is Connors' only regret after that three-day carnival of record-breaking receipts. Incidentally, Billy's airplane stunt put over the film against the added handicap of a double admission price.

How New York Stages the Show

TO the "croakers" who are always saying that pictures are losing in public popularity a trip to the three Broadway palaces, the Rialto, Strand and Rivoli, might be enlightening.

At 8.30 p. m., or even earlier, these houses are jammed to the doors. People to whom entertainment is an old story stand inside the ropes craning their necks to see the picture and without complaint. Now when a public will do that at sixty cents per, a house is in no danger of having to close its doors through lack of patronage.

The pessimist will be able to go out into the highways and byways and find the little, stuffy old fashioned picture house, managed by men who never had any license to be in the amusement field, playing to empty benches, which is just as it should be.

People today want their photoplay entertainment surrounded with an artistic atmosphere, presented to good music and will wend their way to the big roomy theatre which gives them these things. The day of the store show and the small ill-kept theatre is past, but the day of the photoplay in the better houses is just beginning.

Broadway will soon have another big house which will open and play to capacity just as the three theatres mentioned are doing, and the latter will never realize that they have lost some of their patrons, and we are willing to go on record with a prediction that inside of a year still another photoplay palace will have been planned by the men who know that the future of the motion picture is as bright today as it ever has been.

Rialto Theatre

AS if to contradict the veiled inference in last week's issue under this heading that the Rivoli theatre leads the procession in motion picture presentation de luxe, the Rialto has stepped forth with a program which merits the same sort of praise accorded to the Rivoli. Every number breathes an atmosphere of excellence which justifies the top notch prices of admission which are charged at the downtown houses. Beginning with the overture and continuing to the organ solo, the bill may be classified as the best of entertainment which is the thing that the theatrical public most desires.

The overture at the Rialto this week is excerpts from the opera "Aida" composed by Giuseppe Verdi (1813-1901) and one of the most popular of the standard musical productions ever produced. Many of the numbers of this work have been the backbone of the higher grade of Victrola record sales and therefore are familiar to nearly everyone even outside the realm of those who attend the opera regularly. For this reason we believe that this overture is especially interesting.

The writing of "Aida" was commissioned by the Khedive, Ismail Pasha, with the plot founded on an incident of Egyptian history unearthed by a famous Egyptomologist. The text was first written in French prose and then put into Italian verse by Ghilanzoni, with Verdi suggesting many details including the two-story stage at the close of the composition. Naturally the melody of "Aida" has an Egyptian flavor, with a note of mystery which characterizes the music of this land rich in ancient history. The excerpts selected for use by the Rialto orchestra by director Hugo Riesenfield are the important portions of the opera and form an overture which merited the warm applause with which it was greeted. The number is played with the musicians flooded in amber and the house dark with no change throughout the rendition. There is much of the overture in which the brasses dominate, with the reeds also carrying the burden at times.

At the close of the overture the lights dim into the screening of the usual Major Jack Allen combination educational and scenic which this week is entitled "Lion Trapping," and shows the intrepid hunter capturing a full grown lion by the use of a net. Many of the views were remarkable in the closeups secured of the king of beasts in his native lair.

The third offering is Emanuel List, basso profundo, rendering "When the Bell Rings in the Lighthouse," famous for its time honored note "below" which has served to demonstrate the voice range of many a great and near great basso these many years. This is given with a stage setting and the singer costumed as a seaman of the type concerning which the song's verses are written.

This setting consisted of scenic canvasses at each side of the proscenium opening representing a stormy sea and sky dimly lighted in blue to suggest the scenes of the song. On the left canvas, lights in the painted lighthouse wink in perspective as the singer renders the number. The screen opening is shrouded with the proscenium curtains. No spot is used for the singer, the blue flood extending to his figure and over the orchestra.

The usual Rialto Magazine opens with an International strip of unusual length and interest showing the British Victory Pageant including many notables, among whom were General Pershing and King George of Britain. These scenes were followed by Gaumont's views of a unique salvaging device in operation at Bridgeport, Conn., with Pathe's views of the great U. S. mobile guns recently demonstrated at Indian Head, Md., as the third portion of the reel.

"Farming Up-To-Date" by Gaumont, showing the modern farm tractor at work, follows Pathe's contribution with International's scenes of giant charges of dynamite being exploded at close range to demolish a big hill being next.

International's "Judge Rumhauser" cartoon this week, entitled "Good Morning Nurse" and showing the "Judge" attempting to receive injuries so he may be a patient in a hospital where pretty nurses preside, is the next strip, with Kinogram's views of the Brooklyn car strike following the cartoon.

Pathe again contributes with scenes from Washington, D. C., where the Railway employees present their demands to the Government officials, and with overseas views from Brussels showing the celebration of France and Belgium in the latter's capital city.

Kinogram closes the reel with a fine strip concerning the "First to Fight" veterans marching up Fifth avenue, New York.

Reproductions of famous paintings are being used as stage settings at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y.

The fifth number is a soprano solo, "Song of Songs," rendered by Gladys Rice, the Rialto artist. This offering is lighted by a scarlet flood with orchestral accompaniment, in which the harps and strings dominated with exceptional harmony.

The feature photoplay is "The Peace of Roaring River," a Goldwyn release, with Pauline Frederick in the leading role. It was written by George Van Schaik and directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.

The picture is drama, with Miss Frederick carrying the burden of the production to a happy ending. The feature holds interest and an excellent continuity tells the story well without the excessive use of subtitles.

The locale of the picture is about equally divided between a big city and the West of the silver mining country.

The seventh offering is a marimbaphone duet played by Harry Edison and Frank Wolf, divided into two parts and entitled (a) Heart of Rose, (b) Yearning. The number was given with the musicians and orchestra flooded in green, with an amber spot covering the marimbaphone players.

Following the duet comes the comedy, this week a Christie release featuring Bobby Vernon and entitled "Cupid's Hold-up." The number is of the broad variety and is largely an outdoor scene production in which a motion picture company is shown on location. It is founded on the usual mistaken identity and attendant complications idea, with much action in which the star figures largely.

I Don't Want to Get Well—(D) Violinist and cellist seen playing.

The organ solo as played by Arthur Depew is "Allegro Con Spirito."

Announced for next week is Charles Ray in "Bill Henry."

Rivoli Theatre

FOR the first time in some weeks the Rivoli theatre has selected a male star to head the cast of the feature picture and is also taking its turn in the presentation of a Western story, with a historical element introduced in the basis of the plot. It is the period of Mark Twain's stories, the era of the long black frock and frilled shirts for men and hoop skirts and poke bonnets for the women which is shown in this production, a style of dress that seems to have a particularly romantic aspect as those of this day and age are wont to view it, suggestive of chivalry in the male persuasion and of faith and constancy of the "clinging vine" type in those of the feminine gender.

It is really easier to believe that a girl would never, never, love but one man if she wears the clothes mentioned and that a man would lay down his life cheerfully and bravely if he dressed in the coat and trousers of the late fifties.

However, it may be that human nature was the same in that romantic period as it is today, some people being just naturally good and others not so good if not worse.

The Rivoli overture this week is also somewhat of a change, the excerpts from a popular opera being superseded by a "Southern Rhapsody" in the strains of which many old Southern melodies, dear to the hearts of all, may be recognized. The lure of these songs which are so familiar to our ears, like "My Old Kentucky Home," "Suwanee River" and "Dixie," all of which enter into the composition played by the Rivoli orchestra, has led many composers to use them in orchestral and other works. In this rhapsody, Lucius Homer has caught the true spirit of the South. There is a strain throughout the entire rendition that suggests that peculiar melody which permeates the music originating with the old-fashioned Southern negro—a strange sadness and plaintiveness as if the originators had attempted to find a means of expressing their regret for a race in bondage.

The number is a fitting musical accompaniment for the feature offering and is played with the house light and a white flood over the musicians—another departure from the usual.

Following the overture the usual Bruce scenic reel is projected. Again Mr. Bruce takes us to the mountains and valleys, where great heights impress with their grandeur and where rushing mountain torrents searching their way to the sea plunge downward in their never ending flight. With the beautiful tintings for which this product is famed, the reel is a rare treat.

The third offering, a vocal solo, "My Dreams," by Greek Evans, baritone, is rendered with a stage setting designed by Artist Wenger that lends the number much atmosphere. Back of draped curtains dressing the proscenium opening a balcony effect, with huge fluted porch columns dimly showing through a French window, is a canvas that depicts the sunset glow of a beautiful evening. Near the arch the green flood used on the singer and stage setting deepens and at each side of the singer are placed two house trees, which take what might otherwise be a bareness, from the stage.

Two lights as if from tall floor lamps give the stage a roomlike appearance. It is all very pretty and makes the rendition of the song especially effective.

The fourth number is the Rivoli Pictorial, which opens with the first pictures ever shown of the Turkish army at Gallipoli. They are at least remarkable in that it is supposed to be an authentic view of the army going into battle and not just the sham battles we have come to accept with resignation these last four years, nor yet like most of the views secured of troops going into action on other fronts and under other flags, mostly smoke and blur with nothing distinct enough to give a scene any real import.

This strip is followed by an International release showing the copper mining industry at Bisbee, Arizona, and view of Texas' greatest product, the pig.

Gaumont follows these portions with scenes of the recent bicycle stunts at Seal Beach, Cal., with International contributing again with a strip concerning the New York bicycle races.

Gaumont furnishes another strip with scenes of fishing in a seaplane at Santa Barbara, Cal., which in turn gives way to the weekly edition of the "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon comedy, this time entitled "The Frozen North," depicting these two esteemed characters as proprietors of an Alaskan saloon and dance hall.

Following the cartoon, Pathe presents its first strip in views of the Prince of Wales, who will soon visit America.

Scenes concerning the demonstrations of the U. S. Marines at Caldwell, N. J., released by Gaumont, succeed this number, and this strip is followed by more views of the Prince of Wales, this time from International.

The reel closes with some wonderful shots of the parade of the U. S. Marines marching up Fifth Avenue, New York, contributed by Pathe.

Athens Buckley, dramatic soprano, renders an aria from "Herodiade" as the fifth number, with the orchestra accompanying the singer.

The feature offering is "Wagon Tracks," with William S. Hart in the leading role, that of a guide across the plains of the Santa Fe trail route in the days when civilization had extended only to the Father of Waters and when the balance of the many hundreds of miles to what is now the country where a majority of the motion pictures are produced was a desert waste. It is a romantic tale, a drama of Indians and the peculiar code of the early West in which the star dominates nearly every scene.

Strand Theatre

THE Strand program this week is again noteworthy in that it is offering as its principal film attraction a picture without a star and produced by an English firm of which those outside the photoplay business have never heard. Aside from the entertainment view point there is an interesting opportunity to judge the difference of production methods between America and England. In the past foreign pictures have failed to mee with any great favor owing to the fact that the standards of producing and the methods used were not those of which we were used. This picture seems to have been designed along the American lines and except that its plot is typically English and presents the character which is expected to receive sympathy in a role of middle age, something most American producers do not dare attempt meets the requirements of Yankee audiences very well.

The Strand overture this week, is from the light opera "Madoiselle Modiste," the popular Victor Herbert composition which contained many tuneful melodies familiar to our ears. It is opened with the house dark and the orchestra flooded in amber. As the popular ballads and dance numbers are played, one of the big song hits of the composition, "Kiss Me" is reached. As the orchestra plays this tuneful ballad, Eldora Stanford, vocalist, sings the number off stage, thereby providing somewhat of a novelty for the overture offering.

During the song, the amber flood has been succeeded by blue that fades as the song is finished and the orchestra strikes into a stirring march for the screening of the educational number, "A Japanese Study," one of the Outing-Chester numbers sub-titled "Mr. Outing Instructs."

This reel is a view of many Japanese industries, including the famed silk worm at work etc.

The Strand Topical Review, opens with Internationals views of the British Victory Pageant, with tons of dynamite used to demolish a hill at Dresser Falls, Wis., also from International following.

Pathe succeeds with a strip devoted to the Brooklyn street railway strike and scenes concerning the British soldiers' demonstration at Wale Island, England.

The Topics of the Day compiled by the Literary Digest follows these portions with views of the U. S. huge mobile guns being demonstrated at Indian Head, Md., (Pathe) being next.

Pathe again contributes with views of the Railway Employees presenting their demands to the Government officials at Washington and with scenes of the Belgium and France International celebration at Brussels.

Kinograms first strip in this number, views of the U. S. marines marching up Fifth Av. New York, completes the reel.

Pershing leads parade. Foch and his Poilus. 40 tons of dynamite. Car Strike. Whale Island. Topics of the day. Indian Head gun. France-Belgium. Second Division parade. Tenth Regiment defile. Organ and effects. My Barney Lies Over the Ocean. March of Anzacs. Naughty Waltz. Steel king. Children of the regiment. Stars and Stripes.

The fourth number on the bill is a vocal solo "Her Danny" sung by Richard Bold, tenor. For this number the stage and singer are booded in scarlet lights, with much of the accompaniment being rendered on the harp and strings.

The feature photoplay is "Choosing A Wife," a screen adaption of the English novel, "The Elder Miss Blossom." The production is from an English studio and has an entire English cast none of which are known to American theatre goers.

The picture is a drama presenting an typical English plot developed along English lines.

Academy of Music

THE Academy of Music current bill offers those who desire a whole evening's entertainment, a wide variety of screen and musical numbers entirely commendable and artistically presented. Comedy, drama, melodrama and current events' numbers which cover a full three hours for presentation have been added to a program of exceptional music including a special vocal number not on the program.

The performance opens with the usual organ solo by Charles Durkin to be followed by the two part overture by the Academy orchestra.

The first selection played by both brass reed and string instrumentalists is a selection of popular new melodies under the title of "Popular Jingles of 1919." The second offering (b) is "Love Moon" rendered by the strings with the violins carrying the burden of the composition.

The stage setting at the Academy this week is a beautiful canvass scenic offering showing a mountain ravine down which a stream of water tumbles and rushes, with snow capped peaks in perspective. The canvass is lighted in scarlet which adds to its vivid realism.

The first film number is a specially selected news' pictorial which contains the "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon comedy "The Jazz Instructors," views of the Prince of Wales in England, the New York parade of the Marines, the Brooklyn car strike and other current events of timely interest.

This number is followed by the first feature, William Farnum in "Wolves of the Night" a melodrama with much of its action in a South American mining country.

Following this feature is a Sunshine comedy, "Wild Women and Tame Lions," a burlesque of much trick photography in which several lions figure largely in the action.

The Symphony orchestra renders a second overture after the first feature the selection being (a) excerpts from Auber's "Masaniello," (b) "Meditation from the opera "Thais," rendered on the strings.

"The Woman Michael Married," a drama of American society, with Bessie Barriscale starred is the second feature with a Harold Lloyd comedy "Count Your Change" following before the exit march "Hello Marines."

An extra number not on the program is offered in tenor solos rendered by Carlo Ferretim. His selections are the "Toreador" song from the opera "Carmen" with another selection from this popular opera as an encore.

Next week's attractions are Tom Mix in "A Rough Riding Romance" and Anita Stewart in "Shadows of the Past" for the second feature.

Fox Gets Right to Twain Stories

Great Satire of Noted Humorist as Subject for Tom Mix

THE film rights of Mark Twain's satire, "A Connecticut Yankee At King Arthur's Court" has just purchased by Fox Film Corporation, after long negotiations with the Mark Twain Estate. It will be used for a Tom Mix Picture.

The acquisition of this story signalized a victory, for a number of prominent producers had been engaged in a struggle for the motion picture rights to this popular classic of international wit and humor. The keenest rivalry was manifested in the bidding, but the Fox company was determined to get the story—and got it.

From the beginning of the negotiations William Fox has had "A Connecticut Yankee At King Arthur's Court" in mind as a superb vehicle for Mix, the popular cowboy hero, whose talents and ability fit most admirably the central figure of Twain's masterpieces.

The technical and art departments of the Fox studios are already gathering memoranda and period date—the purpose being to make this one of the most accurate productions ever staged. The time of the story, as is generally known is 600 A. D., in the reign of King Arthur of England, and the atmospherical backgrounds for this quaint setting are to be made most picturesque and accurate. No effort or expense is to be spared by the Fox organization.

As a starring vehicle for Tom Mix, those who are acquainted with the peculiar talents and personality of this star will find little difficulty in picturing him in the role of the romantic and adventurous Yankee who awakes to find himself transported back thirteen centuries and surrounded by King Arthur and his famous Knights of the Round Table.

The possibilities of this story with Mix as the central figure are innumerable. Nature has fitted Mix with all the requirements for this type of role, and it is expected by the Fox company that the opportunities offered in the action of the Twain story will bring out in the star the most daring and dashing Knight of the Round Table—or the motion picture screen.

Sumptuous plans are being made for the big tournament scenes wherein Mix will have many chances to display his equestrian skill and bring cowboy tricks and stunts into the midst of the array of armor and lance; also for the many scenes in which the hero travels with the King in disguise—which promise to present on the screen a distinct novelty in setting.

"A Connecticut Yankee At King Arthur's Court" will go into production at the Fox studios in Hollywood immediately after completion of the picture Mix now is engaged in making, and it is expected that it will follow in the order named, his productions of "Rough Riding Romance," "The Speed Manias" and "The Daredevil" the first three of his series of eight big pictures which William Fox will distribute for the season of 1919-1920 with Tom Mix as the star.

Realart Gets the Chautard Films

Contract Closed with the Mayflower Corporation

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION is to distribute Emile Chautard Productions.

A contract to this effect was closed this week by Arthur S. Kane, president of Realart Pictures Corporation and Isaac Wolper, president of Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Six pictures are to be made under the terms of the agreement. The first of these, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," a detective story, will be completed within the next few days and released early this fall.

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room" was picturized from a novel by the noted French writer, Gaston Leroux. As a result of its wide popularity, it was translated into English and published in this country first by Brentano's and later by Grossett and Dunlap. It appealed strongly to Mr. Kane because of the present popularity of mystery stories, as indicated by the number of such stories now running serially in the most widely read magazines.

Emile Chautard now producing Emile Chautard productions for Mayflower Photoplay Corp., to be released by Realart Pictures Corp.

"As a result of the contract with Mayflower," said Mr. Kane, "we are able to assure exhibitors of a series of unusual feature attractions. Mr. Chautard is a director of the first rank who has produced some of the most successful photoplays, from an artistic as well as a financial standpoint.

"Inasmuch as two months ago we had no organization, no stars and no settled prospect of pictures to be released this fall, I think we have made very creditable progress. Realart is now prepared to meet almost any requirement of exhibitors."

Emile Chautard has an international reputation. He was born in Paris and his career includes many years' experience in stage and screen work in Paris before coming to the United States. As an actor, Mr. Chautard was leading man at the foremost theatres in Paris, including the Odean, the Gymnase and the Theatre Royal.

Though unusually retiring and not very communicative, Mr. Chautard was induced to make a statement regarding his present affiliation and his forthcoming productions.

"I went with Mayflower," he explained, "because I was promised a free hand to produce pictures in my own way without interference from any source. The company has lived up to its promise to the letter and I am happy to be able to say that Emile Chautard Productions are the result of my direction and mine only. Every detail has my personal supervision from the preparation of the story until the finished picture leaves the studio, complete in every respect.

Speaking of the arrangement he had made with Mr. Kane for distributing, the Chautard photonovels Isaac Wolper, president of Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, declared he had "played in great luck."

"It is very gratifying to know that the disposal of Emile Chautard Productions will be under the jurisdiction of Mr. Kane," said Mr. Wolper. "His company is bound to be one of the biggest factors in the photoplay world and for that reason I know that these pictures, really worthy to be called features, will have the very best market for release to exhibitors.

Cleveland and Environs Good Film Territory

"The best motion picture territory and the livest exhibitors in the United States"—that is a summary of the Cleveland district situation given by James B. Reilly, recently appointed branch manager for that section by Arthur S. Kane, President of Realart Pictures Corporation. Mr. Reilly was in New York this week for a conference with Mr. Kane regarding the closing of first-run contracts with exhibitors for Realart productions.

Since his appointment, Mr. Reilly has spent nearly all of his time on the road, carrying to exhibitors personally the news of his connection with Realart. "My trip," he says, "has served to confirm my judgment of this territory and its exhibitors.

"All of the exhibitors tell me they are making money and my own observation more than confirms this. I anticipate that there will be considerable building during the coming year. It does not seem possible, at the present rate of increase in population, that the Cleveland territory is likely soon to be provided with too many theatres."

Mitchell Lewis' Next a Thriller

Mitchell Lewis' next picture which follows "Faith of the Strong," now completed, has more thrills than a toad has hops. This picture, as yet untitled, is adapted from Frank Howard Clark's latest Northwoods story, "The Last of His People" for which Robert North Bradbury, wrote the continuity. Mr. Bradbury is also directing the picture.

Back from Location

Harry T. Morey, who has been in the lumber camps of the White Mountains in New Hampshire taking outdoor scenes for "Out of the Dark," returned to Vitagraph's eastern studio late last week.

Ruth McTammany, appearing in "Alma, Where Do You Live?" a Monopol state rights attraction

Spectacles in Plenty in "Fatal Fortune"

One of the spectacular features in the new S. L. K. Serial which is featuring Helen Holmes in "The Fatal Fortune" is a tremendous explosion which takes place in one of the episodes which has just been completed.

To get the desired effect Donald Mackenzie who is directing the serial consumed a great deal of time, money and effort. A gang of men were kept working all week building a bridge to span a canyon over which "The Invisible Face" makes his escape closely followed by Helen Holmes in an automobile.

With the preliminary details finished Mackenzie picked out a location dangerously close to the bridge and gave the cue for the dirty work to begin. On came the automobile with "The Invisible Face," and as it safely cleared the bridge the hired gunmen set off the fuse and a terrific explosion followed. The bridge was blown to smithereens and the concussion from the explosion threw Mackenzie several feet from where he originally stood.

Dintenfass Progresses on Cuckoo Comedies

Reports from Florida indicate steady progress being made on the new series of black and white faced comedies, to be known as Cuckoo Comedies, under production at the Mark M. Dintenfass studios, Jacksonville, while from the New York office of that producer testimony is forthcoming bearing upon the large measure of interest among exhibitors caused by the recent announcement of the series.

Stress is laid by the producer on the character of the Cuckoo Comedies which, it is promised, will be always of clean and wholesome nature and such as to appeal to all grades and ages of motion picture fun lovers.

Call for Better Pictures Increases

Metro Quotes Prominent Author Upholding New Policy

HOW urgent is the demand of the public today for fewer and better pictures, such as are now being produced by Screen Classics, Inc., has also been made a subject for discussion by some of the most prominent writers and thoughtful observers in America today.

Harry Leon Wilson, known to millions of readers as the author of "Ruggles of Red Gap" and the "Ma Pettingill" stories and a successful playwright' says in the August 2 number of the Saturday Evening Post:

"Our town is in a bad way for entertainment. It has about seven thousand mostly prosperous people, and speaking plays ignore us. Five years ago we filled three picture theatres twice a day—overflowed them, in fact. Now we get but one film a day. In that time the business has lost two-thirds of its income from us. . . .

"Only filmed plays—real plays—will make money, drama being even more essential to the film play than to the spoken play. . ."

Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., officials are now comparing the entirely unbiased assertion of Mr. Wilson's with the statements made by Maxwell Karger in an interview printed in the June number of Photoplay Journal. Mr. Karger was quoted by the interviewer as saying:

"We have to picturize new stories; big, human stories, in keeping with the trend of the times. . . the commonplace finds no place in the world's perspective.

"Though it is extremely difficult to find screen stories with big original themes we are determined to get around this and are already purchasing the rights to some of the biggest novels and plays on the market. Our readers are combing every field of literature—magazines, novels, plays and original manuscripts, to enable us to obtain the very biggest and most entertaining on the market."

Metro points out that the coincidence in the train of thought of Mr. Wilson, a writer and dramatist of undoubted ability and cleverness, and of Mr. Karger, a practical producer of pictures of equality, is illuminating. Both are convinced that motion picture audiences today are sated and bored with the mechanical plot, with hackneyed types of characters, with inanity of stories that have been done so often that the audience finds its only interest in the picture in the picking out little flaws.

And Mr. Karger has put his ideas into practice. The titles of a few of the thirty-six plays and novels purchased for production by Screen Classics, Inc., will indicate that those pictures which Metro will distribute have been based upon the very best prose and dramatic writings available today. They include "Fair and Warmer," Avery Hopwood's farce; "The Willow Tree," Cohan and Harris's great stage success; "Lombardi, Ltd.," and Oliver Morosco hit; "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," Thomas Hardy's classic of modern literature; "The Right of Way," by Sir Gilbert Parker, and "Please Get Married," a farce comedy that took New York by storm only last season.

These are but a few of the stories and plays which Screen Classics, Inc., in spite of the big cost of the film rights, has obtained for its stars—May Allison, Bert Lytell and Viola Dana.

Exploitation—Past and the Present

Goldwyn Official Recounts the Many Differences

A GOLDWYN executive, who has been intimately associated with motion pictures since the time when the exhibitor was forced to take what was given him or nothing said last week, that he doubted if the average exhibitor really appreciated the tremendous efforts being made to simplify the task of the theatre manager. Whereas in the old days it was squarely up to the exhibitor to make a success of his business, the Goldwyn Corp. has at the present time lined up a numerous and expensive force of experts whose one purpose is to see that a picture is properly exploited, so that it is bound to make money. The cost of this service runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

This veteran picture man recalled the time of the autocratic regime which had "the Devil take the hindmost" as its policy. An exhibitor signed his name to a contract and took what the exchange supplied him. He usually got a few cheaply made one and three sheets to place in front of his house and the producer never bothered about whether or not people were attracted to the box office. Publicity was regarded as strictly the concern of the exhibitor and if he failed, the "service" was placed in another theatre.

Competition brought the first signs of life in motion picture publicity. It was recognized that photoplay fans were interested in the names and personalities of the people they saw on the screen. In view of what has happened since, it seems odd to recall that not more than six years ago, the producing company generally recognized to be the leader, refused to allow the names of its players to be made public. Since then the names of several of these players have become world famous.

Gradually, the motion picture business began to absorb men familiar with the exploitation methods used for stage plays. This resulted in fugitive efforts to popularize actors and actresses through newspapers and magazines; also the same influence may be credited with inspiring the first billboard campaign, some five years ago, designed to call attention to a certain brand of pictures.

Goldwyn came into the field with a full realization of the fact that the interests of the producer are essentially tied up with those of the exhibitor and that the exhibitor must be given every aid in selling his pictures to the public. Along with the development of better pictures, it was recognized that improved methods of building up a broader photoplay audience must be devised.

In order to do this it was necessary for the producing organization to acquire full sympathy with the mind and aspirations of the exhibitor. Many dollars have been spent in salaries and experiment in the effort to break down this Chinese wall of opposition between the producing mind and the exhibitor mind. Exploitation men had to discard the idea of booking in favor of "seat-selling," and the exact state of mind has developed into that of the scientist and specialist.

Of the new companies to venture into the motion upicture producing field, Goldwyn was one of the aptest at grasping the idea of the dovetail of exhibitor's showmanship and producer's showmanship.

Goldwyn's policy on its new season's pictures has been to discover the dominating publicity note in each photoplay, and to market it on that basis and exploit it on that basis.

First Dwan Pictures for Realart

REALART Pictures Corporation has received word from Allan Dwan that his latest production, "Soldiers of Fortune," is almost ready to leave his Hollywood studios. Active production has been completed and the film now is being edited under the personal supervision of Mr. Dwan. "Soldiers of Fortune" is the first of eight photoplay productions which Mr. Dwan is making for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, and which are to be distributed by Realart Pictures Corporation. They will be known as Allan Dwan Productions.

"Soldiers of Fortune" was one of the most popular novels of its time and still is a "best seller."

In the stage production, Robert Edeson made his debut as a star, and he has been an established theatrical celebrity ever since. Others in the original cast have also risen to fame in the amusement world. Thomas W. Ross later won popularlity in "Checkers," and the leading lady, Dorothy Donnelly, after being star of "Madame X," is now a playwright, having collaborated on two recent Broadway successes, "Johnny Get Your Gun" and "The Riddle Woman."

Wallace Eddinger has been identified as a leading player with many New York hits and this coming season is to be heralded in electric lights as a stage star. Another member of the "Soldiers of Fortune" cast who turned his attention to writing was the late Byron Ongley, author of "He Comes Up Smiling." An interesting fact in connection with "He Comes Up Smiling" is that Allan Dwan also did the picture version of this comedy. Macey Harlam, who played the part of "Reginald King" in "Soldiers of Fortune," has become one of the best delineators of Oriental and similar characters on the American stage. He was cast by Mr. Dwan in one of his many Douglas Fairbanks' successes, "Manhattan Madness."

The stage version of "Soldiers of Fortune" has been extremely popular ever since it had its premiere on March 17, 1902. Though it is seventeen years old, the stage play is produced regularly by representative stock companies throughout the country.

"So you wonder that we are exceedingly optimistic about the success of this first of the Allan Dwan Productions to be released by us in view of the fortune it has brought so many others who have been fortunate enough to be connected with it?" asked Arthur S. Kane, president of Realart. "I am not superstitious, but I do believe that the rule of three will work in this instance. 'Soldiers of Fortune' was, and still is, a very popular book, and it repeated its success on the stage. To my mind a story that can win popular favor as a novel, and a play certainly must have all the essentials of a big feature photoplay. Our biggest reason for believing that it will go over big is that it was produced by a man who has won his place in the front ranks of directors by making some of the biggest successes in photoplay."

"Soldiers of Fortune" Is Announced as Completed

Baltimore Booking Co. Handles Sunbeams

Due to an error in the page advertisement of the Florida Film Corporation, in August 9th issue of the Motion Picture News, the Baltimore Booking Company was not included among the distributors of Sunbeam Comedies.

They own the rights for Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia.

Lobby Display Fitting Big Production

Lobby decoration and display which in point of magnificence, measures up to the production, is forming a goodly portion of the exploitation of the Poli chain of theatres in connection with the presentation of the William Fox big special feature, "Checkers," taken from Henry M. Blossom's famous melodrama stage success of the same name.

While "Checkers" is showing at the Poli Palace in Hartford, a racetrack, complete in every detail will be constructed in the lobby.

Besides this novelty, Manager James F. Clancy is planning for an actual horse race on the stage of the theatre, with the horses racing on a treadmill constructed especially for this purpose.

Fourth Order on "Sahara" Accessories

Since neither producers nor distributors of pictures order lithographs and accessories for the mere joy of keeping them stocked up on branch office shelves, a fourth re-order placed this week for lithographs and accessories on the J. Parker Read, Jr., Louise Glaum production "Sahara" indicates the popularity of this Hodkinson-distributed picture with exhibitors.

Fox's version of the famous play "Checkers," by Henry M. Blossom, Jr., is said to contain all the elements of a thrilling production—gambling scenes, a train wreck Chinatown mysteries and an aeroplane race. On the left is a scene from the feature. In the center William Farnum in "Wolves of the Night," and on the right Tom Mix in a Western drama, "Rough Riding Romance," both big Fox pictures

Wistaria Production Is Launched

Enter the Independent Field; Serial Is Begun

WISTARIA PRODUCTIONS, Inc., a newly formed corporation with Lynn S. Card, heading the executive staff as president; Frank G. Gallagher, New York financial man, treasurer; Thomas de Vassay, secretary and Burton King, director general of productions, has launched forth on the independent field and announces as its first production activity, a serial co-starring Ann Luther and George Larkin.

Wistaria Productions, Inc., through its president Mr. Card who has been identified with the motion picture industry, in various excutive capacities, for a number of years, has mapped out a production campaign that calls for a most extensive and comprehensive activities. According to Mr. Card's announcement, Wistaria Productions, Inc., will not confine its efforts to the production of serials, alone, but that plans are now being completed for the formation of a separate department that will devote its energies exclusively to the making of light comedies with one of the screen's most popular light comedians, starred.

With the organization settled in its new quarters on the fifth floor of the New York Theatre Bldg. and the production forces, under the personal direction and supervision of Director King, at work in the Mirror Studios, Glendale, L. I., the initial steps have been taken by a producing organization that aims to stand as one of the foremost producers in the industry. The organization has the financial backing of one of New York's foremost financial men and the organization and producing forces are bolstered by the practical experience of men trained in every detail of marketing, exploiting and producing pictures.

The working title for the first serial is "The Lurking Peril," to be released in fifteen episodes of two reels each. The serial team of Luther and Larkin, recognized as among the most daring performers working before the camera have been given a story by one of the original serial writers for the screen, Lloyd Lonergan who will be remembered as the adaptor of Tanhauser's serial number, "The Million Dollar Mystery."

Mr. King, under whose personal direction, "The Lurking Peril" is being produced, is responsible for many successes on the screen, his latest work being a serial starring Houdini, the handcuff king. Mr. King has also produced many dramatic features, his most recent one, as yet entitled, features Florence Billings." He announces that production work will be completed in about fifteen weeks.

In the persons of Luther and Larkin, Mr. Card believes he has two of the most popular and daring serial stars on the screen. Miss Luther has only recently completed a Pathe serial titled "The Great Gamble" and Mr. Larkin "The Tiger's Trail," also a Pathe serial. Mr. Card announces that Mr. King will commence work on the second serial immediately following the shooting of the last scenes of the first. Within the next week announcement will be made of the plans formulated for a comedy company. Included in the supporting cast with Luther and Larkin are Ruth Dwyer, a recent ingenue "find"; William Betchel, one of the screen's most popular character actors and Peggy Shanor who will portray a vampire type. Production has been started at the Mirror studios.

Two More Goldwyn Authors Start West

With three productions for Eminent Authors Pictures already underway, two more of this celebrated Goldwyn group are now enroute to the Culver City studios for the next two pictures in the first series. Mary Roberts Rinehart left last week to co-operate in the production based on her novel "The Amazing Interlude." Basil King also left to O. K. the scenario script of "The Street Called Straight," based on the third of his novels that brought him international fame.

Samuel Goldwyn and Rex Beach must be given credit for a real achievement in persuading the Eminent Authors to go as far as they have in the production of their pictures. Rupert Hughes and Gertrude Atherton have already made the journey from New York to California in the new enterprise.

World Acquires Story by Poland

World Pictures has purchased from John Franklin Poland "Possession," an original story which will be made into a five reel picture to be released on the World program. It is a modern drama and the motivating theme is based on this thesis.

Novel Ideas Sought for Screen Magazine

As an indication that the New Screen Magazine, the novelty film released by the Universal Film Co., is obtaining a firm foothold on the picture loving public, Hal Hodes, editor stated this week that the patronage of of the New Screen Magazine has increased one hundred per cent since it was put under his guidance last fall. Mr. Hodes says that nothing is being left undone that can make the film as interesting as is humanly possible.

A campaign has been begun through the advertising column of the newspapers for ideas—ideas that can be worked into suitable material for the film, and persons submitting suggestions that are found to be of the sort required are being paid handsomely for their efforts.

Arrangements have also been made with prominent persons to contribute interesting bits of material. Included in the long list of contributors are Lillian Russell, Raymond Hitchcock, Madam Galli-Curci, Madam Schumann-Heink, Senor Falconi, Dame Curtsey, Senator J. Hamilton Lewis and S. Zalud.

Buyers Want Feature

Strong interest on the part of buyers has been shown in "Alma Where Do You Live," now being offered to buyers by Monopol Picture Company. Max Cohn, President of this organization has received bids for territory from the leading buyers in every sections.

"Alma Where Do You Live" presents as co-stars George Larkin, leading man in several serials, and Ruth McTammany, well known for her recent appearance in the "Red Lady," a Broadway success. It is a highly entertaining comedy drama.

Vod-a-Vil Pictures Have Many Acts

H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, the man who conceived the idea of bringing vaudeville into the motion picture houses through the medium of the screen, is keeping these one-reel novelties absolutely up-to-date by filming all the biggest acts in the vaudeville circuits.

At the present time Mr. Spanuth has in the vaults of the Commonwealth Pictures Company four hundred and eighty acts filmed ready to be assembled into Spanuth's Original Vad-A-Vil Movies. These include every variety of "stunts" which has ever been performed on the vaudeville stage.

Mr. Spanuth found out from the exhibitors that the audience especially liked the animal acts, and so he has been filming every good animal act as it comes out.

Boosts San Francisco as Picture Center

Beatriz Michelena, the Robertson-Cole star, whose pictures are distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual, is an ardent supporter of the movement to boost San Francisco as a moving picture producing center. In furtherance of this movement she recently drove to the San Francisco City Hall from her studio at San Raphael in a coach drawn by six horses and offered Mayor Rolph the use of her big studio at San Raphael for any producer to make his first picture produced in the San Francisco Bay Region. Miss Michelena said that all of her efforts would be to assist the Supervisor's and Mayor's Committee in their campaign.

Metro Star in a "Get-Rich-Quick" Role

"The Four Flusher," starring Hale Hamilton, which is Metro's last All-Star Series program picture and the precursor of the company's "fewer and better" productions policy to begin September 1, is announced for release August 18. In this production Hale Hamilton has a role described as very similar to George Randolph Chester's J. Rufus Wallingford, which the light comedian created in the international stage success, "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford."

State Right and Foreign Sales

THE sale of eight features for France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Poland, Czecho Slovakia, Jugo Slovakia, Bulgaria, Roumania, Greece and Turkey is announced by Bech, Van Siclen & Co., Inc.

The Zion Films, Inc., No. 1400 Broadway, announce the world rights sale of their picture "Khavah," by Sholom Aleichem, the Yiddish humorist, often referred to as the Jewish Mark Twain, to the National Film Distributors. Coincident with the purchase of this feature production, the National Film Distributors announce a change in the name of the picture from "Khavah" to "The Broken Barrier."

Robert W. Priest reports that "The Spoilers" reissue has been sold through the Film Market for New England to Natsam Feature Co. of Boston, Goldstein Bros.; in Missouri and Kansas to the Crescent Film Co. and for Indiana to Motion Picture Products, Chicago.

The newly formed C. C. Hite Attraction Co. has concluded a deal with Arrow Film whereby it acquires Lone Star Western Dramas, Arrow Comedies, Hank Mann Comedies and several long features. Arrow has also sold "The Masked Rider" for Ohio, Michigan, Indiana and Kentucky. A score of other sales were also made during the week.

The Simlec Film Co. of Pittsburg has bought three Pioneer productions for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, "Virtuous Sinners," "Sins of the Children" and "Atonement."

Swedish Company in Market

Biograph of Stockholm to Produce and Sell Negatives for America and Canada

IT has just been announced by the Swedish Biograph Company of Stockholm, London, Paris, that they have decided to enter the American market and sell the negative rights on their productions for United States and Canada. The preliminary steps have already been taken and plans of productions and methods of distribution have already been mapped out. It has been decided upon not to sell territorial rights, but to sell the negative rights to these features outright to both these countries, Canada and the United States.

New York offices have been opened at 220 West 42nd street, under the general management of Mr. E. Mattsson, who will attend to all the sales and general business of the company for this country. Mr. Mattsson is a well known foreign buyer and has been buying in this country for Europe for over eight years. He is widely known in this country and also the other side as being a man who knows the picture industry.

In an interview with the NEWS representative Mr. Mattsson said that the Swedish Bioscope Company will make twelve features each year, ranging from six reels to eight reels. Four of these pictures are now ready for distribution, while another feature is on the way to this country.

In making these pictures the American market has been kept in mind and stories have been picked and produced following the American idea of motion pictures.

What seems to Mr. Mattsson to be the most important factor in making pictures is the getting the best stories the world's book market affords. This idea will be carried out in every picture the company makes.

Thirty scenic pictures will be produced a year. Fifteen of these are now ready for sale in this country.

A serial is now in course of production, this serial will be hunting in Africa. The party left from Nairobi, the capital of British East Africa, and have been in the jungles four months. These negatives will be sent direct to New York, where distribution for this country and foreign rights will be sold.

The Biograph Company are the largest producers in Sweden. They also control and own a chain of theatres.

G. A. R. Aids in Putting Over Feature

Branches of the Grand Army of the Republic are greatly assisting exhibitors in putting over "Secret Service," the Paramount-Artcraft Special starring Robert Warwick, as one of the biggest attractions offered by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in some time.

In New York City several weeks ago, the various executives of the G. A. R. organization were highly enthusiastic over the manner in which Hugh Ford handled this production as well as the artistry of Robert Warwick and other members of the cast. Reports from different parts of the country, it is announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, indicate that exhibitors are finding valuable allies in the local branches of the G. A. R.

Serial Actor Injured

Floyd L. Buckley, who is appearing in the new S. L. K. Serial featuring Helen Holmes in "The Fatal Fortune" is temporarily laid up owing to a serious accident he had this week while staging a flight scene with Lieutenant Jack Levering, the leading man.

Rolfe's Productions Are "Chambers Series"

The productions made by B. A. Rolfe for A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., from stories written by Robert W. Chambers, will be known as the Robert W. Chambers series. Work has been started on the first subject, based on Mr. Chambers' story, "The Shining Band," with adaptation for the screen by Charles A. Logue.

As has already been announced, the Rolfe-Fischer combination has acquired a number of Chambers stories, and the efforts of the organiation for the immediate future will be devoted solely to the picturization of these. Charles A. Logue, who is an officer of the corporation, will convert the material into scenario form.

The producing policy of Mr. Rolfe calls for gorgeous settings and the pictures will be so invested. The Chambers stories lend themselves well to the representation of rare scenic beauty.

The cast of "The Shining Band," as of all subsequent pictures in the series, will be composed of well known players. The direction of the series is in charge of Mr. Rolfe with Chester DeVonde as associate director.

Arbuckle Moves to a New Studio

Fatty Arbuckle with his equipment and the members of his organization left the precincts of Glendale this week for Culver City, where he is now occupying a new and modern studio, which will be the scene of his future Paramount-Arbuckle activities in California.

Fatty has already begn preparatory work for his next comedy following "Back Stage," which is shortly to be released by Paramount. The new production will be rural in character.

"Fate in the Balance" for Gladys Leslie

Gladys Leslie has begun active work on her new feature, "Fate in the Balance," from the novelette by Seward W. Hopkins, published in the All Story Magazine. The picture is being made at Vitagraph's Eastern Studio in Brooklyn, under the direction of John W. Noble, who recently joined Vitagraph's staff of directors.

Simplex Notes

Thirteen Holds No Terrors for Leland

The activities of the Leland Theatre Supply House, Simplex distributors for Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, are reflected in the report received at the Simplex factory, showing thirteen Simplex machines sold in that territory during the month of July.

The theatres in which these machines were installed are as follows: Rex Theatre, Norway, Me.; New Priscilla, Lewiston, Me.; Browne's, Limestone, Me.; Albert, Berlin, N. H.; Queen, Manchester, N. H.; Star, Newmarket, N. H.; Park, Lebanon, N. H.; Opera House, Fairhaven, Vt.; four of these theatres having installed two machines each.

This record of Simplex sales in the Leland territory is an indication of the rapidly growing popularity of the Simplex. Mr. Bernays Johnson, chief of the projection division of the Westinghouse Lamp Works, is at present in the Leland territory demonstrating the new Simplex Mazda equipment.

Many demonstrations of this popular new Simplex equipment have resulted from Mr. Johnson's visit. In this territory are located numerous small communities where alternating current is used and where the use of the Simplex Mazda is especially desirable. Reports from Mr. Johnson indicate numerous orders following his demonstrations.

Washington Simplex Distributor Here

George Webster of the Webster Electric Company, better known as "Electric Webster," distributor for Simplex in Washington, D. C., western Maryland and northern Virginia, paid a brief visit to the Simplex factory this week.

He reports that contrary to previous mid-summer seasons, the present large number of Simplex sales are uninterrupted. A large Government order from the office of the United States Signal Corps has resulted through Mr. Webster's activities. And he reports that fully eighty-five percent of the District of Columbia is now Simplex.

An extensive campaign is being planned through Mr. Webster's concern, which will get under way in the early Fall, and which should result in "Simplexizing" the entire District of Columbia.

The number of "Extralite" shutters and Simplex accessories is also above normal and Mr. Webster is highly optimistic concerning the future Simplex installations in his territory.

East and West Covered by Travelogues

Variety of subjects marks the five Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release during September. The mysterious beauties of the Orient are mingled with the hustle and modernity of the Occident, so that the five subjects next month will form a month's program that will give exhibitors a diversified list of releases.

"Industry Needs Real Showmen"

Veiller Says Picture Exploitation is Inferior

JUST when the motion picture industry was feeling that the exploitation of photoplays had at last become an art, along comes Bayard Veiller, author of "Thirteenth Chair" and one of the country's best known playwrights, with the assertion that motion picture showmanship is far inferior to what it should be.

"Don't think for a minute" said Mr. Veiller, who is now in the film game himself through "The Thirteenth Chair," which Pathe is distributing, "that I look upon the screen with disdain. I don't. I consider the motion picture the greatest source of amusement in the world, and give it the full measure of praise due it.

"But I do consider that the business needs more showmen who know how to stage motion pictures and give them the fitting exhibitions they demand.

"And there won't be good showmanship in the motion picture game until full recognition is accorded the author. Here every day the legitimate stage is giving the author his just deserts. Eugene Walter's name may be seen in the electrics rather than the star of his plays. So with almost every other popular author of the day.

"Yet the motion picture exhibitor, no matter how well known the writer of the play might be, subjects him to the ignominity of no mention at all, or to such little mention as to be worthy of no attention.

"The day isn't far off—the public has realized it already when the author is going to be supreme in motion pictures. It is his efforts which first insure the production of a high class motion picture. When directors are educated to the point where they will appreciate that the author knows what he is writing about, and follows out his idea, rather than his own, the first step in the right direction will have been made.

"Then the exhibitor must reach the point where he also realizes the value of the author's name. He can spend all the money he wants wildly exploiting his pictures but unless he lets his public know the name of the author, he is going to miss out on the best bet he has for advertising purposes.

"The star helps, but what does the star avail if there is no story?

"The American public knows a good story when it sees one, and in these days they don't want bunk.

"What is the sense of an exhibitor spending his good money putting on wonderful prologues, striking musical scores, and most attractive lobby displays when, after he gets his people into the theatre, he's going to send them away dissatisfied. He isn't making a one night stand. A bush league theatrical company can get away with that kind of hookum, but the motion picture theatre owner who has to do business 365 days in the year must furnish the goods.

"And he can't furnish the goods unless he has a good story. That's where the entire situation comes back to the author.

"My advice to exhibitors is to forget the wild exploitation of pictures. Go get pictures with real stories. Then exploit your author and his story. The producers of 'The Thirteenth Chair' made a fortune with the play because they exploited it as a great mystery story. Exhibitors can well take a leaf out of the advertising system pursued by the Harris' in promoting the play, for the latter obtained results by their methods, and there is no reason why every exhibitor playing 'The Thirteenth Chair' in screen form shouldn't get the same results.

"Give the author a show. After all he's the man who really makes pictures, for without his good story no picture is worth a whoop regardless of who is playing the lead or how well it is produced.

"The play's the thing today, as it always was and always will be."

The screen version of "The Thirteenth Chair" was made by Leonce Perret, the noted French director, for the Acme Pictures Corporation, which has selected Pathe as its distributing medium. Creighton Hale, famed for his work in serial productions, and for his cleverness in feature leads, is co-starred with Yvonne Delva.

Demand for Westerns Found by Kremer

Victor Kremer, who has just returned to his Chicago headquarters after a six-weeks' tour of the Western States and Canada, reports that the demand for Western pictures is unusually strong.

"Never before has there been such an interest in first-class Western pictures," he said. "I found that almost the first question state right buyers would ask is whether I had any good Western dramas. They informed me that they are constantly besieged by exhibitors for Western plays, tales of rough riding and daring deeds with plenty of action. There seems to be a scarcity of red-blooded plays, and the public is eager for them. There also is a great demand for good comedies, especially with the Western flavor."

Mr. Kremer stated that his Westerns were eagerly snapped up everywhere throughout the Western States and in Canada.

Alexandre Herbert, of the cast of the Screen Classics, Inc. super feature, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," is playing the part he originated in the first American stage version of this drama, then produced under the title of "The White Feather."

Attention to detail both in sets and action is a prominent factor in the Robertson-Cole feature, "The Other Half," released by Exhibitors Mutual

"The Other Half" 'Superior' Film

Robertson-Cole Makes Big Claims for New Release

"THE OTHER HALF" will be released by Robertson-Cole and distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual as a Superior picture.

This bare statement is given by the producers as a guarantee of exceptional merit. In six months only two Robertson-Cole productions have been designated Superior Pictures. "The Other Half" is the third to be placed in that category.

Superior Pictures are productions that meet with a most rigid standard as to story, detail, direction and general appeal, established by critical officials of the Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors' Mutual organizations. It was the unanimous verdict of the committee that "The Other Half" met with all of those requirements.

"The Other half" was written and directed by King Vidor for Brentwood. It is described as another one of those examples of camera drama which reflects the realities of life, a fact which will contribute in no small measure to its success. Its appeal and timeliness are other factors which aided in its selection as a Superior Picture.

The production is based on a simple drama of life, the underlying theme of which is brotherhood, and its characters all ring true to human instinct. In this simple tale of love and love and royalty which fundamentally exists even between the "classes" and the "masses," there are situations as absorbing as any that may be found in the eternal triangle plays. Its big appeal lies in its simple pathos and tender love story.

The theme turns upon the subject of class distinction, the gap between the capitalist and the laborer, but never does it reach the stage of being a preachment. Four characters, two representing the one-half, the classes, and two "The Other Half," the masses, are linked together, the girls by natural feminine sympathy, and the men by the bonds of steel and blood of the trenches.

The picture is in no sense a war picture, it simply shows the effect of the hardships upon the molding of men in the industrial world. It also convincingly shows the answer to that pertinent question.

"The production is wholesome, can offer offense to none, and is just the type of picture that entertains to the extent of making an audience forget everything but the real beauty of life," declared one of the Robertson-Cole officials, in summarizing his opinion on "The Other Half."

Although no star is featured, a better cast would be hard to find, it is claimed, each fitting his or her part as though made for it; and each character is sustained almost to a point of faultlessness. However, the work of Zasu Pitts, the Jass Kid, is so unusual yet natural that one cannot fail to especially notice her. One moment she will bring a laugh to your eyes only to turn it to a tear drop the next. Florence Vidor, Charles Mederith and David Butler all help materially to prove that a well-balanced cast is superior to the individual star.

"The Other Half" is the third Robertson-Cole production, directed by King Vidor and distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual. The other two were "The Turn in the Road" and "Better Times."

Elevated to Stardom

As a reward for meritorious work in support of Montagu Love and co-starred with Earl Metcalfe in "The Battler," World Pictures has elevated Virginia Hammond, late leading woman for E. H. Sothern in many of his most prominent stage productions, to the position of a full fledged star in her own right. Her first picture to be released in which she is billed above the title of the picture is "Miss Cruso of the Chesapeake." It was written by Roy S. Sensabaugh and the continuity was furnished by J. Clarkson Miller and Frank Crane has been selected as her director. In order that nothing shall be lacking to give Miss Hammond every opportunity to please both exhibitors and patrons of picture theatres, a cast of unusual merit has been selected. The most prominent of the actors in the picture are Rod La Rocque, Albert Hart, Irving Brooks, Nora Cecil, Edwin Sturgis, W. R. Randall and Richard Taber.

"Miss Cruso of the Chesapeake" will be released on the World program September 29.

W. H. Picture a "Bolshevism Menace"

"There has been a sinister campaign of Bolshevism conducted openly and in secret for many months. The network of this destructive propaganda has been thrown over the entire world." This statement was made by U. S. Senator Myers of Montana in opening his address in favor of his resolution to bring the cost of living under control.

"Everybody's Business" is claimed by W. H. Productions the Americanism that will destroy the insidious web of Bolshevism. Everybody it is felt will want to see this thrilling 100% American melodrama.

From a propaganda standpoint the subject matter of "Everybody's Business" is of the most vital interest to everybody. It will help solve the most serious problem facing the nation today. With reference to "Everybody's Business" from a photoplay standpoint, it possesses every element to make it a phenomenal success,—mystery, thrills and romance. It contains an appeal for every individual.

As a climax, W. H. Productions Company has utilized every possibility for exploiting "Everybody's Business." It will be released on the Independent Market.

Vitagraph Has Lost Agnes Ayres

Agnes Ayres, who has appeared in many Vitagraph features, has resigned from that organization to be free to consider a number of offers she has recently received, both from motion picture and speaking stage producers.

Miss Ayres was especially successful in portraying a wide range of characters in the famous O. Henry stories, and because of her excellent work in these roles has come to be known as "The O. Henry Girl."

Chance to See a Harem

A harem, gorgeous in its regal splendor, graced the center of the Metro stage in Hollywood last week when Director Henry Otto "shot" some scenes to represent the vision that pretty May Allison has in her latest picture, "Fair and Warmer," the Avery Hopwood farce now being filmed for Screen Classics, Inc.

Olive Tell in "The Trap"

THOSE who have signed contracts for Olive Tell's latest vehicle "The Trap," will secure a picture which contains something for about every known class of movie fan.

It begins its story in Alaska, with the rough scenery, log cabins and dog trains all of which are of great interest to many people. Then the story goes to New York where dress suits and nice clothes and the society stuff has its turn and which helps a lot toward getting a picture by the feminine element. It is in the latter part of the offering that the true dramatic material is reached and there is a good twist to the picture which will satisfy those who want to do a little thinking about this screen entertainment and a regular fight for those who want melodrama. Then of course the everything comes out all right and all live happy ever after, Miss Tell with her husband who your audiences may fear will lose and Jere Austin who looks in the beginning of the picture to be the probable leading man, picking out Miss Tell's sister for a wife. Now what more can you want?

The Trap also presents some excellent advertising possibilities. It was written by two very well known authors, Richard Harding Davis famous for his novels and Jules Eckert Goodman a recognized playwright, originally as a stage play and in this fact you are assured of some true dramatic values. So far as we know this attraction in the original never broke any records on Broadway but that matters little in its present form as we do not believe that picture fans follow the career of stage plays to any great extent although they have come to realize that they are more apt to get a good photoplay which has been adapted from a play or book by a recognized author.

THIS production is in six reels, and has some real names besides that of Miss Tell. To begin with there is Talulah Bankhead who has just succeeded Constance Binney in Rachael Crothers "39 East" one of the big hits of the New York stage. Then there is Jere Austin who has made many friends in Goldwyn productions with Sidney Mason and Joseph Burke playing important roles.

Following is the detailed synopsis of "The Trap."

Up in Alaska on the Yukon river, are Henry Carson, (Joseph Burke) always looking for a goldmine and never quite finding one, and his daughter Jean, (Olive Tell), Eastern bred and a school teacher in the settlement school. In partnership with Carson in his hunt for gold is Ned Fallon (Jere Austin) while a brother of Ned's is also in the Klondike country but spends his time in the saloons and gambling halls in company with one "Doc" Sloan, (Rod La Rocque).

Both Ned and Steve Fallon (Earl Schenck) are in love with Jean with Steve being preferred by the girl in spite of the fact that his habits are not what she would wish them to be.

Ned and Carson depart on a prospecting trip, Carson's last if it is not successful and Jean is left alone to teach her school. The girl is lonely and Steve is able to persuade her to marry him, the ceremony being performed at a settlement 20 miles away and witnessed only by Doc Sloan and a resident of the town in which the marriage takes place.

BEFORE Carson and Ned return from the hills, Jean has found that her dream of happiness is over. The true character of Ned becomes known to her when he tells her in a drunken fury that he already has a wife in Seattle to whom he is going.

Jean goes back to her father's cabin and waits for his return from the hills. When Carson does come it is empty handed as has always been his luck. Shortly after Ned returns, triumphant. The claim is rich. He insists on deeding half the claim to Jean as a reward for her inspiration during his prospecting hardships. The father would welcome Ned's marriage with his daughter. He knows Ned's worthiness.

Remembering the gentle caress that came from Jean when he departed, Ned, when he returns, is hurt and troubled when the girl evades his attempts to declare his love. Finally Jean breaks down and confesses to Ned what she has done. In sorrow Ned drops his love-making, but does everything he can to assist the girl.

In the meantime Bruce Graham, a New York broker, who has come to the Klondike to attend to business matters, had become interested in the girl. His interest changes to friendship and then love. When Jean refuses his offer of marriage, he attributes her reticence in accepting his advances to timidness.

A message comes from New York announcing that Helen, Jean sister, is ill, and Jean and her father prepare to leave the Yukon at once. A few moments before they drive away on the dog sledge, Ned Fallon hears that his brother Steve had been shot in a drunken brawl in a neighboring town. Ned bids Jean farewell and goes to his brother.

In the same sledge with the Carsons is Bruce Graham, whose business in the Yukon is finished.

AFTER her arrival in New York Jean learns that her husband died following his fight. Months pass and she is about to marry Bruce Graham. She feels duty-bound to tell Graham of her affair with Steve Fallon, but he refuses to listen and lovingly declares that no man should concern himself about a woman's previous life if he loves her.

Several years pass. Jean is perfectly happy with her husband and two children. Ned Fallon has been successful with his mine and comes to New York where he opens offices, and about the same time "Doc" Sloan under an alias of "Martin" becomes acquainted with Jean's sister, Helen (Tallulah Bankhead) and with Bruce Graham.

Sloan's firts appearance at the Graham home is on the evening of a social function and it is here that he recognizes Mrs. Graham as the woman who had married Fallon in Alaska.

Sloan threatens to inform Mr. Graham if he is not allowed to continue his affair with Helen Carson and tells her that Steve Fallon did not die and that therefore she is a bigamist. He also intimates that he will implicate Ned instead of Steve as the partner of her former affair.

OVERWHELMED by the news, Jean rushes to Ned Fallon's office and learns from his lips that he, with his own hands, buried his brother Steve. Ned promises that after he has finished with Sloan, the fellow will not trouble her again.

Sloan then attempts to blackmail Ned on the fact that Ned's deeding half of his gold mine to Jean would appear very suspicious to her husband.

Sloan calls at Ned's office and receives the promise of money not to carry Jean's story to Graham. Immediately Ned arranges with a detective agency to send their best operatives to his office before Sloan is to call for the money.

Jean returns to Ned's office, arriving just before the detective. Ned rushes her through a door that opens into another corridor and tells her to go home. Instead, she listens at the door.

Soon the detective arrives and is secreted by Ned where he can overhear what transpires and be witness to the fact that Sloan has received marked bills.

SLOAN arrives and receives his money. "Easy money, Fallon," Sloan sneers, "I'll go over and see what Mrs. Graham can be persuaded to pay."

Then a fight follows in the office.

Ned locks the door through which the detective must pass to get into the office. "Look out, Kelly," calls Ned. "He's locked the door."

Sloan has come prepared for trouble and pulls a revolver. Fallon, too, is armed, and it is a question which will shoot first. Sloan pitches forward, mortally wounded. Then Fallon shoots several times to give the detective an idea that the fight is still on, and then deliberately shoots himself through the arm, that he may claim to the detective that he killed Sloan in self-defense. It is part of the plan which Fallon has made to free Jean of the danger of having her life ruined through the man who has known of her past.

"I had to do it, Kelly," Ned explains. "He winged me."

Ned Fallon is arrested and his fate is in the hands of a coroner's jury. Kelly testifies that the shooting was a clear case of self-defense.

While the trial is in progress Jean and her husband wait at home. Graham had in the meantime received inklings of a supposed affair between Jean and Ned Fallon, and when he learns of Ned's deeding half the mine to her, his anger is aroused.

AS they are gathered about waiting for the news of the trial, Jean confesses not only to her unfortunate marriage with Steve Fallon—but that it was she who had rushed into Ned's office while the fight was in progress, had picked up a pistol that had fallen to the floor, and with her own hand had shot "Doc" Sloan. Graham forgives her.

Ned is exonerated and marries Helen, Jean's sister, with whom he fell in love when he first arrived in New York.

We think we have given you a pretty good idea of what this picture is about from which you ought to be able to judge just how far you want to go in exploiting it. You have plenty of names, both in the cast and, as author's, and an adaptation to work on. These are always prime requisites for a basis of good advertising. You have something to talk about.

IN billing this picture we would surely get the title—up in big headlines with the fact that it is an adaptation of a pay of the two well-known authors coming in for second place, unless Miss Tell is especially popular with your patrons. Next will come the stars name with others of the cast, especially Jere Austin and Miss Bankhead billed large enough so their names will be noticed.

For your selling talk you want something which gives the reader an idea of what the story is about, but which does not tip them off to the plot. This is especially necessary since the first few reels of the feature do not carry any great amount of suspense, and unless a person goes into the theatre with the idea in his head that something dramatic is contained in the offering and be satisfied to wait for it, he might get disgusted and decide that "The Trap" is just another movie which meanders through six reels without its story advancing enough to make it interesting.

For the selling talk we would suggest something like this:

She was a happy wife, when out of the past two men came into her life. One threatened to end her happiness, but the other loved her more than most men are capable of loving. He cleared the way for her and found a new joy himself.

See the absorbing photoplay drama of the Alaskan Klondike and New York society, "The Trap."

Here is another:

She lived in Klondike, far from her girlhood home, and was lonely. From two lovers, brothers, she womanlike choose the unworthy for a husband and then found herself deserted. No one knew of her marriage except the worthy lover and a pal of the man she thought her husband. Then the man she had married was killed in a drunken brawl and she was free, as she supposed, so she determined to keep her past secret and when she married again she hoped to be happy. But into her life, threatening her domestic happiness and the morals of her sister, came one of the men who knew of her past. It was then that the man who had truly loved her in Alaska proved his regard. It was he who removed the menace which threatened her future and then found a new happiness for himself.

It is an absorbing story which is told in "The Trap," a six part special feature photoplay starring Olive Tell.

SUMMARY OF "THE TRAP'S" GOOD QUALITIES

A PICTURE produced from a stage play by recognized authors.
A cast headed by a well known star and several people of more than usual reputation.
A story which has a good twist in it's big scene.
An unusual diversity in locale.
A picture with a pleasant ending which will satisfy picture audiences.

Adapted from the successful stage play of Richard Harding Davis and Jules Eckert Goodman, with a strong cast of supporting players.

FOR special exploitation we would suggest the use of an unusual number of still photographs for the reason that there is an unusually wide scope to the locale of the story, and, therefore, there is not that sameness to the photographs which many features have. You will be able to show a lot of good views of the life in the Klondike in the gold fever days of the ninety's, all of which suggest plenty of action, and then when the continuity takes the characters to New York, you also have a wide range to cover. Society stuff with its clothes and dancing, modern business as it is conducted to-day, even a glimpse of a wedding are all shown in the photographs obtainable from the exchange releasing the feature.

To show these to advantage you should take pains to mount them well and not throw them together on a rough-looking board with no attempt to do anything but just place the pictures where people may look at them if they want to stop to do so.

If you were to get some mount board and arrange your stills on these artistically, and use the windows of available stores, you will be sure of getting attention for your offering. It is much easier to persuade a merchant to allow you to place a nice-looking photograph in his window than it is a lithograph, and the photograph attracts much more attention.

IN your newspaper advertising we would suggest that you by all means utilize a cut, as this is a picture with considerable action, and may be classed very nearly to melodrama. Therefore, a good descriptive cut will do a lot toward selling your picture for you.

While at this writing some weeks before the feature will be ready for the market, these exchange aids have not been prepared, but we are informed that plans are being made for some very striking scenes from the production to be placed in cut form, and that when you book the feature you will have a press book at hand from which you may select what you want.

Neilan Gathers Strong Organization

One of the most efficient producing staffs organized is under the direction of Marshall Neilan who will soon start work on his initial independent production for First National Exhibitors Circuit, "The Eternal Three," an adaptation from Randall Parrish's book, "Bob Hampton of Placer."

Paying equal attention to technical workmanship as well as direction and action, Neilan has assembled what is believed to be the stellar of all motion picture aggregations.

Lewis Stone will play the part of Bob Hampton; Marjorie Daw, leading lady for a number of stars, will portray the leading feminine role; Mahlon Hamilton who played the title role in "Daddy Long Legs" will be the third side of the triangle; Wesley Barry, the freckle-faced youth who was recently brought into favor on account of his work in "Daddy Long Legs," will be a little bad man armed with six-shooters nearly as large as himself.

Al Green will be assistant director to Mr. Neilan; Tony Gaudio and Henry Cronjager will attend to the photography; Ben Carre will be art director; "Buck" Ewing, light director; Joe Eller, superintendent of laboratory work and Ferdinand Pinney Earl, art titler.

Thanhouser Plant Made Over

Many Improvements Are Made to Fit the Producing Policy of B. A. Rolfe

B. A. ROLFE will produce his pictures in a perfectly equipped studio, as A. H. Fischer has practically made over the Thanhouser plant in New Rochelle, N. Y., which property he recently acquired by outright purchase to be the home of B. A. Rolfe Productions.

The improvements take in everything from floor to roof. The old floors of the studio have been torn up and new ones laid and the glass roofs have been covered with paint to permit the best results in photography with artificial light. A large amount of new lighting equipment has been added to the original layout and there is nothing lacking in lights that may be needed for the latest thing in effects.

The stocks of the property rooms and scenic departments have been enlarged to such an extent that practically any article in these lines required in the production of bigger pictures is now available on the premises. The dressing rooms have been largely refurnished, and new comforts have been installed for the benefit of the members of the casts. The arrangement of the administration offices has been made for the efficient co-operation of all departments.

With its improvements, the plant is now equipped to accommodate under the best of conditions the producing policy of Mr. Rolfe, who will make only the biggest features based on works of celebrated authors and enacted by casts of prominent players only. Mr. Rolfe will himself supervise the picturization of all his subjects, with Chester DeVonde as associate director.

As his initial effort Mr. Rolfe will put on a series of stories by Robert W. Chambers. The first subject by this author to be selected is "The Shining Band." Charles A. Logue made the scenario from the printed work and the story is now being converted into picture form.

Three Universals Completed

Harry Carey, Mary MacLaren and Helen Eddy Starred; Coast Studios Are Busy

"FINIS" was stamped on the production of three six-reel dramas at Universal City last week. They were "A Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie," starring Mary MacLaren; "The Rider of the Law," with Harry Carey in the title role; and "The Trembling Hour," featuring Helen Eddy and Kenneth Harlem.

"A Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie" is the name given to a story by Henry C. Rowland, well known author, which appeared in Ainslee's magazine under the title of "Auld Jeremiah." David Butler and Spottiswoode Aitken are seen in Miss MacLaren's principal supporting roles.

Kathleen O'Conner is seen for the first time as Harry Carey's leading woman in "The Eternal Savage." Others prominent in the cast are Barney Sherry, Henry von Titus. Carey wrote the story in collaboration with Jack Ford, his director.

"The Trembling Hour," originally titled "Who Knows?" was written by Kenneth B. Clark. Supporting Miss Eddy and Harlan are Henry Barrows, Willis Marks, Clyde Hopkins, Edna Shipman, Gertrude Astor and Anna May Walthall.

William C. Dowlan, who recently finished Arthur Somers Roche's mystery melodrama "Loot," is soon to start producting "Betty Reforms" by Mildred Considine. It will be staged with an all star cast.

Preparations are being made by Rollin Sturgeon director to start shooting within the week on "The Breath of the Gods," the well known Sydney McCall novel, which is to be used as the first starring vehicle for Tsuri Aoki (Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa) under her new Universal contract.

Helen Keller's Picture Soon Presented

Proving that, where they have the will, the blind may see, the deaf may hear and the dumb may talk, Helen Keller's motion picture, "Deliverance," will open at the Lyric theatre, N. Y., on August 18, for an engagement of indefinite duration.

Miss Keller herself appears as an actress in this picture. That a girl born deaf, dumb and blind should add acting to her accomplishments will not astonish those who know of Miss Keller's amazing achievements in science and literature and of her triumph in learning to speak.

George Foster Platt, who produced "The Bluebird" for Winthrop Ames at the New Theatre, directed the picture which required several months for completion. Although Miss Keller was a most responsive actress, taking many of Mr. Platt's direction by means of sound vibrations, progress was necessarily somewhat slow.

Pioneer No Longer the Agency for Parsons

Prior to leaving for the coast, William Parsons announced that his productions would no longer be released by the Pioneer Film Co. Joe Brandt who remains in the East will attend to future distribution arrangements.

Goldwyn Welcomed on Culver City Visit

Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corp., which now includes Lee Shubert and A. H. Woods on its board of directors, arrived at the Culver City studios last week after a cross-continent journey during which he read half a dozen play manuscripts with a view to selecting several for immediate production.

A wire from the coast states that Mr. Goldwyn was accorded a royal welcome and celebrated his arrival at the Culver City studios by giving a luncheon attended by two of Goldwyn's eminent authors, Rex Beach and Rupert Hughes, others associated with the organization, and staff representatives of the trade press and the local newspapers. Among those who attended were: Grace Kingsley and Edwin Schallert, Los Angeles Times; Florence Lawrence, Los Angeles Examiner; Monroe Lathrop and Henry E. Dougherty, Los Angeles Express; Jerome D. Barnum, Syracuse Post Standard; A. H. Giebler, Moving Picture World; Carl Jessen, Motion Picture News; Darwin S. Apex Wants Two-Reel Comedy Scripts

Director Cortlandt J. Van Duesen of the Apex Pictures Corporation, Indianapolis, and the scenario editor announce that they will be glad to read comedy scripts. The Apex studio is in full blast, the company specializing in two reel comedies in which no slap stick or vulgar methods will have any place. "The best are none too good," say the Apex people, who engage not to keep the authors waiting for replies and will pay promptly on acceptance.

In Gale Henry's Cast

Marie Beaudet, who played Nazimova's double in "The Red Lantern," is cast as a dancer in Gale Henry's latest comedy, the working title of which is "Dizzy Lizzie." Miss Beaudet is a most graceful person in the art of terpsichore and her ability as a dancer was commendably demonstrated in Viola Dana's recent picture "The Parisian Tigress."

Universal's Extensive Campaign

Country Wide Push to Be Given "Right to Happiness"

NO pains were spared in the production of "The Right to Happiness," and Universal announces that the same rule will be applied to the exploitation of this Jewel feature. The campaign will be on a nation-wide basis.

A good part of the large poster contract which Universal recently made is to be used in the campaign on "The Right to Happiness." Every known publicity and exploitation angle is to be utilized to the fullest extent. No expense in the selection of posters is to be spared and special features are to be employed.

Realizing that the exhibitor is the person to be considered above all others Universal will guarantee to each and every exhibitor the fullest co-operation possible. The entire publicity department, which includes twenty-six publicity men in the United States and Canada, are to be at the service of the exhibitors. All of these exploitation and publicity experts have been asked to contribute novel ideas for the exploitation of this great drama and the best ideas are to be turned over to the exhibitor.

The advertising and poster departments have been preparing material and the figures on the amount of posters given out are staggering. Although the plans of the poster department are tentative, the minimum number of posters to be used is as follows: 10,000 twenty-four sheets, 15,000 six sheets, 19,500 three sheets, 75,000 one sheets.

This is thought to be the largest poster campaign ever attempted. The plans now call for nine separate designs divided between the one sheet and ranging up to the twenty-four sheets. Two separate twenty-four sheets, three three sheets, one six sheet, and three one sheets are to be used. A large assortment of half sheets and window cards have been planned for. The majority of these posters are now on the press.

The advertising department has designed a forty-page "Exhibitors' Aid Booklet" which in itself is the most complete exploitation booklet and guide ever prepared. Starting with a foreword, this booklet, which is twelve inches by six inches in size, contains a photograph of Dorothy Phillips, the star, and Allen Holubar, the director. Scenes from each of the reels are shown in about ten of the pages, two entire pages are devoted to explaining the stronger selling points to the exhibitor, two pages are devoted to exploitation plans, two pages are given over to the reproduction of ads, and four single column cuts are reproduced, as well as three two column and one four column cut. A special and complete musical score is included and several pages are devoted to the reproduction of novel and unique lobby displays. One of the novel lobby displays will be two five foot stands, showing the contrast of the roles which Miss Phillips portrays in this production.

Universal is confident that the picture itself will be heavily booked on merit alone and that the public, after viewing the picture, will assist in its successful presentation. In this day of super-productions and great screen dramas unusual and uncommon exploitation is necessary. With no stone left unturned the Universal organization has arranged for the widest exploitation possible.

"Coming Year Will be Vital One"

Samuel Goldwyn Sounds Important Chords in Speech

THE present season is to decide who is who in the motion picture industry with respect to star and author, according to a prophecy made at a luncheon at the Goldwyn studio, Wednesday, August 6th, by Samuel Goldwn, who had just arrived from New York. The principal purpose of Mr. Goldwyn's trip to the coast and studios was to insure that he be in close touch with production conditions with respect to the new series adapted from stories by eminent authors. At the luncheon besides representatives of all trade papers and local newspapers, were Rex Beach and Rupert Hughes, who recently arrived in New York

"We are going to have big stories and big stars on the Goldwyn program and it remains to prove which will be the greatest drawing power for the screen," Mr. Goldwyn said. "The screen has proven to be the most powerful mode of expression during the recent war, but to insure that it continue as such, there must be pioneers who will bring out something new. The public has come to expect the happy ending, and producers must change this opinion, or the patronage of the theatres will suffer. D. W. Griffith did a great deal for the industry by the tragic ending of 'Broken Blossoms,' but other producers must do likewise to insure variety to the screen. For several years the exhibitors have told the producers costume plays would not draw attendance, but I believe they are wrong, and we will, during the coming season, make costume pictures."

A matter that received considerable discussion at the luncheon by practically all present, was the ghost of censorship which threatens the film industry, now that so-called reform workers have fulfilled their mission with respect to alcohol. It is prophecied they will turn their attention to the screen in order to continue to draw a living wage. In this, they will have the support of many who believe it their duty to protect the young and unsophisticated by censoring the most recently invented successful form of expression. In the discussion of this, Rex Beach suggested what was considered a most worthy plan of combating censorship. This plan was to show all sections from films that had been ordered out of productions in a given locality. A split reel could be made up of these cut-outs with appropriate titles and explanations of why the censors of a certain district had them removed, and it was the concensus of opinion that such a film would be better than a comedy, showing as it would, the unnecessary expense to the public in the maintainance of censorships, and also the fact that censors destroy the effect of a picture by removing what usually is necessary to complete the drama.

Mr. Goldwyn will remain at the coast for several weeks as will also Rex Beach. Rupert Hughes spent several days with the scenario department, and will leave for the east shortly after seeing the revised script for the first Goldwyn picture to carry his name.

Showmen Engaged by F. P.-Lasky

DURING the past few weeks the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been quietly engaging showmen of proved ability to handle the field exploitation of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures to be released under the Selective Booking Plan starting September 1st, and it has just been announced that ten of these experts are already established at the various district centers and have started to work.

Results are already coming in from the field which indicate the high caliber of the showmen engaged, who are now devoting their best energies to assist exhibitors in the presentation of the Paramount-Artcraft product. In order to have their respective organizations in smooth running order by September 1st, which starts the new year for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, these exploitation experts have commenced work on the current season's films and the results which have been heralded in the trade papers prove that this concern is actually prepared to give the exhibitor a degree of service never before reached in the distribution of films.

Although all the large centers are already covered by exploitation men at various Famous Players-Lasky branches throughout the country, this staff is by no means complete. However, by the first of September every territory regardless of size will have at its disposal the services of an exploitation man who stands ready to go right into the theatre to help the manager in putting on Paramount-Artcraft Pictures.

Large Staff Will Aid All Exhibitors in Exploitation

At the head of the Field Exploitation Department is Claude Saunders, whose engagement by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was announced several weeks ago. Mr. Saunders is considered one of the best known all-round showmen of the amusement world.

At the New York City exchange Wayland Taylor has already commenced activities. Mr. Taylor was House Manager of the Colonial Theatre, Chicago, for over a year.

In Philadelphia, Fred A. McClellan is in charge of exploitation. Mr. McClellan for eight years was booking manager of the New York Hippodrome and Luna Park.

At Pittsburgh, Mr. William H. Robson is in charge. Mr. Robson is an exploitation man of wide experience covering a period of fifteen years, during which time he has given unusual publicity to both legitimate attractions and pictures.

Walter L. Hill, known to every exhibitor in the territory handled by the Chicago Office as a live-wire exploitation man, has been placed in charge of this work there. His service to Paramount-Artcraft exhibitors has received commendation from many managers and his long training with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation exchanges makes him an ideal man for the work.

In Los Angeles Al Price, formerly Exploitation Representative at Grauman's theatre in that city, has already set a fast pace at the Famous Players-Lasky exchange.

Charles L. Winston, another expert with an established record of unusual accomplishments as a promoter of entertainment, left New York last Saturday for Denver, where he will take charge of exploitation.

Lester Thompson has been selected for Boston. Mr. Thompson was publicity man with the Ringling Brothers Circus for three years, and advance man for many legitimate attractions.

H. Wayne Pierson, another prominent manager of legitimate attractions and who has been branch manager for one of the big film organiations, takes command in Atlanta. In Kansas City, John P. Goring has started activities.

In connection with the work of the new Field Exploitation Department, Al. Lichtman, General Manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of Distribution said: "The new season will mark an epoch in the motion picture industry as regards the service of the distributor to the exhibitor. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has blazed the trail for the new conception of service to the exhibitor as it will be known during the season of 1919-20.

"The sending out of publicity and advertising material will no longer constitute the acme of service. The distributor will have to be prepared to go right into the theatre and help the manager to present an attraction.

Tucker's Production Departs from Play

"The Miracle Man" as the title was changed to read from "None Are So Blind," written and published in Munsey's Magazine in February, 1914, is the story from which George Loane Tucker has produced his photoplay masterpiece "The Miracle Man," to be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation early in September.

"It made a great appeal," said Bob Davis, editor of Munsey's, referring to the published story, "and I am sure the acted photoplay will even greater appeal to a wider audience perhaps if the story has been followed out as written."

Critics say that George M. Cohan, in making a play from the story by the same name which had quite a run several years ago, opened with the gang of crooks going directly into the Patriarch's home and in that way lost much of the story's finer appeal in the transition of the characters from the slum ideals to the high and lofty frame of minds they eventually assimilate.

"The Miracle Man," as George Loane Tucker has produced it, does not open this way. The original story is followed out in detail, under the careful directorship of its maker.

Exhibitors Travel for a Showing

Come to New York for Pre-Release View of Feature

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON and Eltinge F. Warner's first of the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., productions, "Desert Gold," generally understood in the industry in advance of release to be an unusually large and powerful production, has stimulated exhibitor interest to the point where powerful first-run factors from other cities have come to New York to see it instead of waiting till prints reach the Hodkinson managers in the Pathe branches.

"Desert Gold" is broadly announced as being a picture with which W. W. Hodkinson challenges the industry by offering to match it against any production that any other producer has in reserve as his opening picture for the new season under single picture selling standards.

Prints of "Desert Gold" are now being completed in the New York laboratories and will be shipped during the present week to the thirty Hodkinson managers. Through the medium of advance showings made in New York at exhibitor request first-runs have been booked on this production in a dozen or more of the larger cities of the country and Zane Grey's most powerful picture will be matched against the biggest picture of other companies in the majority of those cities for a show-down test of power and popularity with the public.

"Desert Gold," like the first of the Benjamin B. Hampton-Great Authors productions, "The Westerners," from the famous novel by Stewart Edward White, is all-star and is what its producer and distributor term a "hand-made" production. It has been in the making since last January, with Zane Grey aiding Mr. Hampton in the original continuity, with Mr. Grey present during all the photographic stages, and has an excellent cast.

Billie Rhodes, who has a congenial role in the Hodkinson feature, "The Blue Bonnet"

It is headed by E. K. Lincoln as Fighting Dick Gale, a role that demands test after test of this artist's talents. Margery Wilson wins new laurels as Mercedes Castenada, Eileen Percy lends unusual charm to the colorful role of Nell Burton. Other noteworthy performances are contributed by Ed E. Coxen as Captain Thorne, Russell Simpson, featured player of Rex Beach's "The Brand," as Jonas Warren and later as Ladd, the cowboy, and Walter Long, heaviest of heavies, sets a new mark for villainy as Rojas, the bandit.

W. Lawson Butt gives a finished performance in the role of the faithful Yaquin, while William Bainbridge, former Indian fighter and scout, acts with realism the part of Belding, the rancher. Others in the cast are Arthur Morrison and Frank Brownlee.

"Desert Gold" will be released early in September.

Long Time Contract

Despite the fact that he was already under contract for a year with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and that only six months of the contract had expired, Monte Blue, the young leading man, made a new agreement this week which bonds him to the organization for the next five years.

Clergy Approves First National Offering

Preliminary to the showing of "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian and of which First National Exhibitors' Circuit is the official distributor at the Strand Theatre, Canton, Ohio, an advance showing of the film was held before city executives and the ministry of that city. High praise directed toward the picture by Mayor C. E. Porrman, and a score of ministers appeared in the Canton press with good box office results for the Strand.

Bern with Hodkinson

Paul Bern, one of the best known and most capable technical men in motion pictures, has joined the W. W. Hodkinson organization as its technical representative at the Republic Laboratories where all of the Eastern printing of Hodkinson productions is done.

"Everybody's Business" to Have Wide Campaign

"Everybody's Business," which W. H. Productions Company is to release very shortly, will have a remarkable exploitation campaign.

Every Governor, Senator, Congressman, Mayor and other public officials, Civic Societies and the most prominent fraternal organizations will all co-operate with the exhibitors in putting over "Everybody's Business."

H. C. Witwer, one of America's a twenty thousand word novelization most popular writers, has just finished of the story suggested by the photoplay. This is claimed to be the first time in the history of the industry where an author has developed a story of this nature from a motion picture. It is an extraordinary story in many ways. In fact, one of the most prominent book publishers has offered Mr. Witwer an exceptional publishing proposition for the privilege of the book rights, but W. H. Productions Company has already arranged for a broader circulation of the story. It will be released in supplement magazine form by the leading Sunday newspapers in the larger cities and it will be released serially in the other newspapers in the smaller towns with extraordinary preliminary advertising.

Unusual Long Booking Contracts

First "Big Four" Picture Argument for "Single" Booking

THAT exhibitors have responded in an unprecedented manner to United Artists Corporation's single picture booking policy has been stated in that company's announcements repeatedly and an array of facts made public by Hiram Abrams this week demonstrates, in no uncertain way, that the theatres of the country by the most substantial form of endorsement are back of the "Big Four's" sales policy.

As was announced some weeks ago, "His Majesty, the American," had been selected by the management of the Capitol theatre, New York, Broadway's big new show house, as its opening attraction. The Loew and Fox circuits are also booked, and a host of individual houses throughout the metropolis have the picture booked.

In Chicago, the Woodlawn, Riviera and Central Park theatres will play a simultaneous first run of one week, to be followed by a second run of two weeks at the Castle theatre. In addition, circuit and independent theatres throughout Chicago have booked the picture for runs of various lengths.

Philadelphia will open with a two weeks' run at the Stanley theatre, to be followed by a week's run at the Palace, Strand, Franklin, Locust, Logan the Colonial theatres, with shorter runs in a big number of other houses.

Washington, D. C., will have a one-week run simultaneously at the Columbia and Palace theatres. Boston, Mass., will open the picture with a run of at least three weeks at the Park theatre. The Clemmer theatre in Seattle will also show the new picture for a three weeks' run.

The California theatre, San Francisco, will run two weeks; the Portola, Princess and Wigwam theatres in the same city will run one week each; the California in Los Angeles will run the picture two weeks; American theatre, Oakland, Cal., one week; U. C. theatre, Berkeley, Cal., one week; T. & D. theatre, Sacramento, Cal., one week; Liberty theatre, Fresno, Cal., one week; T. & D. theatre, Stockton, Cal., one week; Majestic theatre, Portland, Oregon, one week; Rex theatre, Seattle, Wash., one week; Little theatre, Seattle, Wash., one week; Rialto theatre, Tacoma, Wash., ten days; American theatre, Butte, Montana, one week; Imperial theatre, Great Falls, Montana, one week.

Booking Records Going by Board

Fox Attractions Are Creating Marks Over Country

REPORTS of the booking activities received at the home offices of Fox Film Corporation on the latest big special productions distributed through the Fox exchanges throughout the country are setting records for continuous runs and exceptional business never before dreamed of by producers of motion pictures even less than one year ago.

During the past twenty-four hours reports by wire and special delivery have brought news to the Fox offices which proves the position which Fox screen entertainments occupy in the estimation of the biggest of the country's exhibitors.

Not to any one of the feature productions is this record confined, but it covers the three super-features, "Rough Riding Romance," "Checkers" and "Wolves of the Night," for runs that are phenomenal in many of the biggest cities of the United States.

The mots remarkable thing about the demand which the Fox organization is experiencing is the concrete fact that it is the exhibitors who are back of it themselves. Hundreds of telegrams are flooding the booking offices of the producer from theatre owners and managers of all sizes and classes of theatres in towns which range in population from 5,000 to five million.

Figures which are being compiled at the Fox offices as fast as totals can be arrived at in the accounting department portend the greatest and most successful pictorial season ever enjoyed by the Fox company, and the enormity of the work has necessitated the doubling of the clerical force which has been regularly engaged with the recording of the sales, which have increased to an unusual extent.

In Springfield, Ohio, a city which has up to this time been known as a three-day stand, has demanded "Checkers" for a whole week, a thing heretofore unheard of. In Fresno, Calif., where the biggest and best of pictures has never played over two days at the most, "Wolves of the Night" and "Rough Riding Romance" has been closed with Fox for five solid days, another record.

Art Students Act with Doris Kenyon

Assembling a flock of extras, which to the motion picture producers has become almost as great a problem as hiring chorus girls for musical comedies, proved anything but a difficult task for Theodore C. Deitrich and Arthur F. Beck, sponsors for "The Bandbox," the first of the Louis Joseph Vance series of super-productions starring Doris Kenyon to be released by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

When Miss Kenyon and her company arrived at Lake Mohegan to enact some of the earlier scenes in "The Bandbox" there was quite a flurry of excitement among the summer vacationists. Among the sojourners at the watering place were twenty-two girls, students at Pittsburg art school, who were chaperoned by their principal and several other teachers.

At the star's request, Director R. William Neill invited the embryo artists to accompany the players on location to view the scene taking. The students were enthralled and soon Miss Kenyon and the director were besieged by their guests with requests for an opportunity to be photographed with the star, and just at a time when Mr. Deitrich was on the point of wiring Mr. Beck in New York to rush twenty extras up to Lake Mohegan for two days' work.

Fox Breaks Some Booking Records

for twenty straight days' booking on all the big special productions for this season, while downtown in Cleveland, William Farnum in "Wolves of the Night" and Tom Mix in "Rough Riding Romance" are contracted for a whole week to run at the same time.

The mark which has been set in Washington when Harry Crandall of the Metropolitan theatre, in that city, closed on all Fox specials for a solid week run of each, is the greatest achievement of the season.

The entire Ascher Circuit throughout the Chicago territory has booked up solid for all the Fox productions which options for extensions on runs which vary from three days to fourteen, and exhibitors are still demanding first and second runs.

Everywhere records are being broken it is claimed and new ones established by the Fox special productions for the season of 1919-20.

Big Chance for Free-Lancers

Vice-President of Educational Finds an Increasing Dearth of Good Scenics

"THERE is undoubtedly a pronounced shortage of good scenic and single-reel material—on both sides of the Atlantic," says Vice President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America. "The European market affords hardly one reel in fifty that measures up to the Educational standards for distribution in this country, although this is to be expected when it is remembered that European production has been at a standstill since 1914.

"The surprising feature of the shortage of scenic film is the lack of good offerings by free-lance photographers in this country," states Mr. Hammons. "Never before in the history of the Educational organization has there been such a collection of mediocre subjects offered on the open market as in recent months, nor has the lack of quality been more noticeable. Were it not for the fact that Educational depends almost entirely on its own directors and cameramen, the present situation would be keenly felt.

"Our experience with the Robert C. Bruce scenics offers a concrete example of our viewpoint," continues Mr. Hammons. "The Bruce pictures have been a feature of the Educational program for more than five years. Eighty of the subjects have been released, and the first one is still booking. But we have been very sure, each season, that we have shown a decided improvement over every previous series. We have left nothing undone that would result in a "sprucing-up" of the newest releases, and there has been a keen satisfaction in knowing that the pictures released this year are far superior to the early subjects.

"And yet, the current offerings of the free lance photographers can only be compared with the subjects of several years ago. The only conclusion to be drawn is that the free lance photographer has not kept abreast with the times. In our office conferences, we have become convinced that it is the succession of eighty Bruce releases that is our greatest asset. The experience that we have gained is invaluable, and we are very certain that there is no royal road to the quick and easy production of a modern scenic picture."

Five Briggs Comics in Month

September Marks Release of Quintet of Amusing "Skinny" Productions

SEPTEMBER will see the release of the first five of the widely-acclaimed Paramount-Briggs Comedies, one-reel subjects based on the stories told in the cartoons of Briggs in the New York Tribune and nearly 500 other newspapers throughout the country.

The releasing of these comedies will be coincident with the completion of a most comprehensive array of publicity and advertising aids for exhibitors, so that when the first Paramount-Briggs Comedy is given to the trade August 31st exhibitors throughout the country will be in a position to exploit it to the limit.

The first of the comedies to be released is "New Folks In Town." This is the production which will introduce to the screen Brigg's famous boy character, Skinny, hero of thousands of cartoons in newspapers all over the country. Skinny is played by Johnny Carr, in whom, it is said, screen fans will find a new comedian of a unique type.

The second release will be "Skinny, School and Scandal," in which Skinny, by overhearing a conversation while riding on the back of the carriage of the chairman of the school board, uncovers a plot to have his teacher removed and have the chairman's niece put over the class in her stead.

"S'pries Party 'n' Ever'thing" is the title of the third Paramount-Briggs Comedy release, while "A Rainy Day" is the fourth release.

The fifth Paramount-Briggs release next month is "Fotygraft Gallery," an amusing picture of the old-fashioned photographer's shop, with its horribly stiff poses and its torturing methods.

Artistry in "Gray Horizon"

"Picture Gives Suggestions of Value to Artist," Declares One of the Craft

THE artistic detail in "The Gray Horizon" is considered to be so good that an artist, Mr. Ward Traver, was asked to pass criticism on it. Mr. Traver is a noted portrait painter, and many of his paintings have been exhibited in New York and other large cities. Some of America's most prominent people have sat for Mr. Traver. Among some of his best works are "Peace at Sunset" and a series of moonlight reveries.

"'The Gray Horizon,' the Robertson-Cole production, distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual, proves conclusively that a picture may have sufficient artistic merit to attract and even give suggestions to artists." "Some of the scenes showed remarkable lighting effects, artistic and true in every detail," commented Mr. Traver. "Suggestions along these lines are often of considerable value to the artist.

"'The Gray Horizon' is the work of an artist. The art director showed an intimate knowledge of pictorial values in photographing naturne's beauty. Productions of this order do much toward educating the public to the real value and beauty of art.

"The camera is in many instances as capable of expression as the brush. Though it cannot bring out life colors other than in graduated tones of black and white, it is especially sensitive to light rays and the clever manipulation of them on interior sets has led to some really astonishing and beautiful effects."

Sessue Hayakawa is starred in "The Gray Horizon," which is a Robertson-Cole production distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual.

Features of the Day in Kinograms

Kinograms in it latest release offers to the exhibitor the most interesting list of subjects so far presented by this news weekly.

The most prominent feature of the current issue is "With the Turks at Gallipoli." These pictures have just been released by the Allied Censors and were taken from confiscated archives of enemy to show the operation of the Turks on this famous peninsula, where if the Allies had only known it, 24 hours more would have seen the capture of Constantinople.

Another interesting subject is furnished by Canada where pictures of one thousand interned German seaman and citizens are put aboard ship and sent back overseas from the port of Quebec.

The strike in Brooklyn offers interest. The entire phase of this labor trouble is shown. All the different methods of transportation are being employed and they are very interesting to say the least.

Just how the government is going to reduce the high cost of living is offered through scenes in the great government warehouses where army groceries are to be sent out to big centers of population and sold to our citizens at actual cost.

Jos. F. Poland, Author, Universal Picture

In a recent review of "The Spitfire of Seville," the Universal feature, credit was given Waldemar Young for the scenario, but inadvertantly Joseph Franklin Poland was not credited with having written the original story.

Minstrel Fun Lives Again in Pictures

The black faced comedy handed out by the old time minstrel men, will live on the screen through the efforts of Mark M. Dintenfass.

Mr. Dintenfass has been busy for several months in his studios in Jacksonville, Florida, producing a series of twelve two-reel comedies. Six of them will be white face, and six will be this ever popular blackface comedy. Five of these pictures are now ready, the fifth having been completed early this week.

As a test, the first four releases were recently shown in a large theatre before paying audiences who were unconcious of the fact that they were being used as judges. There were also present by special invitation several of the best known producers and distributors of pictures. And Mr. Dintenfass' faith in his idea was justified. The white face comedies were well received, by both audience and professionals, receiving a very good hand indeed from the former, but the blackface pictures were given an endorsement that was genuninely enthusiastic —the real honest to Jasper applause that comes spontaneously and irresistably from an audience that is really delighted.

Mr. Dintenfass announces that the comedies will be released once a month, beginning early in September, but states that he has not yet accepted any of the offers received from distributing organizations. As soon as he does so announcement will be made.

Two Canyon Companies Are at Work

Very successful progress has been made by the two companies of the Canyon Pictures Corporation, the new producing organization perfected by Colonel Wm. H. Selig, which is now making pictures at the Selig Zoo studio in east Los Angeles.

The second producing unit began work this week on the filming of an animal serial which will have Juanita Hansen and George Chesebro in the leading parts. E. A. Martin who produced a number of pictures for the Selig Company several years ago will be the director. The other producing unit headed by Franklyn Farnum, who has Luella Maxam as leading woman, is now on the fourth two-reel western subject to be made.

Colonel Selig has been at the studios since several weeks prior to beginning of production, and plans to remain here for several weeks more, personally supervising the making of these films.

Former Bandit Writes as Well as Acts

It will undoubtedly interest exhibitors to know that many of the prominent newspapers throughout the country are now running the Al Jennings series of stories under the name of O. Henry and Al Jennings.

In addition to this, it is Mr. Jenning's intention to start immediately producing a new series of O. Henry—Al Jennings pictures which will furnish the public with facts governing the exprinces of both men heretofore only dealt with in a general way in story form and never screened.

Seek Exhibitors' Play Types

Goldwyn to Be Guided by Theatre Men in Selecting Kind of Plays in Demand

IN every possible way, the Goldwyn Pictures Corp., now entering on a greatly enlarged sphere of activities, with a capitalization of twenty million dollars and the active co-operation of the Shuberts, A. H. Woods and the Selwyns, is trying to find out exactly what the exhibitor wants, which in the final analysis means giving the public what it wants.

With the vast supply of material available for Goldwyn, through the works of the Eminent Authors and the innumerable stage plays, rights to which have been secured by reason of the affiliation with the three powerful theatrical producers, there is no question about Goldwyn's ability to furnish any type of photoplay that is in demand —drama, melodrama, comedy or farce.

At the present time, Samuel Goldwyn and other officials of the organization are sifting out the play scripts that seem to offer the best screen possibilities; but further than that, in order to make certain that the stories are of the kind that will find a ready market, Goldwyn is anxious to receive expressions of opinion from exhibitors. In view of the great expenditure planned that the plays may be given the best possible production, every precaution is being taken against making an outlay on subjects that are not popular.

The best way of ascertaining the public taste appears to be through the exhibitor, who is in direct contact with the great body of picture fans and knows from actual experience what draws and what does not. When reports from exhibitors are tabulated and an average of opinion struck, Goldwyn will be influenced by it to a considerable degree in the selection of plays to be picturized during the next year.

It is recognized that tastes differ in various sections of the country and even in different theatres in the same locality; but the replies will at least serve as a guide which will assist Goldwyn executives in supplying a correct proportion of drama, comedy and farce.

Exhibitors are not asked to generalize about the needs of the motion picture business; rather each exhibitor is urged to express his individual requirements.

Two Circuits Book Feature

"The Thirteenth Chair," Pathe Release in the U. B. O. and Fox Houses

THE New York exchange of Pathe has just closed two of the biggest contracts ever signed for a motion picture in this territory when the United Booking Office and the Fox Circuit booked "The Thirteenth Chair," the Acme Pictures Corporation special, for a total of 110 days.

These contracts were closed by Assistant Manager and City Salesman John J. Dacey, and is one of the biggest sales ever made by a Pathe exchange on a single picture.

Every house of importance in these two big circuits, featuring motion pictures, are included in the theatres which will play "The Thirteenth Chair."

Because of the drawing power of the Bayard Veiller success as a stage production in New York, exhibitors in this territory are extremely eager to arrange dates on the screen version, and already Pathe's New York exchange has arranged solid bookings on nine prints.

Extra prints on "The Thirteenth Chair" will have to be allotted the Metropolitan Exchange, the demand for the attraction is so great. Pathe expected a record breaking call from exhibitors for the Veiller success, which ran as a stage offering in New York for more than a year, but its fondest expectations seem ready to be surpassed.

Not only in the New York exchange booking the picture heavily, but every other Pathe branch reports a similar demand for the special feature, which will be released in six reels. The fame of the play has reached every nook and corner of the country, and, unlike the film versions of many successful New York stage productions, the call for "The Thirteenth Chair" is not centralized in the larger communities.

Demand Reported Big on "Pagan God"

The popularity of H. B. Warner as a box-office attraction is again being demonstrated by the advance booking reports on "The Pagan God" received from the Exhibitors' Mutual Exchanges by Robertson-Cole. The success of his first production, "The Man Who Turned White," has resulted in increased demands for "The Pagan God," the second Superior Picture.

"The Pagan God" is only the second production to be designated as a Superior Picture by Robertson-Cole and especial efforts have been made to help the exhibitors put it across "big."

Wounded Ex-Comedian Back in Harness

With a German machine-gun bullet still imbedded in his right shoulder, but otherwise none the worst for his experience in France, Sid Smith, motion picture comedian, has joined Bulls-Eye. Smith is one of twelve ex-soldiers employed in the Bulls-Eye studios. Four of the ex-service men have either been wounded or gassed. All but one have seen active service overseas, according to Nat Spitzer, studio manager. Smith is well known in the industry, having appeared in Sunshine, Sennett, and Keystone comedies.

Lew Cody Productions Is Organized

One of the most interesting announcements that have come out of Los Angeles in many moons has been made by Louis J. Gasnier, the producer, who has created a new company called Lew Cody Productions, to star the actor in a series of society satires which will be neither dramatic nor comic entities, but will contain a bit of both, with emphasis on the Shavian subtlety and wit for the screen expression of which Gasnier and Cody are striving.

The films, which are to be five- and six-reel features, to be independently released, will be made at Glendale, California, a few miles from Los Angeles, where the Louis J. Gasnier-Astra plant is located.

Though at first it was planned to build Lew Cody a $1,000,000 studio in Hollywood or Los Angeles, this plan has been abandoned in favor of enlarging and improving the present Gasnier studios, which will house five producing units within a short time, it is understood.

S. E. Schlager has been appointed Mr. Cody's personal press representative and public director of the Astra enterprises.

The first film will be "The Pleasant Devil," originally written by Stephen Fox, Jr., and translated into screen form by Cody and Gasnier in collaboration. The camera work is in charge of Joseph DuBray, former head of the Pathe cinematographic corps.

"Cheat" Released by Pathe August 24

Another Albert Capellani production heads the list of Pathe releases for the week of August 24th, when "The Love Cheat" featuring June Caprice and Crighton Hale, will be issued.

This production was made from an adaptation of the French comedy, "Le Danseur Inconnu" which was a sensation on the Parisian stage a few years ago.

June Caprice as Louise Gordon and Creighton Hale as Henry Calvin are accorded most fitting roles and their delineations are enhanced by the contributions of their supports, among whom are Edward Davis, Alfred Hickman and Charles Coleman.

Fischer Offices Moved

A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., the company recently formed by A. H. Fischer, B. A. Rolfe and Charles A. Logue, has formally taken possession of the Thanhouser studios, New Rochelle, N. Y., lately purchased by Mr. Fischer, and has moved its offices there from the former quarters at 18 East 41st street, New York. Besides being the home for the B. A. Rolfe productions, all of the company's affairs are now being administered from the studio offices.

The personnel of the organization remains practically intact with the change of quarters. Charles G. Stewart is studio manager; Carey Wilson, office manager; Harry H. Poppe, in charge of advertising and publicity.

World Pictures has secured the services of David G. Fischer to direct the picturization of "Dad's Girl," a play which had considerable vogue.

Abrahamson's Drama Is Given Showing

"Someone Must Pay," Ivan Abramson's new photodrama, was screened before a select body of exchange men, some of whom traveled over three thousand miles in order to be present at the private showing.

That all were highly satisfied with the result attained by Director Abramson is attested to by the movement represented to market all of Abramson Graphic productions on a most unique plan, the nature of which has not yet been divulged.

Charles Rosenthal, Jr., representing his firm, the M. & R. Feature Film Exchange of San Francisco and Los Angeles, and who, it is rumored, has just launched a one million dollar amusement corporation on the coast, spoke in eulogistic terms of Mr. Abramson's past and drew a glowing picture of the future in store for the author-director.

The picture will be ready for release early in September.

Satirical News Weekly Starts Operations

On Monday, August 4th another company began operations in Hollywood on what promises to be one of the film novelty hits of the year. The new venture is sponsored by the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, which will distribute the first release about September first. The attraction, which will be marketed in one-reel, will be known as the "Weakly Indigestion"—a comic news weekly satirizing current events. A. Lincoln Miller, a short story writer of Los Angeles, who is also the nephew of Joaquin Miller, poet laureate of the Sierras, conceived and will personally direct the "weakly," which will be filmed in the Bulls-Eye comedies studios.

According to Mr. Miller about eight news items, will be picturized in a humorous manner for each reel. The novelty will have a wide range of appeal, as only newspaper and magazine items of national importance will be burlesqued.

First Art-o-Graph Releases Announced

The Art-o-graf Film Company of Denver, Colorado, was organied and incorporated November 2nd, 1918, but owing to the war and influenza epidemic, did not start actual filming of pictures until May, 1919. The President and Managing Director is Otis B. Thayer.

The first picture of the company, "Miss Arizona," a five-reel feature, is now being sold on states rights and is distributed by the Arrow Film Corporation, New York.

The next picture, a super-feature in seven reels; a melo-dramatic states rights feature, showing a struggle between a set of Bolshevist Financial Wolves of Wall Street and a 100 per cent. American with Edmund Cobb as "lead," and entitled, "The Wolves in Wall Street," has been completed.

To follow "The Wolves in Wall Street," "The Last of the Open Range," in not less than six reels, is now being filmed in the mountains at Steamboat Springs, Colorado.

Real Life Characters Appeal

Robertson-Cole Official Says Public Wants Elemental, Not Polished Types

"THE remarkable success of some of the recent productions such as 'Better Times,' 'The Turn in the Road,' 'The Man Who Turned White' is due largely to the fact that they are stories of elemental life," declared an official of the Robertson-Cole organization, which concern is distributing them through Exhibitors' Mutual. "The characters are untainted with lacquered social polish. They are the original types just as we are beneath the surface. Their actions are undisguised and easily understandable."

"The popularity of these elemental pictures is increasing day by day. Exhibitors will tell you that the motion picturing going public is tired of society dramas unless they are of exceptional merit. Instinctively people are turning back to the stories of simple life, stories of real unvarnished characters with their laughs, tears and heart throbs.

"A motion picture audience does not have to stop and think at why the characters do things in pictures of this type. Instead they settle back and thoroughly enjoy the entertainment just as it progresses. It is a better feeling and satisfied audience which leaves the theatre.

"It was the simple, elemental drama that established the reputation of D. W. Griffith, and as 'The Telegraph' states King Vidor is on the fair road to similar fame if he continues the work he has done in directing 'Better Times' and 'The Turn in the Road.' Robertson-Cole expect to release many pictures laid either in small or Western towns in this country and in the middle and lower classes of foreign countries in order to supply the increasing demand for pictures that are 'bits of life.'"

"Sahara" Is Being Booked Into the Largest Houses for Long Time Runs

CHARLES H. MILES and Managing Director Tom Eland, the forces behind Detroit's popular Majestic theatre, paid signal tribute this week to J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, popular Louise Glaum production, "Sahara," by booking it for a two weeks' run at that house in advance of the release of the first United Artists' Fairbanks picture, for which the Majestic holds the franchise. During the coming year the Majestic is enlarging its hold upon the affections of the Detroit public by planning the biggest attractions throughout the season ever held exclusively by any one theatre in Michigan.

"Sahara" is to have the distinctive and individual exploitation and presentation that are characteristic of Detroit's best liked theatre. Manager Eland has ordered special sets for the house and his musical director will offer "Sahara" with a special prelude requiring two weeks of rehearsal before rendition.

As indicating the faith of Mr. Miles and his executives in "Sahara," announcement is made by the Hodkinson organization, distributors of this popular production, that it has been booked for the Miles Detroit circuit and will have quick second-run presentation after the Majestic in the Miles Regent.

Another important first-run presentation of "Sahara" was arranged for the week of August 18, when Robert Larsen, general manager of B. F. Keith's Boston theatre, and Charles Harris, his right hand ally, booked "Sahara" for the period that inaugurates the new fall season in the theatres of New England's chief city.

Simultaneously in Providence Charles H. Williams is offering "Sahara" at the Strand.

Goldwyn to Extend Its Service Plans

In accord with the policy of strengthening the service idea in every department, Goldwyn Pictures Corp. is perfecting a plan whereby the sales exploitation, advertising and publicity departments will act in the closest harmony, not only in putting over a picture after it has been booked, but in aiding exhibitors to get films peculiarly adapted to their theaters. It is recognized that a production may go big in one town and be disappointing in another, because of different conditions and in spite of exploitation aids.

Goldwyn salesmen are being instructed that their duty goes further than merely booking a picture. They are expected to know the special requirements of the exhibitor with whom they are doing business, and see to it that he receives the Goldwyn picture most likely to make money in that particular theater.

First Move in National Ad Campaign

Goldwyn's first move in the great national advertising campaign designed for the benefit of exhibitors showing Goldwyn Pictures, is the placing of billboards in all parts of the country. By August 15th hundreds of Goldwyn billboards will be in position; contracts call for a large addition to the number by September 15th and ensuing months will bring a steady increase in the display that is planned to cover the United States as it never before has been covered by a producing organization.

Each billboard will show the likeness of one of the seven eminent authors—Rex Beach, Gertrude Atherton, Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Gouverneur Morris, Basil King and Leroy Scott—and one Goldwyn star, Geraldine Farrar, Madge Kennedy, Tom Moore, Mabel Normand, or Will Rogers.

The Youngest Director

Jack White, whose engagement by Henry Lehrman to direct forthcoming Lehrman Comedies has just been announced, is said to be the youngest motion picture director in the United States and his claim to fame is further enhanced by the fact that he has already been directing for three years, or since he was eighteen years of age. Closely following his twenty-first birthday he was selected to take charge of the filming of the initial Lehrman comedy for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and is now selecting his cast preparatory to beginning work under Mr. Lehrman's supervision.

S-L Film in Capitol

"Virtuous Men," the S-L production, opened at Poli's theatre, Washington, D. C., on August 10th for an indefinite run. According to H. E. Coffey, manager of the Empire Film Distributing Co., which organization is handling the picture for this territory, "Virtuous Men" played to capacity at the opening performance in Washington. During the present week the picture is attracting large crowds to the theatre.

Gladys Leslie, Vitagraph, in an emotional moment in "The Girl-Woman"

Mildred Chaplin Will Rest Until Fall

Mildred Harris Chaplin, wife of the famous movie comedian, has entirely recovered from her serious illness following the birth and death of her first born. For days following the arrival of her baby she hovered between life and death, and so critical was her condition, that the news of the death of her 72-hour old baby was kept from her as long as possible.

Mrs. Chaplin is going to Catalina Island off the coast of California to gain the complete rest necessary for the picture work she is to undertake in the Fall under the management of Louis B. Mayer. She will make the trip from Los Angeles to the Island on one of the airships of her husband's recently established aerial line.

Deitrich Finishing Up "The Bandbox"

Deitrich-Bock, Inc., is in the final stages of production of its first Doris Kenyon production, "The Bandbox," a screening of Louis Joseph Vance's noteworthy mystery melodrama which in its book form was the biggest selling success of this author. "The Bandbox" is fast, staccato melodrama with more action compressed in it than one usually encounters in a complete book, an exciting magazine serial story or a multi-episode screen serial. It has been directed by R. William Neill, who recently completed a big special production, "The Career of Katherine Bush" from Elinor Glyn's story.

Pre-Release of a Vita.

Corinne Griffith's newest Vitagraph feature, "The Bramble Bush" is now nearing release, in fact it is having a pre-release showing this week at Loew's New York theatre.

"The Bramble Bush" was adapted from the story by Nalbro Bartley and was filmed under the direction of Tom Terriss. In the splendid supporting cast are Julia Swayne Gordon, Constance Beaumar, Denton Vane, Frank Mills, Robert Frazer, F. W. Smith, Jane Jennings and Jane King.

Miss Griffith is now at work on "The Climbers," a picture version of the late Clyde Fitch's play of the same name made famous more than fifteen years ago by Amelia Bingham.

Lubin Off on Trip to Coast

S-L Executive on Return in September to Make Important Plan Announcement

HERBERT LUBIN, one of the executives of S-L Pictures, will leave New York this week upon the first lap of a journey which will bring him to Los Angeles within the next three weeks. He will stop en route at Chicago, Kansas, Houston and Dallas. Prior to his departure Mr. Lubin announced that matters of great import concerning S-L Pictures were taking him west and strongly intimated that upon his return to New York shortly after the first of September he would be ready to divulge for publication several plans for the organization of two important production companies, of which Arthur H. Sawyer and himself will be leading factors. The success attained by Herbert Lubin since his advent in New York a few years ago has been little short of phenomenal.

In the brief period of his activities in the film field in New York he has been responsible, with Arthur H. Sawyer, for the organization of S-L Pictures, one of the biggest of the independent feature producers, instrumental in the formation of the Petrova Picture Company, and more latterly has been responsible for the negotiation of the contract whereby Mary Miles Minter becomes one of the highest salaried stars of the film firmament.

Before his departure Lubin stated that the affairs of the S-L organization are in particularly healthy condition, "Virtuous Men," the initial special production sponsored by this company, having proved one of the state right successes of the present year During his absence from the New York offices, Arthur H. Sawyer will look after the affairs of the company, returning this week from an extended vacation in Maine to take up the executive reins, while Lubin undertakes the consummation of the big plans contemplated in connection with S-L pictures for the coming season.

Begin Work on Mayer Studio

Ground Broken for Plant Which Will Cost Approximately a Quarter Million

GROUND was broken this week for the new Mayer Productions Studio, which is being built in Los Angeles by Louis B. Mayer and Col. William Selig. The studio will cost approximately a quarter of a million dollars, and the location is far away from the section known as the studio zone in Hollywood.

The studio will be used for the making of the greater part of the Louis B. Mayer productions, including those of Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin, who are under Mr. Mayer's management. Present plans call for its completion sometime in October, and it promises to be one of the finest and best equipped studios on the west coast. Some idea of its magnitude may be gained from the size of the stages, of which there will be four, two dark stages and two open stages. One of the dark stages will be 80 by 200 feet and the other 80 by 175 feet. The two open stages will be each 80 by 150 feet with 26 feet in the clear.

In addition to the studio proper, there will be a huge administration building, and two delightful bungalows, one for Miss Stewart, and the other for Mildred Harris Chaplin. The stars will find it not only possible, but desirable to live in these bungalows while their productions are being made. The location is on the Passadena Road.

Mildred Harris Chaplin will start her first production under the Mayer management about the middle of October, and Anita Stewart will begin production for the coming season at about the same time.

In the meantime Mr. Mayer is using the Selig studio for producing.

Boost to Author-Supervision

Strand, New York, Packed for Week on the Premier of "The Westerners"

ANY stars or players of any dimension whatever in the screen world who have been wondering just what would be their share of the publicity and opportunities in what is unmistakably an "authors' year," found the answer last week at the eastern premiere of Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners" at the New York Strand.

This first of the Benjamin B. Hampton-Great Authors productions did a business throughout the week of record-breaking proportions and up to Thursday night was reported as running ahead of any summer attraction at the Strand in the past four years. Suddenly on that night the actors went on strike, closing thirteen of the so-called legitimate theatres, and the result was that the Strand, in common with other picture houses, turned away thousands of persons at all remaining performances in the week, inclusive of matinees.

For what is said to be the first time in the history of Broadway motion picture institutions that command national attention the name of the author of a novel took the big place in the electric lights over the sidewalk street canopy of the Strand.

The Strand lobby gave every member of Benjamin B. Hampton's all-star cast portrait recognition in the handsome frames for the week in advance of the first presentation of "The Westerners" and throughout the week of the showing. Complete cast publicity was likewise given to all players.

Chaplin Classics at Six-Week Intervals

Announcement is made by William J. Clark, president of Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, that the twelve Chaplin Classics will be released at intervals of six weeks, commencing October 5.

The Chaplin Classics are the twelve Mutual-Lone Star specials, produced by Charlie Chaplin under his $670,000 a year contract with Mutual.

Negative rights to the series of two-reel comedies were acquired late last spring by the Clark-Cornelius Corporation of which Mr. Clark and H. C. Cornelius, vice-president of Exhibitors' Mutual are the principal owners.

With the announcement of the releasing plan, it was made known that the productions would be sold under series bookings, with special pre-release, and protection, to the larger theatres in larger centers. Contracts have already been closed in more than twenty-five cities for exclusive pre-release presentation.

Albert Parker Directs "Eyes of Youth"

Albert Parker, director of many of Douglas Fairbanks' successes, has been secured by Harry Garson to direct Clara Kimball Young's forthcoming feature picture, "Eyes of Youth." Mr. Parker has a script in readiness and the first scenes of this production are being taken. It is prophesied that "Eyes of Youth" will be Miss Young's greatest offering to the screen to date. Mr. Parker's latest success was "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" for Douglas Fairbanks, and that was preceded by "Arizona" and "Sic 'Em Sam," both for Fairbanks.

Next Lloyd Comedy

Harold Lloyd will be seen in another of his noted burlesque roles when Pathe issues "Heap Gig Chief," a two-reel comedy on August 24th.

The Western melodrama, now but a thing of the glorious past on the American stage, bears the brunt of Lloyd's comedy.

Bebe Daniels will be seen again as chief fun-maker in support of the Pathe comedian, and she makes a "heap" pretty squaw indeed, in her rich Indian costumes.

J. Gordon Edwards, well known director of Fox films

Fashions Frills Galore in "The Brat"

An advance showing of women's fashions was given on the stage of the Nazimova studios in Hollywood during the filming of scenes in "The Brat," the forthcoming Nazimova production. Up-to-the-minute creations for Milady were on display. The setting was an exact duplicate of the fitting rooms in a well-known New York department store, with smartly gowned salesladies and fitters in attendance.

Evening gowns, afternoon frocks and even some wonderful negligees were among the collection of chic apparel draped on models in the fitting rooms. To obtain these M. P. Staulcup, Nazimova's art director, culled the very latest advance modes from several of the smart shops in Los Angeles.

Twelve New York Theatres Play Film

A record which is noteworthy has been established by the initial showing of the first of the eight big William Farnum series pictures which Fox Film Corporation is producing for distribution by the exchanges during the season of 1919-1920.

This record, which is probably a new one for this city, was set by the melodramatic picture, "Wolves of the Night," a story of love and high finance. It was written especially for Mr. Farnum by E. Lloyd Sheldon.

As William Farnum, the powerful star of this powerful play, arrived in New York from the Pacific Coast twelve metropolitan theatres were showing "Wolves of the Night" to packed houses in all parts of the city.

Lila Lee's Next Artcraft Picture

Lila Lee's new Paramount-Artcraft picture is entitled "Heart of Youth" and is said to be a triumph for the youthful star.

The story is an original by Beulah Marie Dix, whose ability as a scenario writer and author has long been established among film patrons, and the picture was skillfully directed by Robert G. Vignola.

"Heartsease" Favored by National Board

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures viewed Tom Moore's latest Goldwyn picture, "Heartsease," last week, and sent a special report to the Goldwyn organization on their opinion of the merit of the picture. All the reviewers present agreed on the excellence of the picture.

"Heartsease" was written by the late Charles E. Klein; and as a play, was performed in both England and America. An interesting feature of the production is the appearance of Helene Chadwick in the leading feminine role, and of Rosemary Theby.

Preparing a Demand for "13"

Burston Films Prepare Big Line of Advertising Aids; Advance Booking

THE home offices of Burston Films, Inc., in the Longacre Building, are bustling with the pre-release activities of "The Mystery of 13," the new Francis Ford serial which is nearing completion at the Hollywood Ford Studios under the supervision of Louis Burston. Not only has there been prepared an extensive advertising and publicity campaign for exhibitors, but a new idea in campaign books to be known as "The Exhibitor's Book." A four color insert of four pages has been prepared for the latter, in which appear novel posting ideas, and full color miniature reproductions of the striking paper already prepared for an extensive billboard campaign.

In addition to the episode paper there is a powerful 24-sheet stand, which introduces the mysterious hooded figure of the "13," and some novel effects achieved through the artist's thorough understanding of color vibration. The six sheet stock shows the star, Francis Ford, on a terror-stricken white horse in pursuit of the elusive "13" terror. The episode paper—special for each of the 15 installments, presents President Burston's ideas in the advertising serials by the insistence of emphasis on the main idea of the production—the mystery surrounding the "13." Shrewd and clever work was necessary here, as Mr. Burston insisted that all scenes be made up from stills and no flights of imaginative fancy were permitted the artists employed in the preparation of the preliminary sketches. Thus the patron attracted by the strong situations depicted on the episode paper will be doubly assured of seeing the show "as advertised" when he finds on the lobby photo displays truthful camera renderings of the same exciting scenes and situations. "Give the people what you know they want, says Louis Burston, "and then let them know you've got it for them, comprises my entire scheme of advertising any motion picture production."

A Big Story for Pearl White

Dramatic Tale by Maxim Is Bought and Will Shortly Be Put Into Production

IT is announced from the offices of Fox Film Corporation that the second starring vehicle for Pearl White—a big dramatic story which has just been chosen—is the work of Hiram Percy Maxim. Mr. Maxim is a member of the gifted Maxim family which gave the world the inventor Hudson Maxim, whose name is associated with the far-famed Maxim gun and a score of other inventions.

Bearing the temporary title "Reclaimed," this feature is announced by the Fox concern as a surprise vehicle which should be one of the biggest pictures on the screen.

Mr. Maxim's faith in Miss White is supreme. Having watched her with great care, he regards her not only as among the greatest motion picture stars ever created, but as "the coming greatest actress" of screendom, since she has availed herself of the opportunity to shine in a higher and wider sphere than that involving largely hazardous feats. Under no consideration would Mr. Maxim, it is declared, think of submitting this story for the use of any star other than Miss White.

Work is rapidly progressing, it is said, on Miss White's first William Fox production, "Tiger's Cub," based on Alaskan melodrama by George Potter—which was selected for this star as affording her a dominant role calling for stronger emotional acting, and which emphatically as forsaking the serial field of motion pictures and taking her among feature stars.

Vita Ready to Present Serial

"Smashing Barriers" Will Follow Week After Last Episode of Moreno Serial

VITAGRAPH has timed things so nicely that its two recent serials do not overlap or conflict, and yet there will be no time lost between the ending of one and the beginning of the other. The fifteen episodes of the Antonio Moreno chapter play, "Perils of Thunder Mountain" will have completed the first run just a week before the first episode of William Duncan's new serial, "Smashing Barriers," is ready for release. Under this admirable arrangement fans who enjoy this form of picture entertainment, and they are legion, will not be deprived of their favorite amusement.

Vitagraph is a great believer in the serial play. One of the pioneers in this form of entertainment, it has consistently kept at least one chapter play before the public, and has attempted, and usually with success, to make each succeeding play better than its predecessor. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, who are past masters of the art of writing a serial, are the authors of both "Perils of Thunder Mountain" and "Smashing Barriers," and Mr. Smith has seen to it that they were given the best possible production. Not only were two of the greatest screen stars selected for the heroes, but the supporting companies were the best obtainable. Carol Holloway has the heroine role in the Moreno play, while Edith Johnson played opposite Mr. Duncan. It would seem that the subject for "thrills" would have been exhausted by this time, but the fertile minds of both Mr. Smith and Dr. Brady have no difficulty in conceiving rescues more sensational than ever.

Mrs. Drew and Company on New Comedy

Mrs. Sidney Drew, John Cumberland and a company of players are at Lake George, New York, staging scenes for a new Paramount-Drew comedy entitled "A Sisterly Scheme" for the V. B. K. Film Corporation. The locale of this picture, which Mrs. Drew adapted from the story of H. C. Bunner, is a summer hotel, a lake and other vacation time environment.

John Cumberland, who is well-known for his appearance in "Up in Mabel's Room," plays the role of Jimmie. Mrs. Drew appears as Jimmie's sister Polly, and Nell Tracy, who made her picture debut in "Bunkered," plays Angie.

Besides Mrs. Drew, Mr. Cumberland and Miss Tracy, the company includes Ralph Brainard, Mrs. Mary Chambers, Annie Laurie Spense, Mrs. Samuel Zucker, Business Manager Donald McBride, Cameraman Leo Rossi, an assistant cameraman, and a technical director.

Double Tribute Given "Blue Bonnet"

Just what Emil Kehrlein, manager and proprietor of the Los Angeles Kinema, really thinks of the power and the audience-attracting possibilities of the first new Billie Rhodes production for Hodkinson release, "The Blue Bonnet," was revealed in two ways during the past week. One was by his cancellation of a Pickford picture to open a week for the immediate presentation of "The Blue Bonnet" on August 10, and the other was by means of a letter to William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation of America, producer of "The Blue Bonnet," in which he heartily congratulated him on the merit of the production.

World Soon Releases Long Feature

World Pictures will release at an early date on its program a five reel picture entitled "Where Bonds are Loosed." This photoplay was taken from E. L. Grant Watson's novel that was numbered among the six best sellers. Mr. Watson, the author is an Englishman who attracted no little attention from book reviewers when his book was published as this was his first effort as a writer.

The picture was directed by David G. Fischer who also played the principal role. He was supported among other well known film players by Dixie Lee and Arthur Behrens. The tropical scenes were filmed on an island which belongs to the group geographically known as the Dry Tortugas, off the coast of Florida.

Ball Player Styles in Current Novograph

Chief among the interesting features of the Pathe Review released August 17th, will be the Novograph slow motion pictures analyzing the styles of a number of the popular players of the New York National League Baseball Club. Among the players will be seen in action upon the screen are Bennie Kauff, George Burns, "Pep" Young, Fred Toney, Art Fletcher, and Jesse Barnes.

Amusing Plot for the Latest Truex Comedy

Ernest Truex is making "Too Good To Be True," the second of his series of two reel comedies for Amedee J. Van Beuren. This production was adapted to the screen by Mann Page from the original story of Kenneth Webb. John Joseph Harvey is directing the comedy.

"Too Good To Be True" was written especially for Mr. Truex and gives the star opportunities to present a very funny portrayal. The story concerns M. Anthony Biggs, a quiet unassuming little man who becomes enraptured by the screen plays featuring the famous vampire, Vera Vernon. Religiously does Anthony visit the village cinema theatre whenever Vera is billed. Anthony is somewhat of a sportsman and one day Vera visits the Golf and Country Club of which our hero is a member. After much hesitation and embarrassment, Anthony manages to meet his screen heroine and then starts a persistent wooing. He gives a most elaborate dinner for the fair Vera at the Peacock Inn but she does not seem to enjoy the affair. It looks as though Anthony's rival Kirk Maxwell, will win Vera but events change their course and bring joy to the heart of our hero.

To support Mr. Truex in "Too Good To Be True," Mr. Van Beuren has engaged a player ideally suited to play the role of the vampire, Vera Vernon. The young lady in question has just arrived from Paris where she recently completed work in "Judex," a Gaumont serial.

Virginia Pearson Has Finished Subject

Virginia Pearson has just completed "Impossible Catherine" her second production through Pathe, while her initial offering, "The Bishop's Emeralds" is still winning praise from exhibitors in every section of the country.

Pathe believes the second picture of the Pearson series will prove even more popular than "The Bishop's Emeralds." "Impossible Catherine" is a feature of the comedy drama type, and was directed under the personal supervision of John O'Brien, Lawrence McCloskey, Lubin's former scenario editor, wrote the titles for the attraction, and they lend much humor to the feature.

"Counterfeit" Next for Elsie Ferguson

Under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, work has been started on Miss Elsie Ferguson's next picture, "Counterfeit," by Ouida Bergere, based on the story by Robert Baker, at the New York studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. Mr. Fitzmaurice regards the scenario as an excellent up-to-date comedy drama in which Miss Ferguson will have the opportunity of both dramatic and lighter work.

As is usual with a picture under the direction of Mr. Fitzmaurice, the cast is exceptionally well chosen, including David Powell, Helene Montrose, Charles Kent, Charles Girard, Ida Waterman, Robert Lee Keeling, Fred Jenkins, Mrs. Robertson and Elizabeth Breen.

Serico Signs Arline Pretty

Popular Player Will Have Stellar Role in First Picture of Concern

GEORGE H. WILEY, president of the Serico Producing Company, a new organization, formed recently to produce the novels of famous authors in serial form, last week concluded negotiations for the appearance of Arline Pretty in the leading feminine role in the first of the company's offerings, "A Woman in Grey" by C. N. &. A. M. Williamson.

The selection of Miss Pretty as the star of the new type of serial promised by the Serico Company, was made, according to the officials of the organization, in response to the demand of a large number of exhibitors, among whom a canvass was conducted, for the presentation of this star in another serial.

Having won thousands of friends through her characterizations as the heroine of Vitagraph's serial "The Secret Kingdom" and Pathe's chapter picture, "The Hidden Hand," Miss Pretty, it is declared, has long been sought for another serial but has wished to confine herself exclusively to dramatic features.

A cast, all of whom are well known in the serial field, has been engaged for the picture. Henry G. Sell, leading man for Pearl White in several Pathe serials, appears opposite Miss Pretty. Other principals are Fred Jones, Margaret Fielding, James A. Heenan, Ann Brodie, Violet de Bicari, and Mrs. Adelaine Fitzallen.

Fred Jones and Margaret Fielding, who have the "heavy" leads in the production, are both favorably known to photoplay patrons. Miss Fielding has appeared in important roles in a number of Fox productions, in addition to being an established actress of the legitimate stage. Mr. Jones has appeared in a number of serial successes, as well as special features.

Plays Fitting the Lee Kiddies

Bartholomas Writes Second Play for Young Rogers' Stars; Johnson Directing

WITH the starting of the second Lee picture, Lou Rogers, president of the Rogers Film Corporation, presenting Jane and Katherine Lee in a series of two-reel comedy playlets, has already gone further in the vehicle end by contracting for several more stories by prominent authors, names of which are at present being withheld.

The story proposition is admitted to be a serious one these days, and the tremendous prices paid for them is an example of this condition. However, the type of story suited for these young stars is even more of a rarity, as the children have to obtain a happy medium of comedy and plot in their pictures.

Two-reel comedy playlets are brief enough, it is pointed out, to allow artists of the slender age of the Lee Kiddies to "carry on" throughout the picture with a snap and vivacity, which an offering of greater length would make impossible in the case of these juvenile comedians, and exhibitors have themselves suggested this, showing their insight of showmanship.

With these factors in mind, and enthused with the work of Phillip Bartholomas in the first story, Mr. Rogers also had him write the second subject, and the author of such successes as "Very Good Eddie," "Girl of My Dreams," and the recent "Greenwich Village Follies," has surpassed himself in his second attempt.

A novel introduction was used in the first picture and this met with such popular comment, that it has been decided to follow this plan in the other productions. A strong company of players, including grownups as well as youngsters, have been engaged by Director Tefft Johnson, and with the first of the playlets cut and titled and others of the series in course of production, Mr. Rogers promises particulars of release very shortly.

Box-Office Measures Success

So Believes Marshall Neilan, Stating Public, Not New Methods, Is Paramount

FIRMLY declaring that the public, and not new-fangled methods of production, is the most vital factor to be considered in the production of a motion picture, Marshall Neilan sent a shock through California producing circles recently when he declared that "The Eternal Three," his initial production for First National Exhibitors Circuit, "may be artistic to the extreme and embody several new ideas in direction, but above all it would be a box office attraction."

"I want it clearly understood," said Neilan, "that I have but one object in mind and that is to make 'The Eternal Three' a box-office attraction. By this, I mean that I am not going to spend my time trying to startle the world with new and magnificent artistic effects, nor am I going to introduce any revolutionary methods of production.

"During the years I have been producing pictures, I have made a study of the situations and bits of business which are most powerful in bringing about the proper play of emotions among the viewers of a picture. My technical department can study lighting effects and other things which go to make a picture beautiful, but I want to study the public. That, to my mind, is the real and most important part of the motion picture in so far as the director is concerned.

"What will make the average person laugh, what will make him cry, what will stir within him the finest feeling, what in short will make him leave the theatre satisfied and feeling right?

"If I can make the box office attractions for the world, I care not who makes the works of art. After all, what is a greater work of art then that which will better and make happier the lives of millions of people."

"Follies" Girls Please in "Lombardi"

Fewer and better mannequins has been the rule in casting actresses for certain parts in "Lombardi, Ltd." Bert Lytell's special production which Screen Classics, Inc., is now making at Hollywood, as one of its "fewer and better" pictures.

A feature of the production is the beauty of the models for gowns in the modiste's shop of Tito Lombardi, a temperamental designer and executor of smart clothes for women. Screen Classics, Inc., in order to get a group of beauties to take the parts of mannequins, combed the most fashionable Fifth Avenue shops, and the ranks of the New York musical shows—such as the Follies and the Midnight Frolic—for exactly half a dozen girls whose looks make one stop, look and whistle.

There are six mannequins in all, many of them portrayed by actresses well started on their careers.

Sloman Is a "Comer"

After nine weeks of preliminary work in preparation of the screen version of his story, during which he was in constant consultation with B. B. Hampton, the producer, and William H. Clifford, his scenario writer, Edward Sloman, supervising director of Federal Photoplays, Inc., is ready to begin the screening of "The Sagebrushers," the widely known novel by Emerson Hough.

The success of "The Westerner," the Stewart Edward White story, which Sloman produced as the first of his subjects for Federal photoplays, has led to elaborate preparation for work on the forthcoming feature. Sloman, who established a strong reputation during his engagement of several years at the studio of the American Film Company, during which time he made many pictures starring William Russell, is recognized, it is asserted, as one of the foremost directors of the younger generation.

"Classics in Film" Are Being Welcomed

That the patrons of first class theatres welcome an opportunity to see good solid literature transferred to the screen in picture form is being proven conclusively by the great number of large houses throughout the country that are playing to big business with Oscar Wilde's "Lady Windermere's Fan" and Charles Dickens' "Dombey and Son" released recently by Triangle.

While the Triangle Distributing Corporation believed that the public would receive their "Classics In Film" as a welcome change from the usual run of stories they were not prepared for the exceptional demand that has been made upon them for bookings on these subjects. The Fox and Loew houses have recently booked these pictures.

Monopol Offering Said to be Unusual

In the matter of novel effects, "Crimson Shoals," the Monopol state rights' attraction, is said to be one of the unusual pictures offered in the territorial market this year. Starring Francis Ford, it was also directed by the leading figure of "The Mystery of 13" and "The Silent Mystery." Through means of remarkable photographic effects Ford is presented in a triple character. Throughout the play he is shown many times in the same scenes in the characters of son, father and grandfather. A novel introduction has been worked out for the purpose of emphasizing this remarkable performance. A stenographer is shown seated at a typewriter clicking off the names of the three characters portrayed by Ford. As each line appears Ford is shown in the background in his various make-ups. In order to attain this effect a quadruple exposure was necessitated.

In the matter of backgrounds and exterior locations, "Crimson Shoals" also contains a number of unusual views. The locale of the story is laid for the better part on an island in the Pacific.

Two-Reelers Suited to Lee Kiddies

That Jane and Katherine Lee, "The Lee Kids," have found their metier in the two-reel comedy playlets announced for forthcoming release by Lou Rogers Corporation, is said to be the unanimous verdict of those who have had opportunity to look over the first of the series.

Two-reel comedy vehicles are brief enough, it is pointed out, to allow artists of the slender age of the Lee children to "carry on" throughout the feature with a snap and vivactiy which an offering of greater length would make impossible in the case of juvenile comedians. At the same time a two-reel length affords a medium of sufficient length for the carrying out of a complete storyette or playlet, it is claimed.

A strong company of players including grown-ups as well as youngsters has been engaged under the direction of Tefft Johnson. With the first of the playlets cut and titled and others of the series in hand, particulars of release are promised shortly.

Wilderness Series for Bull's-Eye

Each month sees a new short subject release added to the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation's program. The newest wrinkle is the one-reel "Legends of the Wilderness," now being photographed and the wild beauty of western America by L. J. Burrud of Los Angeles. According to Milton L. Cohen, president of the Bulls-Eye, the first release will be marketed October first on the state's rights plan.

An entire year will be consumed by the Burrud expedition, which will cover a distance of approximately 20,000 miles in the Pacific northwest and Canada. After "shooting" the "legends" the Burrud party, which consists of six men, will invade Asia, crossing the Bering Sea on ice boats, if possible.

Start Pioneer Exchange Chain

Co-operative Ring Begun with Six Links Forged; Advisory Body Is Inaugurated

THE first six links in the chain of independent exchange which the executives of the Pioneer Film Corporation are busily engaged in creating have become a reality.

With the Pioneer's own office in New York and Buffalo, the Greater Stars Productions in Chicago, the Eastern Features Film in Boston and the M. & R. Exchanges in San Francisco and Los Angeles handling the entire Pioneer output, the first links in the country-wide chain of releasing organizations have been forged.

Within a few months it is expected that the foremost independent exchange in each and every territory will be added to the chain, forming a federated unit, each link free and independent, yet joined to the other Pioneer exchanges by the strong bond of mutual interest.

In order to keep its list of federated exchanges well supplied with attractions which can compete in the open market with any and all comers, the Pioneer, in addition to continuing its policy of purchasing the really notable productions placed on the market, is carrying on negotiations with the end in view of forming a chain of independent purchasing units, which will make pictures on subjects which have first been submitted for approval to the exchangemen handling Pioneer productions.

A body to be known as the Pioneer general staff, composed of the men behind the Pioneer Film Corporation, the officers of the exchanges and the producing units will be formed. The powers of this body will be purely advisory, but all matters of policy, both of production and exploitation, will be submitted to it for consideration and discussion.

The Pioneer Film Corporation will at no time attempt to encroach upon the rights of the associated associations, but will reserve for itself the final word upon all matters pertaining to the general policy, and it will be the arbiter in disputed questions.

For months past the Pioneer Executives have been studying the details of the proposed chain, and when the moment came to begin the formation of the co-operative body, the facts were presented to those interested in a concrete form, and were accepted by all who have entered the new organization with but few modifications.

Rolfe Shooting on Big Scene

Grand Ensembles Used in Course of First Subject for Fischer Features

THE element of the spectacular achieved by the employment of great ensembles and of massive scenic investiture will be evident in the first B. A. Rolfe production made for the new firm of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc. The subject, tentatively titled "The Shining Band," is now in process of production at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle under the personal supervision and direction of B. A. Rolfe with the co-operation of Chester DeVonde.

Based on Robert W. Chambers' story, "The Shining Band," which was adapted for the screen by Charles A. Logue, the subject has to do with fifteen rich clubmen who set out to build a fence around a little world all their own, stirring up a fued with an eccentric character named O'Hara, who is spurred on by Munns, the leader of "The Shining Band." The chief setting is the extremely exclusive and ultra luxurious Sagamore Club, conducted solely by and for the fifteen club members. The main room of the club is represented in a setting occupying 35x70 feet of the studio floor space and containing every luxury that vast wealth can command. In this room the functions of the club are held, outrivaling the colorful affairs of court.

Highly spectacular is the battle between the club and the members of the Shining Band over the rights to a parcel of land within the club's confines. The battle results in the destruction of the dam built by the club's opponents to drive the wealthy from the fishing grounds and of the demolition of the club house by the band.

Mr. Rolfe, accompanied by forty people, members of his cast and technical staff, spent ten days in the Adirondack Mountains of New York producing some of the exterior scenes. The engineers in the party were employed to build the dam which was destroyed.

Enlarge Staff of Fox News Weekly

Among the important news items of today comes the announcement from Fox Film Corporation of the addition to the force which is being organized for the production of the Big Fox News Weekly.

Pell Mitchell, prominent in national film circles, has been engaged by Herbert E. Hancock, director, to take entire charge of the news department of this branch of the company.

Mr. Mitchell has been associated as editor with the Gaumont Weekly series since 1914, and is one of the best known men in this line in the country. In carrying out his plans to employ none but trained newspaper men with a knowledge of films, Mr. Hancock chose Mr. Mitchell because of his long experience in journalism before his entrance into motion pictures.

Besides Mr. Mitchell, the staff will also be increased by several of his own staff, which he will bring with him to the main offices of the Fox News Weekly.

Parisian creations, the very latest from the Rue de la Paix, will abound in Metro's screen adaptation of the play "Lombardi, Ltd."

Magazine Aiding on Irene Castle Film

Reports coming in from various territories show that the field representatives of the Ladies' Home Journal are everywhere cooperating with exhibitors in the exploitation of the Paramount-Artcraft Special "The Firing Line" starring Irene Castle.

In Rochester, New York, the original gowns worn by the star were displayed in the department store operated by Sibley, Lindsey and Curr for a week proceeding the showing at the Picadilly theatre there. A number of copies of the Ladies' Home Journal were also included in the display together with the announcement card giving the name of the theatre and the playing dates.

Hotel Burns in Viola Dana's Picture

A suitable location for scenes showing the burning of a hotel in "Please Get Married," the Oliver Morosco farce-comedy that Viola Dana is using as her first starring vehicle for the "fewer and better" pictures series of Screen Classics, Inc., caused Director John Ince and Techincian Amos Myers not a little worry the other day.

Finis Fox, of the Metro scenario department, in making the screen version of the comedy by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne, called for a location for the hotel with mountain ranges showing in the background and a broad macadamized automobile roadway winding up to the entrance. It took long search, but was finally found.

"Joe Martin" Unruly; Wreaks Havoc

As a result of a three days' rampage in which time he wrecked his trainer's quarters at the Universal City arena, Joe Martin, the famous orang-outang of the screen, is now under constant surveillance.

Because the uncanny animal tore the door from its hinges, unlocked the wolves' cage, freed the elephant and created general havoc at the world's film capital a close watch is kept over his quarters.

Jack Ketch, a splendid example of the Malamute dog, named for the notorious hangman of old England, has been assigned by A. C. Stecker, trainer-in-chief to stand guard over Joe's door.

Technician to Aid on May Allison's Film

When Edward J. Shulter, supervising technical director of the Metro studios in Hollywood, laid down a rigid set of requirements for the testing of all new additions to the already efficient group of technicians handling Screen Classics, Inc., productions, he at least assured himself of men who know their work from the very bottom.

John K. Holden, one of the three recently engaged, has been assigned as technical director with May Allison in "Fair and Warmer," a screen production of Avery Hopwood's farce, produced on the stage by Selwyn and Co.

Pioneer Publicity on Commercial Lines

One of the results of the tour of observation recently made by M. H. Hoffman, General Manager of the Pioneer, is the decision to reorganize the policy and methods of the publicity and advertising activities of his concern.

To this end an Exhibitor's Service Department is being installed at the Pioneer Home Offices, where all information, stills, press stories, and business-like co-operation will be offered gratis to the manager playing Pioneer pictures.

Large stocks of advertising accessories are being collected in New York from which the exchanges handling the Pioneer output can draw upon for immediate use. This will remove the long delays so frequent in the filling of orders, and as a consequence the business lost because of the inability of the average distributor to supply his exchanges immediately with materials needed, will be removed.

M. H. Hoffman during his tour heard on every side, from both exhibitors and exchangemen strongly voiced opinions denouncing the usual methods pursued in the exploitation of pictures.

The country is surfeited with superlatives, and blue sky claims. What is needed is real stuff, something that will be taken upon its face value, without the necessity of the reader discounting the greater part of the statement he is reading.

Old West Seen in a Robertson-Cole

"A Man's Country," a Robertson-Cole feature, distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual, is one of those picturesque productions of the old West. It is a picture of California in the days of '49, and it has all the romance and picturesqueness of that historical period when men worked hard and died harder, when the old brass foot-rail knew the touch of satin as well as cowhide.

The special settings and costumes made it one of the costliest pictures produced at the Brunton studios. The wild, Western town of Huxley's Gulch was constructed in its entirety on the Brunton lot. Perfect atmosphere of those virile old days was created and as a result "A Man's Country" is recognized as one of the best Westerns in atmosphere and action produced.

"Too Much Directing Is Bad for Picture"

Director J. Gordon Edwards, of Fox Film Corporation, who is making the eight William Farnum de luxe productions which will be among the features of the current Fox program, believes that too much directing is as likely to spoil a picture as too little.

"Other things being equal," said Mr. Edwards after completing "Wolves of the Night," the first of the new-season Farnum Pictures, released August 10, "the less directing a director does the better the picture will be. Let the actor inject his own personality into the work. If he happens to have temperament—and every artist is supposed to have that—give it play, and you will get the naturalness and grace of action without which the drama would be dead.

Director of Drury Lane Play

Ray Smallwood Selected to Handle First of Subjects Acquired Abroad

RAY C. SMALLWOOD will direct the first of the Drury Lane melodramas recently purchased in London by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation for production by Screen Classics, Inc., with all-star casts, hundreds of extra players and elaborate scenic and spectacular effects.

Mr. Smallwood, one of the early Imp directors and later an independent producer, has had long and varied experience in every phase of motion picture production. He photographed "Revelation," the first of Nazimova's tremendous screen successes, before assuming his position as Metro's photographic supervisor.

Because of his thorough knowledge of every technical angle of motion pictures, Director General Karger decided that Mr. Smallwood was the logical choice to direct the big Drury Lane plays in their translation to the silver sheet. The productions will be made under the "fewer and better" standard adopted by Metro and will be of superlative quality in cast and technical presentation.

Great stress is to be laid on the photography for the English melodramas, which is planned to be of superartistry in conception and execution of novel and decorative camera effects. Mr. Smallwood in this connection has to his credit the invention of a number of novel photographic effects, developed after exhaustive study and laboratory experimentation.

The new Screen Classics, Inc., director is already laying plans for production of the first of the Drury Lane melodramas, work on which will start within a month at the Screen Classics, Inc., studios. Metro has not yet announced the selection, but it will be one of the five just purchased by Mr. Rowland. They are: "The Best of Luck," "The Hope," "Hearts Are Trumps," "The Great Millionaire" and "The Marriage of Mayfair."

Officials Give Endorsements

"World Aflame," Pathe Offering, with Frank Keenan, Lauded by Notables

FOLLOWING private views in Washington and Chicago of the Frank Keenan feature "The World Aflame," which is soon to be released by Pathe, indorsements of the picture from some of the most prominent men in the United States are rolling up.

"In point of picture-making," writes Louis F. Post, assistant secretary of labor, in a letter to the Pathe office, "I have seldom seen any moving picture as good, and in point of acting I think it is by all odds the best moving picture I have even seen."

"The production, as a whole, was most satisfatory," writes Edward S. McGraw, private secretary to Secretary Wilson, who attended in the absence of his chief, detained at home by illness in the family. "I was very much pleased with the whole thing and the story told coincides with my views in reference to capital and labor."

One of the strongest letters was that of Charles P. Howard, of the Department's Division of Conciliation. He wrote:

"I desire to express my appreciation of the opportunity of witnessing 'The World Aflame.' From the standpoint of artistic production and expressive acting it is perfect. And the subject is undoubtedly the one of paramount importance with all peoples—the new relation between employer and employee.

"Any effort to bring about a closer understanding between labor and capital is to be commended to the extreme," said Senator King of Utah, a member of the committe on immigration, "and this picture besides doing that does it excellently well. Every minute it is on the screen is one of pleasure and benefit."

Five Months Making Feature

"The Brat" Begun in February; Star Aids in the Cutting and Assembling

NAZIMOVA'S time and thought for five months without let-up were devoted to the production of "The Brat," the Russian star's latest seven-part picture, which Metro Pictures Corporation announces for release the first of the coming month.

"The Brat" is to be the first of Metro's "fewer and better" special productions, and Nazimova determined that it should comply in time spent upon it as well as in quality with the meaning of the slogan. From the latter part of January until the latter part of last month "The Brat" has been in the making, and now it is in its final, completed form for critical inspection in the Metro projection rooms.

Actual filming of "The Brat" began at the Nazimova studios in Hollywood on Thursday, February 20; but Nazimova and Charles Bryant had prior to that date spent three weeks making their adaptation of Maude Fulton's play.

The last scenes for "The Brat" were photographed Thursday, April 3. In the afternoon Nazimova and Charles Bryant made a trip out into the beautiful San Fernando Valley with Director Herbert Blache to take the final "iris out" in the play. That night the studio entrance—which is constructed along the imposing lines of a courthouse or other official building—was used for the last remaining scene to be shot.

With the filming completed, Nazimova spent the rest of the five months given to the production in personally consulting in the details of cutting, titling and assembling the picture. This was a long and painstaking task, as only the best of the action has been retained, and the most vivid incidents kept within the limits of 7,000 feet of film, whereas something like 100,000 feet of negative was exposed in making the production.

Anna Lehr is to Star in Artclass Picture

Anna Lehr, recently engaged to play the star role in "The Open Door," now in course of production, has to her credit many creditable performances in strongly emotional roles. She was one of the first players to star in Triangle productions, in which she appeared for several years.

Artclass Pictures, Inc., sponsors for the "Open Door," selected Miss Lehr for the stellar role in their production only after interviewing several feminine stars. Dallas M. Fitzgerald, under whose supervision the Artclass picture is being made, found in the former Triangle player the exact character called for by the script. It is said that Miss Lehr will be called upon to do the most extraordinary work of her career in this film, which is a sensational melodrama dealing with a vital social theme.

In the cast engaged to support this screen performer may be mentioned Sam J. Ryan, John P. Wade, Edith Stockton, Walter Miller, Robert Broderick and Frank Evans.

New Theatre Opening with "Oh Boy"

The new Grand-Florissant Theatre, in St. Louis, built at a cost of approximately $200,000, will throw open its doors to the public for the first time on Labor Day night.

As the opening attraction, Manager Goldman has selected "Oh, Boy!" Capellani's film version of the musical comedy, which Pathe is distributing. The selection of "Oh, Boy!" is a great tribute to the drawing power of the picture, for by the time it is due to open the Grand-Florissant it will have played in a number of other St. Louis theatres.

Much Is Expected of "The Gamblers"

Vitagraph is confident that "The Gamblers," the new Harry T. Morey feature which is nearing release, will be to motion pictures what its original production was to the spoken drama—one of the greatest hits of the season. This play by the late Charles Klein is just as vital and timely today as it was when it was the sensation of New York several years ago. Love, jealousy and political ambition we always have with us and the fourth, and most important motive in the play, high and frenzied finance, is rampant just now through the unusual interest in oil stock. And it is gambling in The Street, and not with cards, or dice, or horse racing, that gives the drama its title.

Hughes Gives O. K. to Film of His Book

Major Rupert Hughes has just completed his work as an Eminent Author at the Goldwyn Studios for his first picture from his latest novel, "The Cup of Fury" and is on his way to San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes have been staying at Beverly Hills and making daily trips to confer with studio executives and with T. Hayes Hunter who will direct the production. Mr. Hughes expects to arrive in New York, August 17.

"Everything is going beautifully out here," he reports to the Goldwyn officials in the East. "There is an amazing desire to make a moving picture of 'The Cup of Fury' that really presents the book. Everybody is enthusiastic over its possibilities, and it will get an appalling amount of publicity to judge from the preparations that are being made."

Venice Aviation Field Named After Ince

The first aerial port on the Pacific Coast, a large field at Venice, California, has been christened "The Thomas H. Ince Aviation Field" in honor of the producer of Paramount-Artcraft pictures, who has offered a cash prize of fifty thousand dollars to the first aviator who successfully negotiates a trip by air across the Pacific Ocean. The field is an up-to-the-minute innovation and has been provided with powerful searchlights to make a safe landing for incoming aviators who arrive there after dark.

Fate Lends Aid to Production

Train Wreck Enables Clara K. Young Company to Get Some Desired Scenes

AN unconventional train wreck very nearly brought disaster to Clara Kimball Young and the members of her company, now producing "Eyes of Youth" at the Garson Studios, during a trip from San Francisco to Los Angeles.

Miss Young and her company have been in San Francisco shooting the big dock and ship scenes that are to be made a feature of the production, and were hurrying back to Los Angeles to begin work upon the sets when the train wreck spoiled an otherwise perfect trip and very nearly resulted in fatalities.

The delay, however, was taken advantage of by the members of the company, for the country presented a much desired setting for one of the scenes of the play, and in a very few moments make-up boxes had been brought forth and the Cameraman Arthur Edeson was busily cranking footage into the black box. There was a nine hours' delay before the train finally started south again to Los Angeles, where the first stage sets of "Eyes of Youth" are being taken.

As "Gina Ashling" in "Eyes of Youth," Clara Kimball Young is said to face one of the biggest opportunities offered a screen star. "Eyes of Youth" will be Miss Young's biggest offering in many years and will be given to the public during the fall months. The role to be portrayed by Miss Young embodies every requirement of the great leading woman and star. The peculiar construction of the play as presented on the speaking stage will be strictly adhered to in the screen production.

Activities at the Garson Studios include the building of sets for the first Katterjohn production, in which House Peters will be featured. The first scenes will be shot Monday. The Katterjohn plays, as well as the Clara Kimball Young productions will be released through the Equity Pictures Corporation.

Dustin Farnum's Next Film Melodramatic

With work starting on Dustin Farnum's new United feature, temporarily titled "The Honor of the Family," and with a number of its exterior scenes to be filmed on Catalina Island, the members of Mr. Farnum's cast are to enjoy the special facilities of that star's yacht The Juanita in their crossing from the mainland.

A wide departure from the customary Dustin Farnum roles is promised by J. A. Berst in the forthcoming feature picture, both as regards story, costuming and settings. "The Honor of the Family" is said to be strongly melodramatic in character and to be of spectacular magnitude.

Foreign Fans Greeting Eddie Polo

According to advices reaching this country from England, Eddie Polo, serial star now heading the company which is producing "The Thirteenth Hour" a Universal picture, is being received open heartedly by the Britishers. The report says that Mr. Polo is making many personal appearances at the British picture houses and standing room is the usual announcement at such a house. Mr. Polo is scheduled to visit Yorkshire, Lancashire and Scotland soon with his company.

"The Thirteenth Hour" is the "around the world" serial and scenes will be made in four foreign countries. John P. McGowan is directing the production. Peggy O'Dare is the leading woman and the scenario and continuity is being written by Hope Loring, well known author.

Paramount Magazine for September

Beginning September 7 the first four numbers of the new Paramount Magazine will be released weekly during September, it is announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. For variety of material and entertainment value, Nathan H. Friend, general manager of the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky, under whose direction the magazine is produced, declares that this new weekly release will prove one of the most attractive one-reel subjects in the market.

ROGER LYTTON'S latest role, that of the kind, indulgent father of "Everybody's Sweetheart," is quite a departure from the smooth villains he has so often portrayed in the past. Mr. Lytton says he is delighted to have an opportunity to make a few screen friends, as he fears that his popularity must be rather at a discount among those who know him only through his pictures.

Thos. F. Fallon told us a few moments ago that his father once played in an amateur production of Belasco's "May Blossom," given by the St. James Union, in which New York's present Governor, Alfred E. Smith, played the lead. Mr. Fallon, senior, is willing to testify to the Governor's histrionic ability.

Sylvia Breamer and her pal, Shirley Huxley, are spending a few days between pictures in Allenhurst, N. J. They will be back in New York by Tuesday at the latest, however, to welcome Miss Breamer's mother, stepfather and younger brother, who are en route from Australia and expected to arrive on that day. Naturally Miss Breamer is overjoyed at the prospective visit.

J. Stuart Blackton was among the producers who attended the annual meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry at Rochester August 5th and 6th, where George Eastman was host to the association members.

Myrtle Stedman has left for California to star in the Rex Reach picture, "The Silver Horde." "I am very enthusiastic about my part," she said just before her departure, "it's a character that fairly vibrates with living qualities, and I think 'The Silver Horde' is the strongest story Mr. Beach has ever done. The character of Cherry Mallotte stirred me from the moment our acquaintance began on the printed page. I think Director Lloyd will succeed in making it one of the important releases of the year. Miss Stedman's last part in the East was in "The Teeth of the Tiger," under the direction of Chet Withey.

Perry Vekroff, Frankie Mann and Stuart Holmes forget "The Isle of Jewels" when their favorite trade paper arrives at the Crystal Studios

Richard Barthelmess has represented nearly all the nations in his list of screen characters. He was a Russian youth in "War Brides," a Frenchman in "Camille," a Canadian hero who won the Victoria Cross in "For Valor," and the famous Chinese in "Broken Blossoms." Now we learn he is to appear as a Spaniard in a new Griffith production. But then he says he likes character work better than the typical breezy American youths he can portray when he wants to.

There are a few things to be said in favor of having a hypnotist for a star. At least, when J. Robert Pauline appears in that 15-episode serial production which is being made under the guiding hand and watchful eye of Mr. Sidney Reynolds of Supreme Pictures, Inc., there will be no self-appointed committee of exposers trying to "show Mr. Pauline up."

Lillian Hall has changed her mind and decided to do yet another comedy with John Dooley, under William Nigh's direction. She had fully expected a vacation upon the completion of the present picture, but prevailing influence was very strong, and you know the woman's privilege. However, this one will be the last, and as it is to be filmed at the Delaware Water Gap, it doesn't entail many hardships.

AMONG the latest reported pranks of Leah Baird's Pekinese, Pansy and Zhu-Zhum, is one enacted at the Crystal studio the other day. Miss Baird took them up to watch the shooting of some interesting scenes of "The Isle of Jewels," and of course they immediately became great favorites with the company, Pansy, being the smaller of the two, rather taking the honors. A bit later, everyone went into the projection room, and left the doggies outside on the stage. Miss Baird noticed a look of "I'll get you yet" which Zhu-Zhum cast at Pansy but gave no heed. When she came back for her pets, poor little Pansy was crouched way in a corner with a nasty bite in her little neck, while Zhu-Zhum was strutting about wearing a veritable Jack Dempsey grin.

HERBERT RAWLINSON has been signed again by the Oliver Film Corp. to appear in a series of stories based on the experiences of Chief Flynn of the Secret Service. Mr. Rawlinson says that he is becoming so accustomed to detective work that he is considering opening an office and undertaking some real sur' nuf cases, on his own.

NIGEL BARRIE has deserted the West coast and joined the Eastern film colony. His first engagement is the lead for Marion Davies in "The Cinema Murder."

RUBYE DEREAMER, Edmund Breese, Eugene Strong, Alfred Hickman and William P. Carlton have been engaged by the Gaumont company to do a feature under the direction of Joseph Levering.

THIS isn't supposed to be an answer column, but such a very nice note came from Col. Heights, Washington, D. C., asking a few things about Conway Tearle, that we are going to divulge the requested information. Mr. Tearle is a college man, having attended Carlyle and Winchester, England. His age is approximately in the thirties, the earlier, the better, he says. He is playing the lead in Constance Talmadge's latest picture just at present.

J. Warren Kerrigan is nearing completion of his work in the star's latest picture, "The Joyous Liar." Considerable comedy element is said to be included, while it is strong in adventure and romance. The picture was staged by Ernest D. Warde from the story and continuity of Jack Cunningham. Lillian Walker is the leading woman.

But Which One? Wait!

EUGENE STRONG

Management EDWARD SMALL, 1493 Broadway, N. Y. City

Art Talent is Virginia Pearson's :

WE aren't going to try to improve upon facts and say that, when we finally caught up with her after a month's persistent demand for an interview. Virginia Pearson was exquisitely gowned in—for the truth is so much nicer. Miss Pearson walked into her drawing room wearing, over the most luscious American Beauty velvet tea gown, a gingham smock. She had caught it up around her neck as far as possible, and turquoise blue satin slippers peeped from beneath the American Beauty velvet, while the baby pink and white of her cheeks, beneath their crown of dark hair, gleamed above the gingham.

"I've been working," she explained, as we rose from the depths of a big chair near one of her windows high up over the magnificent old Hudson, with its inactive battleships and submarine chasers and little pleasure craft joyfully replacing the camouflaged transports of yesteryear, "will you come back to my paint shop, or would you rather stay here?"

"Oh, let's go back," we murmured, overcome with curiosity as to what other activity a person found time for, who produces her own pictures, does an incredible amount of patriotic work, poses for enough stills to fill the Metropolitan Museum, has a novel from her own pen nearly ready for publication, and is writing volumes of theosophic and philosophic reflections.

"But, Miss Pearson," we exclaimed, as we walked into a room filled with pastel heads of various types of beautiful women, "why haven't we ever heard about these? We didn't know you were a crayon artist too, as well as a picture one."

"I'm afraid people will think it's all press agent talk," she replied, "they never believe you can do but one thing. That's why I'm going to have the books I'm writing published under another name, or my initials, perhaps. I don't think you'd better mention these, do you?"

"Mention them? Well, we certainly will. We just love the colors in that bluish, reddish, orange affair around that wicked lady's head."

"She does look wicked, doesn't she?" Miss Pearson agreed, "and the one beside her is intended to be her exact opposite. I've tried for etherial coloring. Do you think I've succeeded?"

"We'll say so, but we don't see how you find time for it. And may we look at these stills? Some of them don't look the least bit like you."

"But they are me, or rather the characters I was impersonating when the pictures were taken. I'm a character actress. That's my business, above everything else. The star system which insists upon all the other members of the cast turning their backs to the camera, and all close-ups being taken of the star, is absolutely wrong and a thing of the past." Miss Pearson's full, clear voice was decidedly emphatic. "In the two pictures that my own company has just produced, 'The Bishop's Emeralds' and 'Impossible Catherine,' we have taken just as many close-ups of the supporting cast as of myself. I have tried to give the others every opportunity that the story offered, and I have always wanted them to make the most of it."

"I firmly believe that the monarchy of the star is over," she continued, "as surely as other imperialistic regimes are over, and players will be popular only so long as they lend themselves to the carrying out of the story. The play's the thing, and the picture-going public is demanding that it be made so."

Then Miss Pearson went on to tell us some of the wonderful plans that she has for the future, but which are not quite definite enough to give the details of at present. She wants to do "great big things," as she expresses it, and although she is pleased with the success she has already attained, she feels that her career is only half begun, and that the future holds undreamed-of possibilities for those who are eager to make the most of them.

"People ought never to be satisfied," she asserts. "I don't mean that they shouldn't be grateful—gratitude and self-satisfaction are two very different things—but, in order to progress, we ought to look forward to each new day as the chance for new achievements and improvements. According to my belief, you know, people who pass over into another astral plane take up their work just where they leave it off here, so we don't waste any time by accomplishing as much as our individual capabilities will let us, while we're on this plane. Most of us love the beautiful, I think, as we should, but we judge too much by exteriors. Just as you can't revue a book by its cover, neither can you justly criticise people or their actions by outward personality alone. But why do you always get me into such deep subjects? When you see 'Impossible Catherine,' you'll swear that I haven't a sensible idea in my head."

So we went away, looking forward to this new role for Miss Pearson with great anticipation, for we do like stars who can submerge their own personality completely in the portrayal of whatever character they are assuming Margurite Jones.

Eugene O'Brien Admits to Ideals : : : : :

"I'M working for ideals, just as every worth-while person should," asserted Eugene O'Brien, "and you needn't laugh. I'm quite serious, really, and I don't mean that 'really' to sound like an Englishman, either."

"Why not?" we asked, with great interest. "Why the injured tone at all?"

"Because I'm terribly afraid of you interviewers. I like to be made out a real human being. I like people and I want them to like me, and they certainly won't, if you tell them I have a perfect English accent, and wear orange gloves when I'm eating grapefruit, and use sachet powder on my cereal in the morning."

"We won't tell them anything of the sort," we promised, "we'll tell them exactly what you've said, and they'll know you have a sense of humor, which is the most delightful trait in the world. Besides that people are pretty apt to like anyone who wants them to very much, so if you really value their good opinion, we don't think you need worry about getting it. But please tell us about those ideals. We'll forget the sense of humor and take them as seriously as you want us to."

The Perfect Lover looked skeptical. "I think you're joshing me, but here goes—anyway, for I'm in earnest. I should like, through my picturizations, to help those of us who are weak to be stronger, to give them incentive and enthusiasm and encouragement for more valuable lives, and to help those who are strong to be more patient and tolerant towards their less fortunate fellow beings. That's what I'd like to do, but I guess I'm pretty far from it. It's all platitudes, too, but as Mark Twain says, 'Adam was the only original man that ever lived, wasn't he?'"

He looked quite serious during this speech, as serious as Eugene O'Brien could ever look, for in spite of his lofty aspirations, he is so brimming over with the joy of living that one wouldn't associate him off-hand with definite intentions of any sort, philanthropic or otherwise. He is big and jolly and wholesome, the sort of person whose very appearance inspires action and the assurance of a wonderful time. The discovery that underneath this gay exterior and exuberance of spirits, is a most admirable ambition, is like finding emeralds in a gold mine. Charming philanthropists are distinctly alluring. People who set out to reform the world are usually so much in need of reforming themselves.

"I'll tell you something else I'd

WILLAM NYE is awaiting word which will summon him to New York City after having completed his work as the "heavy" in the latest William Farnum film made at the Fox studio. Farnum left for the East the week of August 2nd, where he will be joined soon after by his director, J. Gordon Edwards and others of his company in the production of "The Joyous Troublemaker," from a story by Jackson Gregory.

William Rogers, the Lariat twirling, gum-chewing Goldwyn star, is regretting the consequences of a speedy trip from Santa Barbara to Los Angeles during which he managed to drive faster in his car than a motorcycle policeman could follow, only to be intercepted by another. There was a brief scene before the magistrate from which Rogers emerged sadder, but wiser.

The arrival of his yacht, "Uncas," is being eagerly awaited by John Bowers, Goldwyn leading man who is at present playing opposite Pauline Frederick. The ship, which recently was on the Atlantic coast, is being brought to Los Angeles by way of the Panama Canal, stops being made at Havana, Jamaica, Panama and San Diego. It is expected that the yacht, which is of considerable size, and entirely a sea-going vessel, will be used in a forth-coming production.

Calloused hands and badly scratched forearms are being exhibited by director Frank Lloyd of the Goldwyn studio as proof of his assertion that he assisted in harvesting eight tons of hay on his ranch at Lankershim, Calif. The Goldwyn director deserts the studio for the ranch each week end, and has succeeded in these days of the high cost of living in placing it on a highly profitable basis.

Madge Kennedy is to be first of the Goldwyn stars whose screen appearance will be enhanced by the special efforts made possible by the lense adaptation invented by Marcel Le Picard, whose work as camera man is widely known. The lense arrangement produces a close-up with a diversity of out-of-the-focus effects through which the image of the person is quite clear although the entire picture gives the impression of a halo.

Mabel Normand is to be seen each noon at the Goldwyn studios enjoying a refreshing plunge in the big pool in that place which has been equipped with canoes, a spring board and gymnasium rings for the recreation of the Goldwyn players.

Victor Schertzinger, Goldwyn director, has received a script for his next Mabel Norman feature, the name of which has not been chosen. The continuity was written by Gerald C. Duffy, formerly a magazine editor.

An average of twenty-seven miles an hour for the entire trip was made by Clarence G. Badger on a recent trip from Los Angeles to San Francisco and return during the interim between the William Rogers pictures he is producing at the Goldwyn studio.

The ninth of the gold and silver cups which he has won in similar contests was achieved by Willard Louis in a billiard contest at the Los Angeles Athletic Club. Louis, who is playing a prominent part opposite Pauline Frederick at the Goldwyn studio is not a professional with the cue, but his ability measures favorably with that of some of the widely known experts of the green table.

For the first time since she appeared in one of her earliest features, "The Rose of the Rancho," Bessie Barriscale, in her newest production "Her Purchase Price," will be seen with dark hair, but instead of losing her naturally fair curls, she merely has covered them with a titian colored wig. Unfortunately, its attractive shades must be slightly less effective on the screen than in reality.

Arthur L. Todd will be responsible for the photographic beauties of the latest picture starring J. Warren Kerrigan to be produced at the Brunton Studios, he having been engaged as carmeraman of the Kerrigan Company by Director Ernest C. Warde.

Joseph Franklin Poland, author of the original story for the Universal production, "The Spitfire of Seville," has recently made a contract with the Universal Company for eight original stories to be delivered within a year. Mr. Poland has now sixteen original releases made by leading companies during the past year.

The return of three or four million men to their homes in the United States with the realization in their minds of all that their home associations mean to them, provides the keynote to the motive underlying the productions of Scott Dunlap, who is directing Albert Ray and Elinor Fair in features at the Fox studio. The longing of these men and their families who are rejoicing in their reunions, for stories of heart interest and home atmosphere, rather than those of a disturbing theme, is being met by the efforts of the producer who is screening the Ray-Fair features. The latest of these which Dunlap has just completed, is "The Lost Princes," a light comedy drama containing many little intimate touches and situations of human interest.

The feat of producing and completing two comedies simultaneously has been accomplished by Edward Cline, Sunshine comedy director, who has just finished the final scenes of two forthcoming two-reel comedies. These are "The School House Scandal" and "Sheriff Nell's Come-back," in which Director Cline had among his principal players, Polly Moran, Slim Summerville and Jack Cooper. Following the cutting and titling of the two comedies, Cline has been in conference with Hampton Del Ruth, supervising production director of the Sunshine pictures, on the script of his next comedy.

Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock, the Vitagraph comedy team, completed, the week of August 4th, the final scenes in their elaborate subject built around the incidents of life in an artist's colony. An unusual number of gags and comedy situations, it is said, has been included in the picture, which was under the direction of Gilbert Pratt. Joe Rock, incidentally, is refusing these days to shake hands with anyone, but this is not due to any desire for exclusiveness, but because of the fact that his hands are still swollen from his recent infection of poison oak.

The cast is being selected by Director William J. Bauman for the next Vitagraph serial, starring Antonio Moreno. Mr. Bauman has received the script of the serial, which has the working title of "The Secret Service Serial." Among others selected for its presentation are Pauline Curley, playing opposite the star, and Brinsley Shaw, who will play the "heavy."

Stunts that the showman, P. T. Barnum, never dreamed would be filmed, are being incorporated by Larry Semon, Vitagraph comedian, in his latest comedy, which has much of the circus atmosphere around it. Opposite Mr. Semon is Lucille Carlisle.

William Duncan and his company, it was learned through word received at the Vitagraph studio, will not return to Los Angeles until September from their present location at Lake Huntington.

Charles Spere, whose recent work as a juvenile has attracted much attention, is playing the leading role opposite Bessie Love in that star's latest vehicle, being made at the Vitagraph studio.

Wyndham Standing, the leading man, in the surf at Miami, Fla.

really like to do," he added, "but print it in small type, because I can't get anybody to agree with me. I want to play 'Michael and His Lost Angel.' What's the matter? Don't you think I look spiritual enough for the part?"

"We don't think it would go," we maintained, "Henry Arthur Jones is a little bit too advanced for the picture fans."

"But I don't believe in playing down to one's audience," he argued. "That's one trouble with the movies. And now that Griffith has proved how wrong we were in believing that we had to have a happy ending. I think the rest of us might venture a few departures in other lines, don't you?"

"We'd like nothing better than to see you do it, by way of digression. Won't you tell us what your latest hobbies are?"

"Only one just at present—my house. I'm building a home, and I'm watching it grow with the greatest enthusiasm."

"And who is going to live in it with you?" eagerly.

"My mother," emphatically, "we're the best of pals, and we're going to have a great time together. No, it's not a country place, it's in the center of town, because, as I said before, I like people and I like to see them around, especially in the evening. The country's alright for horseback-riding—I'm fond of that, you know—but I'd rather be in the heart of things."

Which is typical of Eugene O'Brien. He may be fastidious, sensitive artists are, when they can afford to be, but he is essentially interested in life, keenly alive to vitally human affairs; and, in our opinion, the pleasure he gives the picture-loving public quite justifies the belief that his ideals aren't the least bit too idealistic, but are pretty certain to be fulfilled.

Jose Production Not a War Picture

Because of misunderstandings and misprints on the subject, Edward Jose wishes to announce that "Mothers Of Men," the first Edward Jose Production for Film Specials Inc., although adapted from the novel of the same name, by Henry William Warner and DeWitte Kaplan, will not be a war picture.

The war element in the book has been eliminated, save only when necessary to give background and atmosphere to events which happen to have occurred during war times, but which would have the same dramatice value as a story during any period of life and history, and in any locale. Claire Whitney, Lumsden Hare, Martha Mansfield, Gaston Glass and Frankie Bailey, are some of those who will be seen in the cast of this film, which is now rapidly nearing completion. The story is divided into two sections, the first part dealing with German episodes and the second part with French.

Apfel Directing New World Feature

Oscar Apfel has finished directing the production of "The Oakdale Affair," Edgar Rice Burroughs' mystery story in which Evelyn Greeley is the star. He is now at work cutting the picture to get it down to a length that makes it desirable for use by exhibitors. He is being assisted in editing the picture by Lee Dougherty, one of the best known film cutters as well as the oldest in the industry.

High Booking Mark

J. E. Flynn, manager of Goldwyn's Detroit exchange, made a clean-up last week by booking four Goldwyn pictures for first runs at leading theatres in Detroit. This is said to be an unusual record for any producing company in this city.

Ruth Accomplishes Things

Comedy Director Has Built Up Most Efficient Organization in Half Year

IN six months time Hampton Del Ruth laid the foundation for, and has built up, under his generalship, a smooth-working efficient comedy organization, with a corps of the best talent obtainable, at the William Fox Sunshine Studios in Hollywood.

He has completed a dozen new pictures under his personal supervision, now ready for release by the Fox Film Corporation, which are said to be of the highest type of broad, clean comedy.

Starting in March with two companies, he now has six organizations, headed by such directors as Edward Cline, Frank Griffin, Jack Blystone, Vin Moore and Roy Del Ruth, whose previous comedy experiences insure the producer of the best co-operation in his efforts.

Plans have been laid for a busy season of production at the Sunshine utudio for the making of two real comedies; each one of which when released will carry Mr. Del Ruth's guarantee of something worth while and different. Each story will mean something, teach a lesson, or drive a moral home; it must gain its point by good, honest, wholesome laughter and humor. He does not believe it is necessary to insult or abuse any class or condition to attain this result. It is his ambition and purpose to put in each something more than mere entertainment; he wants each one to embrace a point so high and striking it cannot be forgotten.

A natural executive ability has enabled him to gather together and handle a large corps of employees and stars, and through them to present to the exhibitor the "real thing" in side splitting comedy. He has gathered about him several of the funniest comedians in the business, including Chester Conklin, Polly Moran, Jack Cooper, Ethel Teare, Glen Cavender, and last but by no means least, the Sunshine beauty brigade, celebrated as well for their talents and brains as for their photographic qualities.

War Veteran to Direct Al Jennings

Lieutenant Helmer Walton Bergman has just returned from two years with the United States Air Service, his latest command being 1,200 men at Carlstrom Field, Florida, and is now under contract with the Capital Film Company to direct Mr. Jennings in his series of pictures dealing with activities in Oklahoma and Indian Territory.

Bergman was formerly connected with Vitagraph.

Trade Show in Home of Grand Opera

Friday, August 8, Frank B. Rogers, Chicago manager of the Pathe, had the distinction of entertaining the exhibitors of Chicago and surrounding territory at a showing of "The World Aflame," featuring Frank Keenan, in the Auditorium theatre, one of Chicago's oldest and most respected temples of amusement.

Prince of Wales Invited to Fox Plant

When His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, visits New York he is expected to be the guest of honor at a tremendous reception, with sentimental surroundings, in the Academy of Music, the largest motion picture house in the world. The sentiment attached to such a reception is that when Edward VII, then Prince of Wales, visited New York in the 60's as "Lord Renfrew" he was welcomed to the United States by an imposing reception at the old Academy of Music.

With this thought in mind, William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, who controls the Academy among his hundreds of places of amusement, has just sent a telegram to the Prince inviting him to be the guest at another similar reception. Mr. Fox, in the telegram, welcomed the Prince to the new world and extended to him the congratulations of motion picture workers throughout the United States. He then suggested that His Royal Highness, being noted for his democracy, inspect the great motion picture city, within two miles of Broadway, which is now being constructed by the Fox interests at Fifty-sixth street and Tenth avenue.

New Realart Official

Lewis Kniskern has been appointed Supervisor of Contracts of Realart Pictures Corporation. He comes to the new film producing and distributing company with a business record aggregating fifteen years.

In addition to his experience as a business executive in films' circles, Mr. Kniskern has been an exhibitor. He resigned from Famous Players-Lasky to become affiliated on a partnership basis with the Nathan-Friedberg Company, which operates a chain of seven photoplay theatres in Pittsburgh and Cleveland. Mr. Kniskern supervised the management of the Pittsburgh houses.

At the Ince Plant

UNDER the working title of "A Man's Money," the latest Charles Ray feature has been completed from a story by Julian Josephson, and the star began work the week of August 4th on his next vehicle, which is based on a story written by Agnes Johnson, a recent acquisition of the Ince scenario staff.

Fred Niblo is directing some of the big mob scenes which will be used in the forthcoming special Ince production, "Americanism vs. Bolshevism," at the old Inceville grounds in the Santa Monica mountains. The production rapidly is assuming finished proportions, and it is expected that the concluding scenes will be made in the near future.

Douglas MacLean and Doris May are being featured in a screen version of "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave," a story in the Saturday Evening Post by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Thomas H. Ince has obtained the services for an extended period of Gladys George, Charles Ray's leading woman in a recent picture, by placing her under contract.

Word has been received at Culver City that Dorothy Dalton, Ince star, has begun production in New York in "The White Rook," the mystery story by J. D. Harris-Burland.

Vitagraph News-Bits

THE Earle Williams Company has made the final scenes of "The Black Gate," the crook story by Hilliard Booth, in which Williams is being starred. The concluding episodes were made in the Los Angeles County jail.

David Smith is completing the direction of his latest Bessie Love feature, "Love At First Fight," which has as its story a theme of city tenement life, by Gerald C. Duffy, formerly a magaine editor.

A strong scene from the William Fox production "Wolves of the Night" in which William Farnum is starred

Here is Billie Rhodes, who has the leading role in the Hodkinson offering, "The Blue Bonnet," a Salvation Army story

Production has been begun of the next serial starring Antonio Moreno which has been given the working title of "The Secret Service Serial." The script is by Cyrus Townsend Brady and Albert E. Smith, and William J. Bauman will be its director. Included in the cast so far are Pauline Curley, who will play opposite Moreno, and Brinsley Shaw, who will be the heavy.

Larry Semon has begun work in the latest comedy of which he is to be both comedian and director, a story of circus life and many of the scenes are being made under show canvas, with Lucile Carlyle playing opposite the comedian.

William Duncan and his company will remain at Lake Huntington until September, where they are making exteriors for Duncan's newest production.

A burlesque of artists' colony life is being completed by Montgomery and Rock under the direction of Gilbert Pratt.

The biggest set ever constructed at the Western Vitagraph studio for a comedy production has been completed for the use of Noel Smith in his direction of his next comedy, which will be a tenement story featuring Babe Hardy and Jimmy Aubrey.

Universal Newsettes

Frank Mayo, who recently completed "A Little Brother of the Rich" and "The Brute Breaker" under Lynn Reynold's direction, has started on "Lasca," a screen adaptation of the well known poem of the Rio Grande. Norman Dawn is directing the feature, and Edith Roberts is playing opposite Mayo. The supporting cast includes Arthur Jasmine, Lloyd Whitlock and Viola Harry.

"Betty Reforms" is the title of a story by Mildred Considene which William C. Dowlan has started producing with Ora Carew, Forrest Stanley and Charles Clary as the triumvirate of stars.

In another week Monroe Salisbury will have completed "The Divorced Wife," F. McGrew Willis' adaptation of "The Altar on Little Thunder," Elliott Peake's well known story, which Douglas Gerrard is directing. Alice Elliott, who has supported Salisbury in two of his earlier productions, is again his feminine opposite.

Early next week Mary MacLaren will start work on "Myself, Becky," from the story by W. Carey Wonderly, prolific novelette writer for "Smart Set" and other publications. Tod Browning, who just completed "Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie" with the Scotch lassie, will again handle the directorial megaphone.

Harry Carey, Universal's western star, is enjoying a brief vacation on his ranch in Southern California, while Jack Ford, his director, is seeking a new outdoor melodrama.

Director Jacques Jaccard is taking the finishing scenes for "The Winged Trail," the first big melodrama of the skies, in which Lieutenant O. L. Locklear, the only man changing planes in mid-air, is starred. Francelia Billington and Carmen Phillips have the principal feminine roles in the production.

Paramount-Artcraft

MARGUERITE CLARK has completed her work as star of "A Girl Named Mary," being produced under the direction of Walter Edwards.

Final scenes were made at Big Bear Lake under the direction of Robert G. Vignola of "The Heart of Youth," in which Lila Lee plays the most important part. Miss Lee soon will go to New York City, accompanied by her guardian, Mrs. Gus Edwards, and upon her return will be starred in a C. B. DeMille picture.

"Why Change Your Wife?" a companion picture to "Don't Change Your Husband," was started by C. B. DeMille the week of August 18 at the Lasky studio. The cast for the production has not yet been selected.

Pauline Frederick, Goldwyn star, and Clara Williams in a pretty little skit entitled, "Laughs at the Seashore"

May Allison and her leading man, Eugene Pallette, in the Metro feature, "Fair and Warmer." Reading the script is Henry Otto, director of the farce comedy

Ethel Clayton, who is enjoying a brief vacation, soon will start her stellar work under the direction of Robert Z. Vignola in a feature for which elaborate arrangements are being made to provide her introduction to Paramount Artcraft exhibitors under the selective booking plans.

Director James Cruze, Major Robert Warwick and their company have been on location at Kernville for scenes of their picture, "Captain Dieppe."

With Lois Wilson as his leading woman, Bryant Washburn will soon have completed his work as star in "It Pays to Advertise," the picture being directed by Donald Crisp.

Fox Studio Doings

WILLIAM FARNUM departed on August 2nd for New York City, after completing his work in his latest feature, "Wings of the Morning," a picturization of the novel of the same name by Louis Tracy. Direcor J. Gordon Edwards left for the east a few days later, and prepared for the production of the next Farnum picture, "The Joyous Trouble-Maker," by Jackson Gregory.

A South African story will be the next vehicle for Madlaine Traverse, which Edmund Lawrence will direct. Miss Traverse is finishing her latest picture temporarily called "The Snares of Paris," a story of politics and diplomacy, being directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

Frank R. Beal is said to have made a record for fast production in the direction of "Thieves," the latest Gladys Brockwell picture, in which all the scenes were made in nineteen days.

Vin Moore is directing the final scenes of a Sunshine Comedy in which a lion plays the most important part. Because of the difficulty of making the animal stunts in the picture the time of the production has been protracted, but under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth many unusual thrills, it is said, have been incorporated in the comedy.

TWO super-features have been begun during the week of August 4th. With Tsuri Oaki (Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa), as the star. Rollin Sturgeon has begun direction of "The Breath of the Gods," an unusual story, it is said, which provides the Nipponese actress's first stellar vehicle here. In support of Mrs. Hayakawa are included Stanhope Wheatcroft, Pat O'Malley, Arthur Carewe, Ethel Shannon, Barney Sherry, Marion Skinner, N. Seki, Mae Wells and Wedgewood Nowell.

The second big feature is "Ambition," in which Dorothy Phillips is to play the leading role under the direction of Allen Holubar. In this picture Miss Phillips will be shown as a small-town girl with great ambitions to become an opera singer. The same notable type of cast which supported Miss Phillips in "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Right to Happiness," will be seen with her again.

Work has been begun under the direction of Rex Ingraham on "The Beach Combers," from the story by J. G. Hawks, in which Elmo Lincoln, star of the "Elmo the Mighty" serial, will be starred. Mabel Ballin, who played in the recent Maurice Tourneur production of "The White Heather," will play opposite Lincoln, while others in the cast include Harry von Meter, Ethelyn Irving, Dick L. Reno and Frank Brownlee.

Here and There

EUGENE GAUDIO, for two years Mme. Nazimova's cameraman, has been engaged to provide the photography for the latest Bessie Barriscale feature, "Her Purchase Price," now in production at the Brunton studios. Included in the cast of the production are Albert Roscoe, Joseph Dowling, Wedgwood Nowell, Henry Kolker, Una Trevelyn and Lillian Langdon. The story was written by Maie B. Havey.

Mary Pickford with her director, Sidney A. Franklin, and the entire company, are at Big Bear Lake in the San Bernardino mountains to film the Cumberland mountain scenes for "The Heart of the Hills," the John Fox, Jr., story which Mary Pickford is now screening. Among those who will be seen with Miss Pickford in the last of her First National productions will be Claire MacDowell, Harold Goodwin, Allen Sears, Sam deGrasse, Fred Warren, Jack Gilbert, Betty Bouton, Fred Huntley and Antrim Short.

The direction of the newest Gale Henry comedy being made for the Model Comedy Company, is being handled by Herman C. Raymaker, who has been engaged for that purpose to relieve Bruno Becker in order that Mr. Becker, who is Gale Henry's husband and had been directing the comedienne, may have opportunity to devote more time to the business end of the Gale Henry organization.

Henry Lehrman, producer of Henry Lehrman Comedies, is attending a convention at Colorado Springs, Colo., of executives of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit from all over the country. Mr. Lehrman was accompanied by T. L. Tally, vice-president of the First National, and proprietor of Tally's Broadway theatre in Los Angeles. During the producer's absence the Henry Lehrman Studios at Culver City are in charge of Al Herman.

Jack White, director of Lehrman Comedies, distributed by First National

J. Parker Reed, Jr., has begun production of his latest Louise Glaum picture which is being made from one of the popular Lone Wolf stories by Louis Joseph Vance. Much of the action takes place in the notorious Limehouse district of London, and the picture in its entirety, it is said, will be a spectacular melodrama of London life. Supporting Miss Glaum are Edwin Stevens, Bertram Grassby and Thomas Holding.

The two open stages at the Robert Brunton studios are being converted to dark stages by Robert Brunton, who is of the opinion, after a year's study of lighting methods, that artificial light is best adapted for interior scenes. Brunton, however, is having a new open stage built which will measure 90 x 200 feet.

A ten-acre tract adjoining the Robert Brunton studios has been converted to a ball diamond and athletic ground for the studio attaches.

The McCarthy Picture Productions has completed its first feature being made in the Universal City stages, and a preview of the film has been given by the Supervisor and Director, John P. McCarthy. The story of the picture is concerned with the life of the western plains of the period of 1870, and while the stirring struggles of the early settlers with the Indians and the incidents in the lives of the soldiers and cattlemen are depicted with fidelity, these form only the background for the action of the play. An all star cast was provided which includes Dorcas Matthews, Robert McKim, Russell Simpson, Bert Sproote and Master Pat Moore. Vic Milner handled the camera.

Harvey F. Thew has signed a contract to write continuity for forthcoming Goldwyn productions.

Al Jennings, accompanied by Harry Owen, has returned to the studio of the Capital Film Company in Los Angeles following a visit to Chicago and a tour of the Middle West in which the noted actor and former bandit made personal appearances at many motion picture houses. Work has been begun on the next Al Jennings feature, named "The Long Riders," under the direction of H. W. Bergman and on the completion of this will be begun the series of two-reel pictures showing incidents in the one-time association of Al Jennings and O. Henry.

Dorothy Gish at the Griffith studio has begun work in her latest comedy, one of the modern life,

AUGUST 23, 1919 — NEWS — MORE NEWS

Pleasantly foggy every morning.

Pauline Curley is now Vitagraphing with Tony Moreno.

Gladys George is a new leading woman on the Tom Ince lot.

Kathleen Kirkham moved her make-up box to Goldwyn studio this week.

Nat Spitzer is goin to have an auction sale of two tons of n. g. films.

Enid Bennett has a summer camp in Topango Canyon, far from the madding crowds.

Hampton Del Ruth reassures us that he will make twenty-six Sunshine comedies this year.

Some people are not a bit suspicious; Frank Beal directed a picture named "Thieves."

Mary Pickford finds mountain resorts absolutely necesary for "The Heart of the Hills."

It took a trip of one hundred miles to find a suitable location for Viola Dana this week.

Dave Thompson has a new Hudson Super-Six which takes him to the Screen Classic studio every day.

Mr. Carbon Copy informs us that Charlie Dorety, Bull's Eye comedian, is not a Sinn Feiner.

Lynn Reynolds was seen at the ball game buying everything the vendors had to sell, including peanuts.

Jery Duffy has blossomed forth as a scenario writer, and has named his first play "Love at First Fight."

Robert McKim had his mustache shaved off, but he still claims he is the meanest man on the screen.

Coca Cola now serves as cocktails in Metro pictures, because May Allison and Cola both came from Atlanta.

John Ince claims he got in pictures by permitting a man to hit him over the head with a butt of a rifle.

Frank Lloyd was out to his ranch Sunday and stored away eight tons of green hay in order to let his mind relax.

Robert Brunton has opened up a ball park across the street from the studio, where the Photoplay League will play.

The bathing season officially began at Goldwyn studio this week when needed repairs and the big tank were completed.

Willard Louis has won nine silver cups playing billiards, all of which has nothing to do with his ability as an actor.

Julian Josephson was seen entering a photo gallery this week, and we later learned that he was looking for local color.

Luther Reed is not only a photowright, but a playwright, and his first stage offering is to be seen in San Francisco shortly.

Bill Christie Cabanne has two vamps to contend with, Lou Cody and Jack Mower, and aside from that has a very pleasant position.

Fred Niblo refereed the fight of "Americanism vs. Bolshevism," at Inceville this week, when knives, sticks, stones and guns were used.

Yellow paper has been adopted by the press department of Lou Cody productions, all of which is not fully understood by the Hokum staff.

Gene Gaudio has transferred his affections from the camera shooting Nazimova to the one that registers the emotions of Bessie Barriscale.

Louise Glaum is reported to have sprained her arm in a fight scene within a Chinese den, but says she doesn't mind it a bit, for it added realism.

Madlaine Traverse is going to South Africa for her next picture; that is, she won't leave Los Angeles, but it will look like South Africa.

Harvey Thew claims to have made a contract to write for Goldwyn, which will result in his taking over the plant at the expiration of the contract.

Bill Keefe broke into print this week with a column letter addresed to President Wilson in which Keefe prayed for the right to make a film starring the Kaiser.

The latest studio to start a zoo is that where Bull's Eye comedies are made. Live stock now consists of bulls, two skunks, two white rats, an eel and a buzzard.

Ernest C. Warde reports the rumors of a crap game in and about a set he was working with this week, but investigations prove that they were pitching horse-shoes.

Charlie Giegerich's copy from Vitagraph gives the title to be "The Black Gate," referring to a jail, we guess, and the question arises whether he means the "Back Gate" or not.

Frank Keenan, that grand young fellow of the films, is back in our midst after a three months' trip about. Frank had to get new grips in order to bring his presents home.

Will Rogers has been served with a warning that an effort is being made to enact legislation that will stop gum-chewing, which means that when this is done he will not be able to whiz the lariat.

Metro's publicity department is to be enlarged, and in the future will consist of three sheets instead of one. Fred Taylor will be at the head, and the additions are Dan C. Byck, news writer, and Don Keys, news photographer.

Now that "The Luck of the Irish" is to be filmed it is interesting to note that Dwan is the director, Hogan his assistant, Kirkwood the leading man, McKay business manager, Grogan the ingenue and MacWilliams the cameraman.

Bill Duncan spoke to Hungington Lake in no uncertain terms last week, all because the gentle lake sent a wild wave after Bill's cameraman's boat and upset everything, dropping the film in the Lake. Bill did another leap for life because of the lost film.

Micky Neilan told San Francisco papers Los Angeles didn't treat the picture people right, and therefore Micky was going to build his $750,000 studio in a good land and amongst good people. Scanning the newspapers, we find that no one copied Neilan's interview.

American made guns are superior to those made in the land of the Hun. This was proven this week when Douglas Fairbanks and Fred Burns alternately tried out a Colt and a Luger with the same results. The target was a badge on the coat of a cow-boy against a board fence. The cow-boy was a poster.

Monte Katterjohn, the original author producer, is not satisfied with an ordinary bungalow, but had one built on the top of a beach hotel. This gives him a fourway view, making possible his seeing everything that transpires in all directions. This should help in visualizing his stories.

George E. Bellman, who writes pieces for the Seattle Times paper, is o-o-ing the film colony on his annual trip this week. This is George's fifth annual pilgrimage, and he claims he came here first with the Universal beauties, and since that time has not been able to stay away longer than a year at a time.

Bert Lytell, having to use a Turkish cradle in "Lombardi, Ltd.," was annoyed because it took four weeks for the prop department to manufacture it, and so he said sarcastically: "If it takes a month to make a Turkish cradle, how long does it take to make a Turkish harem?" which may or may not be answered in our next.

Clara Kimball Young gave up her stateroom on the San Francisco-Los Angeles train so that she could play in some scenes in an ordinary day-coach on the way down, and the common old train jumped the track, it being unusued to carrying aristocracy. So Clara had the tedious stop-at-all-stations ride for nothing and a wreck experience thrown in for good measure.

GOLDWYN GIVES LUNCHEON.

Gouverneur Morris' one requirement for a contract with Samuel Goldwyn was that he could have a California bungalow and a chink cook.

Rupert Hughes refused to sign a contract if he had to have anything to do with production.

Rex Beach stories are not desirable by many exhibitors unless they are laid in Alaska.

These facts were made known by Samuel Goldwyn this week when he gave a luncheon to writers, including the editor of HOKUM. (That explains what kind of writers.) Mr. Goldwyn told many things about the industry, and Rex Beach added a word as to how it could be saved, and then it was explained that the clinch must be maintained for the "happy ending" of photoplays, or the people would leave the theatres down-hearted. The head of Goldwyn pictures gave a good tip to scenario writers. He said: "Every first class magazine and book appreciates pictures as illustrations, thereby proving that the picture is more emphatic than the printed word." Therefore, inasmuch as Mr. Goldwyn reads many scenarios, it can be taken for granted that illustrated contributions will get more attention than one without pictures.

After the above facts were made known, bacon and eggs were served, and a quiet time ensued, until somebody mentioned the word "censorship," and then everybody had a new remedy for whitewashing the industry and the screen. Everybody held for a still.

Equipment Service

News and Gossip in the Equipment World

It's a difficult job to get hold of Chas. Bass of Bass Camera Co., of Chicago, these days. Although his company does a large business in photographic supplies Bass handles the motion picture end himself, and is making a great thing out of it. At the present time he is having difficulty in getting enough material to supply the demand, especially for cameras.

A. B. McMillan seems to have the whip-hand over the portable American Projectoscope. He spends part of his time at the offices of the American Film Co., way out on Broadway and the rest of it at the factory where the Projectoscopes are being turned out. This little machine, by the way, has been a wonderful success out on the market and the manufacturers can't begin to fill the orders.

John K. Selbeck, advertising manager of the National X-Ray Co., and a royal good fellow is back on the job. His firm has been carrying out several flood-lighting installations on theatre fronts.

If we were to tell you how far behind in orders the Enterprise Optical Company was at the time we called on Spahr you wouldn't believe us. Their factory out there was being torn up and enlarged and yet their production was far ahead of normal.

But did we talk projectors with Spahr? We did not. We talked farms and farming. Spahr is one of the best little farmers in Indiana and owns a chunk of land with a value on it like a Fifth Avenue, Forty-second Street block. It wouldn't be so bad if some of the rest of us had a neat little farm to fall back on in case the boss fired us or the office boy got our job. Now, would it?

Ever since we returned from the Windy City on the Lake we've been praying that some kind benevolent gentleman would start a cinema center in that town so that we poor travelders wouldn't have to travel all over the Middle West in getting from one manufacturer to another, in the city of Chicago.

Having passed the infant stage the Lightning Coin Changer is now forging ahead and meeting all comers. Unfortunately Krause of that company, was away on one of his numerous trips, but we had a pleasant chat with E. C. Nagel, city sales manager.

Last Week We Met—C. F. Jenkins

YOU say you don't need to be introduced to C. Francis because you stayed at the Algonquin for a week while he was there?

That's funny, he is usually a very quiet chap.

I guess you're right—when he laughs there is apt to be some outburst—you could spot him, and then what's left of his hair is red and that means life, activity—yes and lungs—more power to them.

Yes, we have seen him in Washington, 12th Street, North West—quiet place—when his secretary is there alone. But when C. Francis is demonstrating a Graphoscope, or a pet theory, or telling how he organized the society of Motion Picture Engineers, or worked a patent for heating the carburator on one of his six automobiles in zero weather, or something, then there is apt to be some commotion.

Interested?

Yes, he is interested in everything from Motion Pictures to seeing how near he can come to breaking his neck with a flying machine. He'll get away with one or the other some day.

Age?

Well, he's not so young as he looks. You see, he's the direct desceendent of a Quaker and they became extinct years ago, at least in the section of the country where Jenkins came from.

Own the National Museum?

Well, all but that portion which George Washington, General Grant and Theodore Roosevelt set aside for themselves before they received the degree of L. D. (long dead).

C. F. hired his corner for the original Motion Picture projector which he and a man called Armat designed. You know—wood sprockets set up on ten-penny nails and everything. No, no, no! Did not know what a prism was in those days, straight throw—everything simple. First one ever made. Don't wonder you thought he owned the museum. I did too. He showed it to me too, just like he does to everyone.

"Pop," that's what some of those who know him best call him, for he was directly responsible for the birth of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and he is proud of it, what is more. Nope. No doctor or anything; did it all himself—absolutely painless.

You want to reach him? Well, he gets down as far as 120 Broadway, West as far as Newark, and North as far as 50 East 42nd Street, when he is in New York, but he's not here much so I guess he doesn't like anyone at any of these private numbers overmuch.

If you want to reach him address Washington, that's all. He's better known than the prohibition amendment.

Campe—Campe of Westinghouse fame, you know—was very much at work in East Pittsburg. To close motor deals running into the hundreds of thousands has become as common an occurrence with him as quelling an anti-substandard riot. He had just received the first lot of bound volumes of the S. M. P. E. Trans. and announced that they were ready for distribution to members at $1.50 but to non-members the cost would be $5.

During Campe's frequent calls from the outside we were most satisfactorily taken care of by Mr. White, his assistant.

Also saw Harvey Wible, of the Supply Dept., W. E. Co., an authority on the mercury arc rectifier. From overheard remarks we have formed an idea that the Pittsburgh crowd is figuring on some first class entertainments when the Engineers meet in that town in October, probably on the 14th, 15th and 16th.

Intimate Items About People You Know

Sh-h-h! On the quiet! There is something new coming from the direction of Bell and Howell that will make some of you men sigh with joy. And then there's another something coming from the same place. But we've been pledged not to say a word about either of the newcomers until they are ready for the market—or rather until they are a bit more ready than they are at the present time. John McNabb, treasurer of B. and H. was unusually kind in showing us about his place, assisted by C. E. Marshall, Sales Engineer, who has been a frequent contributor to the NEWS.

There is a wonderful story being hatched out in Davenport, Iowa, where Victor and his Animatograph Company hold sway, and we hope to spring it soon. The Animatograph Company is housed in an excellent structure not far from the center of the town and is turning out stereos and portable machines at a wonderful rate.

A. F. Victor, Chicago citizen and Davenport commuter, is expecting to desert business for a month or two and take up the gentle art of fishing. Any suggestions as to the correct tackle to take on such a trip by which a man can be sure of pulling a flush whenever sorely needed will be gratefully accepted by this office and forwarded to the fisherman.

S. G. Rose, Victor's first lieutenant, had a birthday recently. Sorry we can't say more. But it was a very successful one—considering.

The lantern slide department at the Animatograph is in charge of Carl Balcomb. An idea of the immense business which is done in this line is given by the statement that during the last twelve months this firm has made and shipped over 100,000 slides. Balcomb's plans for the coming year are even more ambitious and if carried out will make the 100,000 record look picayunish.

Out at Ft. Wayne we met R. E. Russell and A. D. Cameron from the Schenectady Works of the General Electric Co. Due to a reorganization the motion picture equipment formerly sold from Ft. Wayne will now be handled by Cameron from Schenectady.

Fundamentals of Illumination

By K. P. Burrows

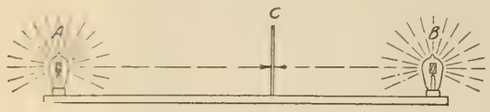
Photometry is a specialized branch of the science of illumination which in itself may be made the subject of an extended study. The man doing field work in illumination has no need of an intimate knowledge of all the details that enter into this branch of the art. In the following discussion, photometers are treated in a broad, general way and for more detailed description of the instruments, the reader is referred to standard works on the subject of illumination and photometry.



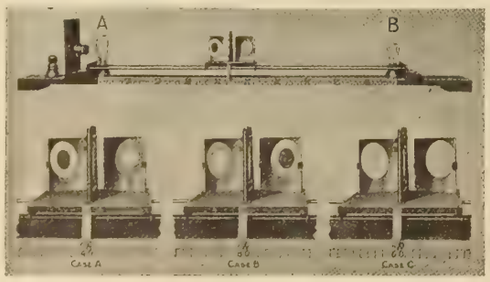
A sketch of the most simple type of photometer is given in Fig. 7. The essential part of this photometer is a vertical paper screen between the lamps to be compared, at the center of which is a grease spot. When the illumination on one side of the screen is greater than that on the other, the spot will on this side appear darker and on the other side lighter than the surrounding paper. By sliding the screen back and forth on the bar, a position can be found where the outlines of the spot will vanish and the spot itself will disappear. When this condition obtains the illuminations on both sides of the screen are the same.

In order that both sides of the screen may be seen simultaneously, mirrors are mounted obliquely behind the screen. In Fig. 8, Case A, it will be noted that the spot as viewed in the left hand mirror is darker than its surroundings and as viewed in the right-hand mirror is lighter than its surroundings, which indicates that the left-hand side of the screen is illuminated to a higher intensity than the right. In Case B of the same figure, it will be noted that the conditions are reversed; therefore, in this case the illumination on the right side of the screen is greater than that on the left. Somewhere between these two positions is a position at which the spot will cease to be visible, as shown in Case C of Fig. 8.

From what has been said above, the intensities of illumination on both sides of the screen in Case C are equal. Now, since we have a relation between the intensities of illumination that the two lamps being compared are able to produce, we can reason back as to the relation between the candle-powers given, respectively, by lamps A and B (See Fig. 8). The scale of the photometer shows us that at a distance of 60 inches the lamp A produces an illumination equal to that which the lamp B can produce at a distance of 40 inches. At first thought we might say that A must give 3/2 as great a candle-power as B, but recalling the inverse square law referred to on page 14, which states that the intensity of illumination varies inversely as the square of the distance, or what is the same thing, that the candle-power necessary to produce a given illumination varies as the square of the distance from the source of the plane, we see that the ratio of the candle-power of A to that of B instead of being 3 to 2 is 3^2 to 2^2 or 9 to 4. The horizontal candle-power of A, therefore, is 2¼ times that of B. If B is a lamp of some known candle-power, the candle-power of A is determined by multiplying the candle-power of B by 2¼. The general rule, then is that the candle-powers of two lamps on a photometer are to each other as the squares of the distances from each to the screen are to each other. For accurate photometry, the grease spot screen is no longer in use, but the newer and more accurate photometers are the same in principle.

The simple bar photometer measures candle-power in one direction only. If the lamp being measured is rotated about its vertical axis, its mean horizontal candle-power is obtained. In like manner, if the vertical axis of the lamp being measured is tipped and the lamp rotated on this axis, the average candle power at any angle can be determined.

An instrument called the foot-candle meter as mentioned last year, has been designed to measure foot-candle intensities quickly and with a fair degree of accuracy. It is very simple in operation, so light that it can be easily carried about, and so small that readings can be taken in very restricted spaces. The instrument is shown in Fig. 9. In operation, it is placed upon or adjacent to the surface on which a measurement of the foot-candle intensity is desired. A lamp within the box illuminates the under side of the photometric screen to a much higher intesity at one end than at the other. The illumination which it is desired to measure is, of course, practically uniform over the entire scale. Closely spaced translucent dots, which serve the same purpose as the grease spot in the simple bar photometer, line the scale from end to end. If the illumination on the scale from the outside falls within the measuring limits of the meter (0.5-25 foot-candles) the spots will appear brighter at one end of the scale than at the other, and at the point where the spots are neither brighter nor darker than the white paper scale the illuminations from within and from without are equal. The scale is accurately calibrated with the lamp within the box burning at a certain definite voltage. A voltmeter and rheostat permit the operator to adjust the lamp voltage to that at which the instrument was originally calibrated. The energy is supplied from small dry cells.



This instrument is proving very serviceable for "checking up" installations to insure, for example, that the illumination is ample when the projection equipment is in first-class shape and to see that it is not allowed to fall below a desirable value due to improper care and attention being given to the system. This instrument is of special value in securing data which can be applied in the designing of future installations.

The three units which have been discussed at length, the candle, the lumen and the foot-candle, will find wider and wider usage in the motion picture industry as their meanings become better understood. A discussion of light sources, for example, involves a discussion of intrinsic brilliancy (which means candle-power per square inch of luminous area) for upon the intrinsic brilliancy of a source depends in large measure its effectiveness in light projection. It involves a discussion of candle-power distribution of light, for upon this depends in large measure the design of the optical system. It involves a discussion of lumens output per unit of power input, for the source we use must be acceptable from the standpoint of light produced for energy consumed.

A discussion of the efficiency of optical systems involves the use of the unit of light flux, the lumen.

A discussion of screen illumination involves the use of the term lumen for expressing the total light flux reaching a screen, and the term foot-candle for discussing the distribution of the light flux over the area of the screen. The brightness of the screen involves, also, the term candle-power.

A discussion of theatre lighting involves the term candle-power, foot-candle, and lumen. The candle-power per unit of source area must be low in order that glare will be avoided, the foot-candle intensity must be sufficiently high to permit obstacles to be avoided, and the lumen output of the lamps must be sufficient to provide the proper foot candle intensity.

As I have pointed out, the definitions are simple once their meaning and purpose are thoroughly understood. The following definitions have been accepted by many technical societies throughout the country.

CANDLE-POWER

The candle-power is the unit in which the luminous intensity of a light source is measured. Measurement of candle-power is not made directly, but is obtained by comparison with that produced by a standard under certain specified conditions.

The present unit of candle-power is referred to as the "International Candle," and is a unit 1.6 per cent. smaller than the old "British" or old American candle, which was in use in the United States prior to 1909. The following table gives the relation between the units in use at the present time:

1 International Candle ....1 American Candle.
1 International Candle ....1 French Candle, called "Bougie Decimale."
1 International Candle ....1 English Candle, called "Pentane Candle."

If the intensity be measured in all directions in a plane perpendicular to the axis and passing through the center of the filament, the average of the values obtained would be called the mean horizontal candle-power. The axis of an incandescent lamp is assumed to be a line connecting the center of the base and the tip of the bulb.

The average of the candle-power intensities in all possible directions from the source is known as the mean spherical candle-power. Rating in terms of mean spherical candle-power is of supreme importance in comparing lamps having differently shaped filament. The mean spherical candle-power bears a definite relation to the total flux of light, and is, therefore, sometimes used as a measure of that quantity. The mean horizontal candle-power cannot satisfactorily be used to indicate the light output of other than vacuum incandescent lamps and lamps without concentrated filaments; because of this limitation it is being superseded by ratings dependent directly upon the total light emitted. (See definition of "Lumen.")

THE FOOT-CANDLE

The intensity to which a surface is illuminated is measured in foot-candles. The intensity of illumination can be measured by a photometer, or it can be calculated when the candle-power, direction and distance of the light source or sources is known. The illumination produced by a source of 1 c.-p. on a perpendicular place 1 foot away has an intensity of 1 foot-candle. When one lumen of flux uniformly covers 1 square foot of surface, the surface is illuminated to an intensity of 1 foot-candle.

The candle-power is that of the source in the direction of the surface considered, the angle is the angle between the light-ray (when the surface is perpendicular to the ray of light, the angle is 90 degrees and sine is 1.00). D is the distance in feet from the source to the surface.

This relation holds exactly only when the source dimensions are small compared with the distance of measurement.

LUMEN

The lumen is the unit of light flux. The flux required to light a given surface is proportional to the illumination and to the area of the surface. One lumen will light a surface of 1 square foot to an average intensity of 1 foot-candle. The number of lumens required to light a surface to any given illumination is equal to the product obtained by multiplying the area of the surface in square feet by the average foot candles which it is desired to produce. Since a foot-candle of illumination is produced by a source of 1 c.-p. shining on a surface one foot distant, if a source giving 1 c.-p. in every direction is at the center of a hollow sphere of 1 foot radius every point on the interior surface of the sphere will be illuminated directly from the source to an illumination of 1 foot-candle. As the interior surface of the sphere of 1 foot radius has an area of 12.57 square feet and as the 1 c.-p. source directly illuminates this area of 12.57 square feet to 1 foot-candle, the source must produce 12.57 lumens. Consequently a source of an intensity of 1 c.-p. in every direction, which is 1 spherical candle-power, has an output of 12.57 lumens.

In view of their usefulness in the study of light projection, I suggest that these definitions be incorporated in the Standards of this Society, and that this Society make an earnest effort to popularize them in the motion picture industry.

Another Punch-hole Expert

SOMETIME ago we sent out an S. O. S. call in the hopes of finding an "operator" somewhere who was using a heart-shaped punch. Since then we have heard of the fiend from several directions, but as the newspapers say, "At this writing he is still at large."

But down from Edmonton, Alberta, where many good things in projection and allied subjects come from, we get this letter from H. Stofford, 2nd Projectionist at the Empress Theatre, in that city.

"This being my first letter to the NEWS I will make it as short as possible. Lately you have heard from a number of our men from Alberta. I am the next on the list. I am second projectionist at the Empress Theatre here and have been here almost a year.

Lately I have noticed several write-ups in the NEWS about the man with the "Heart Shaped Punch." We have had several of his marks on our films. We run mostly First National Films with a Pathe and Select now and then. First I noticed the "heart man" on our route, then came the one with the large sized round punch, as per the sample enclosed.

Has this man a bad memory or is he an amateur projectionist? This sample was taken from "The Woman Who Gave." In three frames there are eleven holes and about twenty feet from the end I found another set of holes. The latter were to remind him that it was time to wake up.

I hope this will give you another clue to work on.

REPLY:

Sorry we have to report that the man with the sentimental punch is still doing his work and that so far no one has got a line on him. There is no need for us to tell what we think of him and others of his kind.

The punch marks that Stofford submitted take the prize for size. Surely the man who bought the punch making a hole of such a size must have had it manufactured especially for him. One hole of that diameter would be signal enough for an operator with the poorest kind of eyesight.

We will place your samples in our exhibit of horribles. Come again with another letter and remember, next time, to make it longer.

New Zealander Brings Unique Reel

A VISITOR at the NEWS office a few days ago was William W. Wadman of New Zealand. Mr. Wadman has made the 9,000-mile journey from his home city in the attempt to interest men in a new fireproof film magazine known as the "Denby Fireproof Film Reel." In his everyday life back in Wellington, Wadman represents the New Zealand Picture Supplies, Ltd., and as such knows practically everyone in the film business in that section of the world. Believing implicitly in the new reel he secured a leave of absence in order to make his present trip to the United States.

In appearance the Denby reel resembles the Simplex magazines, being circular but somewhat smaller in diameter. It has been designed to take the place of the lower magazine on any machine and is attached to the take-up mechanism through suitable couplings.

Through the center of the reel is a ball bearing hub from which extends a fabric fastener with a simple clip on its outer end.

The fire valve rollers are arranged on springs so that the contact against the film is positive at all times.

As showing how thoroughly fireproof the reel is, Mr. Wadman made the statement that New Zealand authorities have approved it for use in auditoriums without the protection of a fireproof enclosure.

Mr. Wadman expects to be in the States until the middle of August at which time he will leave on his return trip to New Zealand.

A Word About Reels

A GREATER evil than the punch mark, the heedless oil can expert or the careless Exchange inspector is working today toward the destruction of films. With all the destructiveness which can be mustered together by the three causes just mentioned it is overruled by the greatest of them all—the mis-shapen reel.

Without a doubt Exchanges are shipping reels at the present time that have never been surpassed for poor quality. Thousand foot reels with sides like a marcel wave, or with a spoke or two bent like the fender of a year old flivver; reels with clips completely gone or with a hub in such poor condition that it is folly to think of winding thereon a perfectly good film; reels which were well made in their day but which have long passed their guaranteed life and are now living on "borrowed time" as is evidenced by the shape and dimensions of the key-way and spindle hole;—such reels are being sent to theatres throughout this country on every working day of the year. And the projectionist in altogether too many cases is making use of the reel sent to him with rather sad results to the film.

A man well up in his profession said recently: "You can talk about your mis-frame artists and the fellow who oils his machine by holding an oil can over the top magazine and letting her drip, but let me tell you that at the present time this"—pointing to several old reels on his bench—"this is causing more waste in film than all other causes combined."

Inspection of theatres would seem to show that this man has the right idea. Where several years ago a projectionist was pretty sure to get a reel that would run in some manner however crude, it happens now that he is lucky to get one that will run at all.

Whatever the reason for this laxness on the part of the Exchanges it should be remedied. This is not said from a desire to make the projectionist's lot an easier one, although that should be considered, but rather for the good of motion pictures themselves. Exchanges have always been backward in making alterations suggested from the viewpoint of the projection room and it is to be expected that their usual speed will be exhibited here, but no harm will be done in pointing out a few facts of passing interest.

Although Exchanges have been objecting to the treatment given films by exhibitors (which means, of course, the projectionist) they have been the last ones to look within their walls and pick out their own faults. During months past it seems to have been their policy to pass out any film which hung together. As a consequence, torn sprocket holes, bad patches, spliced sometimes as many as four to six frames, misframes, titles inserted upside down and many more blemishes of the same kind have been the usual thing and have come to be expected by the projectionist.

But all the time that this has been going on the condition of reels has been growing steadily worse. It seemed as if the Exchanges were intent on getting rid of reels on hand by the process of "natural wear and tear" before investing in new and better ones. If this is their attitude they are succeeding marvelously well but the game is a see-saw and while reel cost is going down film damage is mounting.

The damage caused by reels in poor condition can be brought about at the Exchange as well as at the theatre. At the former place the film is wound off from one reel onto a shipping reel at a rate of speed far greater than would ever be attained at any of the speediest theatres where "pictures" are run to fill in between acts of vaudeville. Whatever damage is caused at the Exchange is covered up immediately by the separate layers of film and is not brought to light until inspected at the theatre.

No matter how careful the projectionist is with that reel it will go back to the Exchange in a condition at least as bad as when it left that institution and, of course, the theatre will be blamed for all damage found.

The theatre is thus caught between two fires. Besides being forced to use the reel on which the film was shipped, if no spare reels are kept on hand, a blame is fastened on the projectionist which he in no ways deserves. If the truth were known it would probably be found that he had to use all the ingenuity he could command to put through a perfect show without allowing the film to catch on the sides of his wabbly, dented mis-shapen reel.

There is but one way out for the theatre and the projectionist. That way is to purchase some of the well made reels which are on the market and go to the extra trouble and expense of rewinding all films received on poor exchange reels. Although the added cost of these reels may seem an unjust tax to levy on the theatre, once they are obtained the satisfaction and confidence gained through their use will well repay the theatre using them.

It is well to admit right here that to go to this expense is merely taking up the burden of the Exchange. But today's show and tomorrow's show are our main consideration. To put on the best show possible and in the best way should be the creed of every projectionist. When the stubborn persistency of a foreign body tends to injure the display of the picture then it is time to take affairs in your own hands and remedy the situation insofar as possible.

Let the Exchange mutilate their own films with their own reels, in their own plants. They are doing it; you can rest assured on that point. But in our projection room let us do our work as it should be done and having succeeded let the other fellow do as he wishes.

Get a good reel of your own and use it. You can then be sure that the reel of film in your top magazine is going to run smoothly, without friction on the spindle or against the magazine cover. With that off your mind you have that much more time to give to the picture on the screen.

Bound Volumes of S.M.P.E. Trans. Ready

A LIMITED number of complete sets of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers Transactions have been bound and are now available for distribution. The cost will be $1.50 to members and $5 to non-members.

The volume consists of about 250 pages and is made up of the seven Transactions which appeared from 1916 to 1918. It is needless to speak of the value of the contents to anyone engaged in the manufacturing and executive branches of the industry. Sure it is that between the two covers of this volume have been assembled the most complete account of developments in the motion picture industry that can be found anywhere. For this reason it is to be regretted that the number of bound copies is so small since, no doubt, there will be an unusual demand from non-members.

The volume is well bound in brown covered paste-board with lettering done on the cover in gold. As an addition to the library the book cannot be too highly praised.

Checks and orders for the bound volume should be sent to H. A. Campe, 5550 Raleigh street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Trolley for Mercury Lights

AN overhead steel trolleyway over half a mile long is a feature of the Screen Classics (Inc.) studios in Los Angeles. Suspended from this trolleyway, ride the 89 "skylight" banks of Cooper Hewitt mercury vapor tubes. An ingenious switching device invented and perfected in collaboration by Clifford Butler, general manager for Metro Pictures Corporation; Walter F. Grams, chief electrician; Ralph C. Godfrey, chief of construction; and John Fisher; permits the 580-pound banks to be readily transferred from one bank to another. A connecting trolleyway between the two interior stage buildings, devised by the same quartet, facilitates the concentration of the studio's entire mercury vapor-light equipment at any point. As Metro's 1,400 tubes of this "better-than-sunlight" illuminator are sufficient to light 50,000 square feet of staging with 8,400 candle power, the impressive lighting resources of the big plant may be realized.

N. A. M. L. Buttons

FOR some time we have been out of the N. A. M. L. Buttons and have been unable to supply new members with them. A notice received from the manufacturers states that a new supply is on its way and should be received within a short time. When they are available, they will be sent to all new members who have not been supplied with them.

So many requests have been received from old members for buttons to replace those lost that it has been found necessary to charge them a small sum to partly cover cost and postage. Any old member by sending us 5 cents in stamps and giving his membership number will be supplied with a new button. As usual, there will be no other charge whatsoever in connection with the League.

Corrosion of Lenses

IF lens users would acquire a little elementary knowledge concerning the nature and properties of glass, their instruments would stand a much better chance of keeping in good condition than they do at present. It should be known that what we call "optical" glass is made in a great variety of qualities, each of which is capable of taking its place in one or other of the many kinds of lenses. Some are as hard and impermeable as the glass we use for windows and tableware, while others are soft enough to be easily scratched or even dented, while injudicious polishing will quickly dim

PROJECT-A-LITE

Gives an even, steady light, at all times uniformly covering the screen. The pictures "stand out" better, have an individuality to them that is not found in carbon projection.

Operation is much simplified, thus giving the operator more time to attend to running the reel. The lamp Adapter can quickly and easily be installed in the carbon lamp house, it is not necessary to go to the expense of buying an entire new outfit in order to enjoy the satisfaction of using Mazda Projection.

The quick change lamp holder, which we furnish without extra charge, is a helpful factor; when a change of lamps becomes necessary, changes can be made almost instantly.

Then think of the ACTUAL SAVING to you in the cost of electricity. You will use but 900 watts an hour, less than one-third the amount used in carbon burning machines.

That MEANS MONEY TO YOU. Money is what you are working for. You are ahead in two ways. Our Adapter saves you buying a new outfit in the first place and Mazda Projection saves current constantly, after you install the Project-A-Lite. You are sure of a good picture all the time, too.

the exquisite surface upon the perfection of which so much depends.

This is especially the case in some of the earlier anastigmats in which very soft and easily corroded glasses were used because others were not available. It is perhaps news to many people to learn that some glasses are so susceptible to damp that a single drop of water left upon the surface for a few hours will leave an ineradicable mark, while the presence of a film of condensed moisture will give rise to a general corrosion, which in mild cases shows in prismatic colors like those of a soap bubble, and in severe ones as a yellow stain accompanied by a distinct depolishing of the surface. Unfortunately, there is no cure for this evil, for even the maker of the lens cannot repolish it to the same accuracy of figure that it originally possessed.

Forewarned is forearmed, and knowing what is likely to occur the prudent man does not allow his lenses to stand about exposed to the atmosphere, but keeps them in tightly-closed cases when they are not actually in use. Failing a case, which also protects the brass work, a well-fitting cap at the back as well as the front is an excellent protection. (British Journal of Photo.)

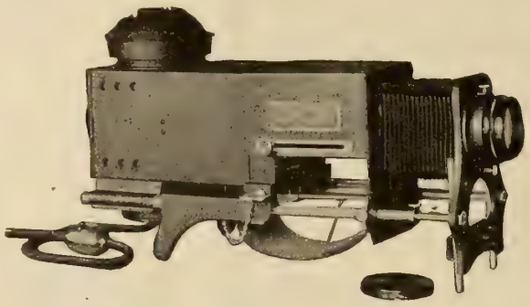
The Delineascope

THE Delineascope is a compact efficient stereopticon manufactured by the Spencer Lens Company of Buffalo. Its construction and finish are such as to commend it for use by the travelling lecturer in the class-room, church and home.

The patented transposer produces a pleasing effect upon the screen doing away with the customary slide carrier and its resulting cross action. There is no lapse of darkness during the change of slides.



Illumination is provided by a Mazda concentrated filament in a gas filled bulb, the lamp being attachable to any 110 volt incandescent circuit either alternating or direct current.

For home use or where an operating distance of not exceeding 30 feet from the screen is required the outfit equipped with 400 watt bulb and triple condensing system is recommended. This outfit is regularly fitted with 10 inch focus. 1⅝ diam. objective giving a 5½ foot picture at 15 feet or a 7½ foot picture at 25 feet from the screen.

For school and church use, another equipment is made with the same Mazda lamp and condensing system but with a larger diameter and longer focus objective.

Since there are many locations where regular 110 volt current is not available an acetylene burner for use with a Prestolite tank is furnished, or a low voltage bulb to be used with a storage battery.

The illustration shows the Delineascope in its contracted position with top of lamp house underneath as it is folded for packing in carrying case. This case is 6¾ x 15¾ x 9 inches in size and the outfit weighs complete about 19 pounds.

A Sea-going Projectionist

Gerald A. Clarke of the U. S. S. Utah wants to join the N. A. M. L. and sends in a letter which says:

Have been considering filing an application for admittance to the N. A. M. L. for some time but have kept putting it off until now.

I am motion picture projectionist on board the Utah and have held the position for more than two years on the ship. O n the outside I worked for a theatre in southern Wisconsin for five years. At present I am running one Powers Six-A and one Powers Six-B. Both machines are in fine condition and have given no real trouble since I have had them.

When features come to me for showing I can honestly say they are returned to the exchange in as good if not better condition than they were when I received them. I have the same trouble as the rest of the projectionists in regard to misframes and punch holes, and think the N. A. M. L. will do the work of ridding the business of these so-called operators and exchange girls.

Reply to inquiry:

If you have been projectionist on ship-board for two years you surely have some interesting stories to tell the rest of us. Send in a letter telling of some of your difficulties in putting on your regular nightly show and how you solved the difficulties. A snap-shot or two of your equipment will give some of the land projectionists an idea of what the ship projectionist is up against.

The Projecto Lite Equipment

IN an issue of the NEWS a few weeks ago there was published a statement that a new Mazda adapter had made its appearance on the horizon and was to be called the Project-a-lite equipment. Since that time we have been able to obtain photographs of the several parts making up the apparatus and show them here.

The transformer which is supplied as part of the equipment reduces line current to 30 volts and regulates it at 30 amperes which are the values needed for Mazda projection. This transformer is simple in construction and by means of its double pole double throw knife switch gives an ideal fade from one reel to the other. One Project-a-lite transformer is sufficient to operate two motion picture machines. It is impossible to overload it because but one lamp is on the circuit at one time yet the change over is made so quickly that the light on the screen is not dimmed.

Showing equipment installed in standard lamp house

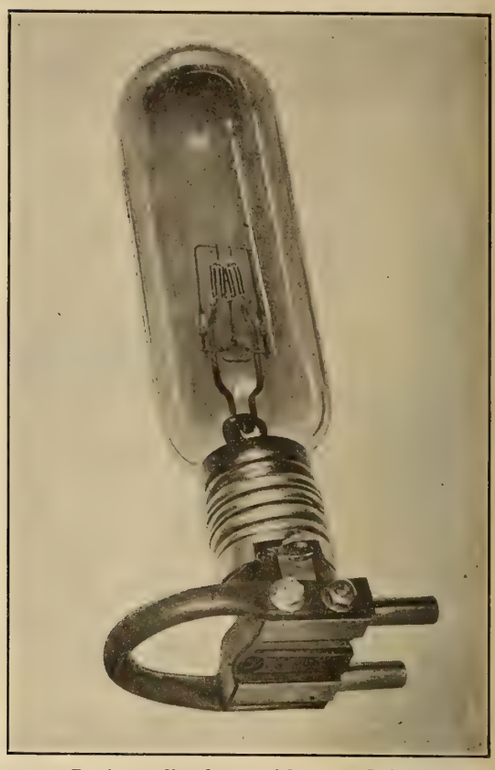
The adapter with reflector attached

The standard motion picture lamp house can be quickly altered to take the Project-a-lite. This is done simply by removing the lower carbon jaw and inserting the adapter into the jaw holder.



Project-a-lite base with type C lamp

In adjusting the lamp to a proper position relative to the rear condenser mounting the same handles are used as are at present used to adjust carbons. This simplifies operation and makes the adaptation an easy task to the man who has become used to the adjustment of carbons.

A Talk on Shooting Locations

By JACKSON J. ROSE, Apex Pictures Corp

THERE has been a marked improvement, in the past two or three years, in the treatment of location photography. More care has been exercised in the selection of locations and in the proper development of beauty of locations after they have been selected. The result in beauty and in practical usefulness of the location, with reference to the photoplay production has more than repaid. But even to-day the average location scene is but a shadow of the possibility it holds.

Let us consider what a good location really is. The first consideration must be its practicability and its application to the theme of the story and to the scene which is to be enacted in the given location. Next in consideration should come its pictorial value—the beauty or the effectiveness that can be secured from a cameraman's viewpoint. The cameraman must be an expert on light conditions, exposure, lenses and scenic beauty if he is to be depended upon to make a perfect exposure and beautiful composition under any and all possible conditions, where it is possible to do perfect work.

He may to-day be working in a well equipped studio, with a light of known value which will enable him to figure out with mathematical certainty the exact result which a certain lens will produce. Tomorrow he may be called upon to take a picture in the open with bright sunlight and between two scenes perhaps, the sky becomes overcast and the light values change entirely, but, if he be a man who thoroughly understands his business, he will be able to make an exposure under each of these conditions that will give a uniform result when it is finished.

While the competent cameraman can secure a photographic image under almost any light conditions, there is never but one or two times of the day when the best results can be obtained. These times of the day depend upon the location and the results desired. If a night effect is wanted and it is to be a cheerful, pleasant scene, then a brilliant back lighting is to be sought for. On the other hand, if it is to be a night scene in which a weird or ghastly or what is known as a "creepy" effect is wanted, then a brilliant back lighting will entirely spoil the effect—a dull, dead effect is wanted and cannot be obtained when the sun is shining brightly at mid-day. Either scene can be made with good light conditions, but the difference lies in the time of the day when the scene is photographed. So it goes throughout the whole game of outdoor scene photography. It is unreasonable to expect a cameraman to get results wanted under improper conditions. Think of the responsibility which rests upon his shoulders. Maybe the company has traveled hundreds of miles to a certain locality or perhaps it is a scene curtailing enormous expense such as demolishing property which took days to build, or mayhap it is a scene in which hundreds of people are used. Probably a fighting mob or a battle scene where a great many of the actors are hurt.

If that poor unsophisticated camerman does not keep his wits about himself and misjudges the exposure, or forgets to see that he is out of films or any one of the hundred things that requires his attention—all that money is wasted. Sets that took days to build have to be re-set and everything done over again. I know of producers who use green cameramen and "take a chance" rather than pay an expert and thoroughly reliable a good salary.

Viewing this matter in the light of common sense, it does seem to me that a policy of this sort is a little short of idiotic.

Another condition which is frequently overlooked in the surroundings, especially with reference to an audience. It is likewise unreasonable to expect actors to do their best work while a jeering, quiping mob stands around the camera. This, too, should have careful consideration from the director in picking his location.

The cameraman is little short of a czar when on location work. This leads to a very grave danger. The disloyal cameraman can disrupt the organization of any company and make no end of trouble and monetary loss by "faking." There was a company in Chicago, not so very long ago, which almost never worked on afternoons when there was a baseball game on the home grounds. It was a queer coincidence that the light was never right on these afternoons, and for some reason the cameramen always had business to attend to somewhere near the ball park on those afternoons. However, it is a danger to be expected and should be easily overcome by the "boss," for the cameraman whose lack of loyalty will allow him to stoop to such measures certainly will not give the best that is in him when he does work.

Cameramen should be "movie" fans and not baseball fans.

The necessities for location shooting, that is to say, the apparatus needed, seems at times to be almost unlimited. Yet the average producing company sends actors and cameramen out to work with little more than a camera, a lens and some grease paint. As in everything else, co-operation is absolutely essential; co-operation between actors, directors and cameramen. The cameraman needs sufficient assistance to enable him to set where he should be without any consideration for bystanders; that is, he should not have to limit his working lines with the corner of a building, for instance, to eliminate the audience on the street. He should have assistants whose business it is to keep the lines clear no matter where they may fall. He should be equipped with the necessary reflectors and, at times, diffusers as needed and needed badly on location work.

Entirely different makeup is invariably needed for location work than is used in studios when they be electrically lighted or glass houses.

Even costumes sometimes should be changed to make a photographic duplicate of those used in the studio.

While everyone connected with the motion picture industry appreciates the value of "shooting time" and realizes that every moment of sunshine that is lost is gone forever, there should not be the haste that is unusually found in a company on location. As a general thing there is no more excuse for a hurried production on location than in the studio.

The problem of lighting location work is of far greater importance and is far more complicated than that of studio production. No film is so beautiful as that which is properly taken out of doors. There is almost no effect which cannot be obtained on location work and the cameraman who is capable of obtaining any effect or illusion which may be wanted must make a life study of his art. The day is coming, if it has not already arrived, when location cameramen and the studio cameraman will be two separate operators; when it will be recognized that each is a business by itself, and that the man who specializes in either should not be expected to be proficient in the other. Of course, the man who thoroughly understands photography will be efficient up to a certan degree, under any and all conditions. But the highest efficiency in either the studio or location work will be obtained by constant study of one or the other and the constant practice by the cameraman in his chosen field. As in every other line, specialization in motion picture photography is bound to bring results; and although the man who chooses location work for his field, chooses, by all question, the hardest of the lot and also puts himself in line to produce the most beautiful and effective film of which the motion picture camera is capable.

Specialization and co-operation in the production of motion picture films are to be looked for and hoped for by all who wish the industry well. In a few scattering instances we have seen the results of this and from both the standpoint of artistic photography and correct dramatic production the results have been most pleasing. It is to be hoped that in the future more directors will look to their cameramen as highly valuable, trained and efficient assistants who, because they are actutually doing the work, know more about the photography of the scene in question than anyone in the world. Perhaps some other photographer could do a better job under given conditions, but the fact remains that the man behind the camera is the man who is doing the work and who should be consulted, if the best results are to be obtained.

Not long ago I read a wail
Of a Cameraman who was bound to fail,
He'd lost all faith in man and art
And was drifting along with a bitter heart.

The real, the regular camera guy,
Is a boy who knows and ne'er says die,
He watches and waits for his turn to come,
And when it does he makes things hum.

Did you ever sit for a photograph
And get a phiz that was to laugh,
Or a face so vile you were filled with rage,
Or a death's head wrinkled with pain and age?

Did you ever go with that self-same face
To an artist real—to a regular place,
And see the beauty and grace and poise
That he hands you there,—sans bull and noise.

Did you ever go to a picture show
And see a sketch that was rotten slow,
With direction bad and actors bum
And yet the picture go by SOME?

The photography man has done the trick,
The cameraman was so darn thick
—They rend the earth for horrow and death,
To make the audience hold its breath.

A million is spent for gilt and glue,
When there's work of art in a baby's shoe,
In the storm's wild rage, or a child at play,
In the smiles and tears of everyday.

When photography's bad no thing is right,
The "star' can't shine, tho' ne'er so bright,
Thru the fogs and mists and portraits dank,
A fool there was, with the camera crank.
What is the art of the greatest star,
When the cameraman can make or mar,
Directors, actors, props may go,
THE CAMERAMAN IS THE WHOLE D— SHOW.

Ambitious Light Effect

IN order to carry out the ambitious lighting effects planned by Director General Maxwell Karger, for forthcoming Screen Classics and Nazimova Productions, Clifford Butler, business manager of the Metro studios, has ordered fifteen spotlights of double the ordinary amperage specially built by the Winfield-Kerner Company of Los Angeles. This is in addition to the twenty spotlights already in operation in the department of Walter Grams, chief electrician.

Ascher Brothers Open New Theatre in Chicago

WITH the opening recently of the Crown theatre, located at Division and Ashland, one of the busiest centers of Chicago's Northwest side, the Ascher Brothers added the first new link for the fall season to their long chain of exclusive houses, already totaling over a score.

The Crown theatre has long been a popular amusement center in this neighborhood, offering vaudeville and other forms of the spoken play. Now it will be given entirely to the photoplay, and that, in accordance with the Ascher policy, to only the best works of the foremost stars and producers.

Some six weeks ago the Aschers added the Crown to their theatre holdings, and after putting it through a course of remodeling and redecorating, they open it as one of their most beautifully appointed houses, equipped with 1,500 luxurious seats, a pipe organ, novel scenic settings, elaborate lighting effects, and a cool, cleansed air system that assures a constant supply of pure air maintained at a comfortably reduced temperature.

The popular conductor, Lynne Hazzard, who for many years has studied the art of synchronizing pictures, and who has enjoyed the distinction of playing in the largest Ascher houses, will move on to the Crown stage his orchestra of select players. Jack McConnell, talented artist, will take his place at the organ and render short recitals at all performances.

The manager of the new house, Charles M. Darrell, is a recent addition to the Ascher forces. Mr. Darrell comes from Detroit where for the past two years he has been associated with John H. Kunsky, serving him first as advertising manager, and later as manager of the Alhambra and the Adams, his two largest theatres. Among the novelties Mr. Darrell has already planned for the Crown is the staging at least twice a week of a tableau to strike the keynote of the picture presented.

Non-Rewinding Device Creates Interest in New York

INTEREST has been created among motion picture men of New York in a new automatic non-rewinding device which is claimed to represent a completely new conception in applied mechanics.

Mason R. MacKinstry, a Denver capitalist, who is interested financially with a group of westerners in the perfecting and marketing of the invention, has practically decided, after his investigations here, to proceed with the manufacture of the machines on a large scale as soon as minor details of construction have been perfected.

The slight changes in the direction of simplification of working parts which will be made are in the hands of J. E. Robin, vice president and general manager of International Cinema Equipment Center, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue. Associated with Mr. Robin in the perfecting of the MacKinstry automatic, is Christian M. Gottschau, chief engineer of the Service Machine Corporation of Chicago, who is responsible for the products of that organization.

During the last week the attachment was shown by Mr. MacKinstry to E. C. Hammer, laboratory chief of the Biograph studios; William Wright, of the Vitagraph Company; J. S. Rollo, chief of distribution of Exhibitors' Mutual; John S. Clarke, chief of distribution of the Parex Film Corporation, and more than a score of motion picture operators from the leading New York theatres. All were convinced of the practical working utility of the new device.

In an interview with the Motion Picture News given at the Biltmore Hotel, Mr. MacKinstry said:

"The peculiar advantage of our automatic non-rewinding device is, to begin with, that it is simple, reasonable in cost, standardized to any projection machine in the world and tremendously in demand.

"The automatic non-rewinder can be installed in the lower magazine of any projection machine without changing an atom of equipment in use today. Our little device is simply an addition to what they already have. It's just the same thing as a man being fully dressed and then putting on his hat. He doesn't have to undress to put on his hat, does he?

"The little attachment is a new conception in applied mechanics. The genius of it is a round disk, the size of a 1,000 or 2,000 reel of film. An offset in the disk, which has a mouth wide enough to admit the film, gradually guides it to a true level, where it is laid in the receiving wheel. The disk is fitted with a series of ball bearing rollers which work in slots in the disk and contract to the center, 5-1,000 of the thickness of the film each revolution.

"The reel is equipped with a shroud or flange and it fits snugly over the full circumference of the rollers. The process of installation is simple The disk is fitted over a shaft in the lower magazine and locked there by a spider of four extension bolts. This can be installed on any machine in not more than two minutes.

"The shaft floats through the core in the center of the disk, which latter is a stationary and non-rotary object. As the present shaft in the lower magazine is not long enough for the operation of our device, a slight extension is made by inserting on the end of this shaft a telescopic con-

How to Buy Music

HOW much money did you spend for your music library? How much is it worth today, and how much will it be worth in five years? The first question can easily be answered but I am in doubt as to whether musicians can intelligently answer the second and third questions.

For twelve consecutive years I was employed as a salesman in one of the largest music houses in the world. I am out of it today and I can talk straight from the shoulder.

Buying music is a science. Many musicians have invested fortunes in their libraries just to find out that after five years they are the possessors of a wagon load of paper. What is the cause of this? In very few cases it is the quality of the music, in most cases it is caused through ignorance on the part of the musicians. "How to buy" is the vital question. To a great extent it is also due to the negligence of the music publishers to properly enlighten the musician on the subject of "HOW TO BUY MUSIC."

Publishers and music dealers are advertising their commodities for a certain price for orchestra. That is all. But I am going to prove that many musicians have never received full value for their money, not because they have been swindled, but simply because they don't know how to buy.

For an example, let's take a concert number such as "Budding Spring" advertised for 60c for small orchestra, consisting of piano, first violin, second violin, viola, 'cello, base, flute, first clarinet, first cornet, second cornet, trombone, and drums. The piano part of a 60c number sells for 30c, and any other part for 15c each.

Many musicians are buying violin, piano, 'cello and drums, or violin, piano and cornet, or, in fact, any other four or five instrumental combinations.

The moment a music publisher has to break up a small orchestration he charges for extra parts, and a combination of four or five instruments would therefore cost as much as a complete orchestration. A music library consisting of a four or five part instrumentation can be considered a valuable asset. But suppose a 'cello or any other instrument is added to the combination, then what happens to a music library of this kind? It is absolutely valueless and in the strictest sense of the word a wagon load of paper.

The only way to establish a standard value for a library is to buy at least for small orchestra. The following facts are also important and will enable the musician to buy economically.

Insist that you be permitted to try out any music before definitely deciding to purchase it. I believe that everybody is entitled to examine any article before buying it. It makes no difference whether it is a shirt or a sheet of music.

A publisher usually will accept music in return if it happens to be his own publication, but in most instances will refuse this privilege if it is publshed by some other house. There is only one remedy—and that is, before placing your order for any music obtain the privilege of exchanging such numbers you cannot find any use for. If you cannot get such privileges for your hard-earned money don't buy.

Place your orders only with such houses who will consider your dollar "one hundred cents." By doing so you will place yourself in a position where you can buy only suitable music and accumulate a music library which will not only be a credit to yourself and your organization, but will also establish standard regarding your abilities, and last but not least will positively react its benefits upon financial betterment.—The Editors.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"The Girl of the Golden West," by Mildred Manning. This song composition was inspired by the character of "Molly," performed by Mildred Manning, in the super-feature moving picture production, "The Westerners" (Mildred Manning Pub. Co.)

2—"Tell Me Why," a fox trot, with a fascinating, haunting melody. The kind that will linger a long time. (H. H. Remick.)

3—"Yearning," the fox trot sensation of the year, and has also proved a success as a waltz. (T. B. Harms.)

4—"Yogiland," by Dan J. Sullivan. This number is a real-honest-to-goodness hit, and is also arranged as a fox trot. (Oliver Ditson & Co.)

5—"Wonderlove," by Tandler. One of the most beautiful and enchanting waltzes of the day. (Arthur Fifer Music Co.)

6—"Because You Say Good-Bye," by Sol P. Levy. A ballad of enduring sentiment. The heartrending sentiment expressed in the lyrics of this song finds instant appeal with every audience and has taken its place amongst the world's popular classic ballads. (Belwin, Inc.)

7—"Fluffy Ruffles," by C. H. Green. A one-step full of pep and snap. (Sam Fox.)

8—"Poem Symphonique," by Gaston Borch. Exquisite for its tonal beauty which makes it unique in the annals of musical literature. (Belwin, Inc.)

9—"Western Rodio,"by Minot. A typical Western characteristic. (Belwin, Inc.)

10—"Mysterious Nights," by S. M. Berg. A melodious waltz. One of its charms being the simplicity and originality. (Belwin, Inc.)

Non-Winding Device

the existing equipment.

"As the film comes down, forced out of the projection machine by cogs working in the perforation, the beginning of the film is attached to the outside of the receiving reel by a little attachment on the shroud. The film is then guided into the rollers and comes on the outside of the roller. Thus the film coming off the projection machine is continually being wound under the film already wound. The rollers contract toward the center to admit this film. The control is by a series of small springs. The claim is made that the entire operation is completed without friction and as soon as the end of the reel is attached it is ready nection. This avoids even changing the shaft of for projection again on removal from the non-rewind magazine. The simple truth is that the beginning of the film as it leaves the projection machine is held on the outside and the film is wound within itself. It sounds like a paradoxical proposition but it works."

Mr. Robin, who is perfecting the device in collaboration with Mr. Gottschau, said:

"There is nothing mechanically difficult to be overcome in the perfecting of the machine. I regard it as certain to succeed, as it is susceptible of being cheaply made and there are few parts to bother with. I expect to have a perfect working model within a short time."

"Don't Shove"

(Harold Lloyd Comedy—Pathe—One Reel)

THIS comedy, Harold Lloyd's latest for Pathe doesn't reach the heights usually associated with him, probably because there is noticeable a lack of a genuinely funny central situation. There is nothing amusing to speak of in a roller rink even though it spells the place where a man humbles his dignity in falling down. Naturally when these falls are repetitiously dealt out they tend to become monotonous instead of amusing. And the comedy is not as spontaneous in its action as one has grown accustomed to seeing.

Indeed it looks as if Lloyd just happened to hit on the idea of using a roller rink and a pair of skates to dish out fun without thinking that there is no fun attached to them. Here is one comedy, short as it is, that looks padded. Lyold and his ensemble journey to a roller rink and the imperative character of the title comes in when the group are too closely assembled. A prize is offered to the winner of a hurdle race and Lloyd dons a pair of skates to try his skill and speed. A number of grotesque entries are entered with him. Well, it is a series of falls—hard falls, side falls, and what not before Harold emerges the victor. He even resorts to that discarded trick of wearing a pillow as a pad. But where is Snubs Pollard? And why is it Bebe Daniels remained on the side lines? It is just as well for no girl is funny when she falls. The star doesn't call upon his familiar but amusing mannerisms to any extent. Undoubtedly he is too busy watching the floor. A mild number is "Don't Shove." It would look better if Lloyd hadn't been making them so good.—Laurence Reid.

Three Texas Guinan Subjects

(Two Reels Each—Frohman Amusement)

THE new Texas Guinan subjects, "The Dangerous Little Devil," "Some Gal," and "Little Miss Deputy," continue to present the star in the characterization of a Western heroine. Each picture is two reels in length and each carries out the same general outline as the first of her short subjects, "Hell's Agony". Miss Guinan's name is synonymous with this type of photoplay and she is always able to make the most of the heroines entrusted to her characterization. True it is that she is not permitted a range of expression since the figures she impersonates are identical in personality. Yet there is enough individuality in her methods as to make each study distinctive from the rest.

The pictures themselves carry on the feminine movement as instituted by the star. The West may have its cowboys but it may have its cowgirls too. And Miss Guinan's representation is equally successful as the trousered specie in her ability to take care of herself. There is plenty of rousing action which is dished up in the shape of fast riding and straight shooting, and the usual conflict of decency versus villainy provides the dramatic pattern.

INCORRECT HEADING

BY error, the review of "The Gray Horizon," the Robertson-Cole feature, released through Exhibitors Mutual, published in last week's issue of the News, was headed "The Dead Line."

"The Dangerous Little Devil" presents a story of stage-coach robbery and a staked claim which embraces a deep water supply. With such a framework the picture gets off to an excellent start and it crackles to a satisfactory finish. It is good to see Director Cliff Smith taking up the actor's burden again. The though arises why doesn't he appear more often? "Some Gal" introduces life on the Mexican border with the action centering around a group of cattle rustlers. Wild riding, a murder and blackmail figure strongly. The picture moves all the way. George Chesebro is the hero and Jack Richardson, the villain. "Little Miss Deputy" is perhaps the best of the subjects since it permits the star to portray the part of a deputy sheriff. It is interesting and often exciting.—Laurence Reid.

"Caught"

(Ford Weekly—One Reel—Goldwyn)

THE Ford cameraman must have been taking a vacation away from his many interesting industrial subjects. But you will be glad that he brought his trusty camera with him. For we see scenes up among the northern woods and lakes and one in particular that cannot fail to send a thrill to the fishermen.

You actually see the fish caught and it puts up a pretty battle until it is finally landed. The photography of the action is exceptionally good. There are many comparisons of "Caught" displayed in this reel, which will enlighten and suitably entertain. This should prove most acceptable as a filler on any program.—Tom Hamlin.

"The Jazz Instructors"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox)

"THE JAZZ INSTRUCTORS" is one of the funniest (if not the funniest) cartoons that Bud Fisher ever made for his prize beauties, Mutt and Jeff. These ingenious fellows have so much originality about them that it was only a question of time before they would take up the wiggle of the shimmy. The dance itself is a funny creation, but you can imagine what a riot it is in animated cartoon form when fully exaggerated.

Mutt and Jeff are in the dancing business with a jazz parlor of their own. The former is the man in charge, while little Jeff is the model, or the exponent of the wriggly shimmy. Several applicants apply to learn the intricacies of the dance and as Mutt has no fair damsel to interpret it he has Jeff disguised in an Oriental costume. Naturally, the patrons mistake him for a "jazzess." Well the little fellow has a giant of a man for a partner, but as huge as the pupil is he adapts himself quickly to the dance under the skilful guidance of the teacher. Jeff gives a solo dance first and how that freak can wriggle and squirm and volplane and pirouette and shake his body! He is a jelly-fish.

But the police have wind of the parlor and make a raid and the instructors are lugged off to jail for running a disorderly resort. The judge is about to send them up for a long term when Mutt exclaims: "There's nothing harmful in it." And so Jeff breaks loose and gives a wonderful interpretation. The judge can't keep his seat and soon he is jazzing all over the floor. The result is the instructors are freed.

A hilarious number and one well calculated to turn a grouch into a howling sunbeam. Exhibitors who book it should pay especial attention to the musical accompaniment. At the Rivoli in New York the cartoon was the hit of the bill because the musical setting started everyone jazzing. It is a knockout for a cartoon and no mistake.—Laurence Reid.

"The House Without Children"

(Film Market, Inc.—State Rights—Six Reels)

THIS story is directed against the woman who makes light of her husband's desire and anxiety to become a father to children. But it is a dramatic picture fairly well produced and the continuity and interest is keen after the characters develop in the latter part of the second reel.

The leading roles are played by Richard Travers, Henry G. Sell, Helen Weer, Gretchen Hartman and William Powell. The story is by Robert McLaughlin and Samuel Brodsky directed. This picture was produced in Cleveland, Ohio.

"The House Without Children" is a house inhabited by a man and his wife who are childless. The wife's brother and the husband's niece live there also and a young man who is secretary to the master of the house, also resides there. This young man is in love with the niece but the wife's brother has taken advantage of the young girl and she is about to become a mother. After expressing his regrets that he is not a father, the master of the house in company with his wife's brother, leaves for a year on an engineering job. In the meantime the young niece has become a mother, and the master's wife, in order to save the young girl from disgrace, and also to please her own husband, claims that the child is her own.

This leads to many dramatic situations, especially as the brother-in-law finds that the niece has become an heiress and weds her. When she finds that he has married her for her money, she confesses that he is the father of the child he supposed belongs to his sister. Then the big dramatic moment comes for the master of the house and he declares that the modern wife's stand against motherhood is a crime.

The picture is clean and the title is possessed of great drawing possibilities if properly exploited. There is a happy ending. The photograph is slightly hazy in spots.—Tom Hamlin.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 18, 1919.

"LOVE IS LOVE"

Mild Character Study; Should Satisfy

INASMUCH as the name of Charles Ray is synonymous with character studies of awkward youth, there is no reason why Albert Ray cannot be identified with them, since he appears to be well qualified to carry on the human note which they contain. Yet there is a weakness to the drawing in "Love Is Love," because the character doesn't emerge from his awkwardness and timidity except on rare occasions. True he outgrows his criminal tendencies, but his development doesn't score effectively because the subject matter is laboriously conceived.

Conveniences are used so liberally that the force of the central idea is not made emphatic. And truth is violated in several instances. For example, the hero jumps his bail and returns, but is promised his freedom if he is sincere about taking a wife. It isn't logical that he shouldn't stand trial. And how gullible the police officer is to sponsor the bail of a stool pigeon!

The main fault in the study is that the central figure doesn't develop a sturdy character. This may be due to Mr. Ray's interpretation. While he pleases he seems more at home in comedy parts. The picture is not as good as the previous Ray and Fair offering, though it should satisfy.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 17.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The Fox co-stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, will appear at the ———theatre on ——— of ——— week, in their newest photoplay entitled "Love is Love." This is a study in character development and it unfolds a story which contains a wealth of dramatic scenes most of which are charged with pathos. The stars are newcomers on the film horizon but they are rapidly establishing themselves as favorites through their talent and the character of their subjects.

Mr. Ray appears as an awkard youth who is employed by a locksmith. He suffers all sorts of indignities at the old man's hands. One of his diversions is burglarizing at night. The youth is in love with Polly Ann Kerry who is almost in despair because Gerry Sands, as the star is called here, will not assert himself. She finally gets him away from the influence of the wicked locksmit and he is well on the road to self-respect when his former employer frames him for a robbery in the hotel where he works. But he escapes and makes his way out West where he finds employment on a newspaper.

He writes Polly—writes her time and again, but she doesn't answer. Finally unable to stand the suspense any longer he hastens back East and locates her after a fashion. But she is cold to his advances when he tells her she must marry him or go to jail. In the end Polly realizes that she has misjudged him and so they are married and happy. Jail is far away. "Love is Love" is written by Richard Washburn Child, an author responsible for many of our finest photoplays.

PROGRAM READER

Gerry Sands was a bashful youth with a spark of genius in him. But he never had a chance to develop his literary talent because all the day he was compelled to work at his trade of locksmith. He was abused dreadfully and the punishment he received from his employer eventually broke his spirit. He was helpless. There was no doubt about it. For if he attempted to get away his employer would track him down and greater punishment would be his reward. In fact he didn't dare run away for he was a burglar at night and the old man always threatened to give him up to justice.

How he escaped after he was admitted out on bail, how he traveled to the West and found work at his lifelong ambition of learning to write, how he came back to give himself up for the sake of the girl and how happiness came to him at last are events which make this picture a most dramatic offering. The story will be told in "Love is Love" which comes to the ———next——— with Albert Ray and Elinor Fair as the stars.

"Love is Love" is a Fox film presenting Elinor Fair and Albert Ray

CATCH LINES

He was kicked and cuffed everywhere he went. So much so that it affected his spirit. But one day he mustered up courage after he was arrested for a crime of which he was innocent and escaped to the boundless West then—See "Love is Love."

How would you like to be employed as a locksmith all day and suffer abuses from your employer and then be compelled to turn your experience at night to the art of burglary? You wouldn't like it. Yet Gerry Sands had to do it because he was helpless and he was a coward. Finally one day he—See "Love is Love."

SUGGESTIONS

The Fox co-stars should be live wires for your house by this time, providing you have played them. They have had some excellent subjects. Particularly, the last one "Be a Little Sport" should be remembered. Now you can exploit them without the soft pedal attached. They have made good. There isn't another co-starring team on the screen that is serving up better work. Mr. Ray is talented in any line of dramatic entertainment. Here he gives a fine performance of a typically Charles Ray role. Feature him and his co-star. Use stills and cuts from the picture. As for the story mention that it is written by Richard Washburn Child, an author responsible for many of our best photoplays.

Tell that it is a study of youth—a study of a young man who was timid and modest and who never had a chance. Tell that he finds himself and conquers—conquers the world. Concentrate upon the stars and bring out what they have done in their short career upon the screen.

"WAGON TRACKS"
(ARTCRAFT)

A Decidedly Excellent Western Drama

A DRAMA of the west in the early frontier days, with the star embracing the opportunity of doing some of the best legitimate acting in his screen career. This is dramatic art and a novel departure quite distinct from the familiar far-fetched melodramatic wild westerns. It is tragedy and pathos.

Direction is most excellent. Story is appealing and continuity readily grasped. The settings and exteriors are artistic and in keeping. Exceptional photography and laboratory skill help wonderfully in putting this picture over. The love element is there, but is never permitted to gushingly interfere even in the finale, which eschews the customary embrace of the lovers. A decidedly excellent western drama.

This picture should be a strong draw for any class of theatre anywhere. In regards to its satisfying qualities as a picture, it will please the elite and first run audiences most. The family and popular audiences will also be agreeably entertained. The labor audience, which prefers more action and thrills, even if far-fetched, will not care so much for this as they did for some of the other Hart pictures.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 29.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William S. Hart is coming to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in his latest Artcraft picture, "Wagon Tracks."

This is described as a novel departure from the wild and woolly melodramatic western picture and is said to be pure unadulterated drama that convincingly portrays frontier life in the early days.

The star appears as a guide for wagon trains and pilots them through the perils of the desert over the old Santa Fe trail. His horse and burro are the only company he has on the trip east to the Mississippi river where he expects to meet his younger brother, who has just graduated from an eastern college as an M. D.

During a quarrel over cards on a Mississippi river steamboat the youth is killed and when Buckskin Hamilton arrives he finds his brother a corpse. Jane Washburn, who was in the stateroom when her renegade brother and his card-sharp partner were playing cards with the youth, confesses that she shot him, but that it was an accident.

The heartbroken frontiersman declares that he believes her when she said it was an accident, if she killed him. But he was not convinced that the girl's hand had performed the deed. And on the blazing Santa Fe trail when he was guiding the wagon train west, he manages to fix the crime on the girl's brother.

Surrounded by Indians who only requested that one white man be surrendered to them in return for one of their number who was shot by a member of the wagon train, the guide gave his gun to the murderer of his brother and pledged him to use it on himself to pay the penalty of his crime. And then he walked out to meet the Indians as the sacrifice that would save the caravan.

But the wily renegade did not use the gun on himself and attempted to escape. The Indians capture him and he pays the penalty of his crime. This picture is said to be exceptionally realistic and affords the star one of the best roles of his screen career Jane Novak is the girl in the picture.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture your best bet, of course, is to insert the star's name in every available place, as he has a large following. But to cater to those that possibly do not fancy him in his general run of pictures you should emphasize that "Wagon Tracks" is far and away from the general run of so-called western pictures in that it s not a far-fetched melodramatic shoot-em-up sort of picture, but rather a real stirring drama of frontier life in the early days.

The fact that the scenes picture the desert with the old style wagon trains or caravans, you can utilize your lobby with anything suggestive of this that it is possible for you to obtain. The fact that it is William S. Hart in an Artcraft picture is generally considered enough to get them in, but exhibitors who are alert and desirous of enlarging their regular picture fan patronage should seize this opportunity of trying something extra to bring in the new faces.

Thomas Ince presents Wm. S. Hart in the Artcraft feature "Wagon Tracks"

PROGRAM READER

A western trail in the early days of the wagon trains has been realistically portrayed in motion pictures.

Not the wild and woolly melodramatic sort of far-fetched action which is so many times ridiculously overdrawn.

But the real actual happenings of every day life in a historical adventurous period of our pioneering days.

However, in those days an everyday happening was replete with thrills. And there was romance there. And picturesque scenery and quaint characters.

All this has been brought to the fore in "Wagon Tracks," an Artcraft picture coming to this theatre next week.

That foremost delineator of western characters, William S. Hart, portrays the role of Buckskin Hamilton, a desert guide. And there is tragedy, then pathos, and then happiness in the new world after the trail was blazed.

Don't miss "Wagon Tracks" at this theatre. It affords the star one of the best roles in his entire screen career. And it is based on an impressive story by C. Gardner Sullivan. Lambert Hillyer directed this latest Artcraft picture for William S. Hart, and beautiful Jane Novak is again his leading woman.

"THE VOLCANO"
(RAVER-HODKINSON)

Propaganda Picture, Fairly Interesting

NO propaganda photoplay has ever been made which has rested upon a very strong dramatic foundation, for, to force home the argument contained therein, the sponsors substitute the vital points found in the action for a prodigal display of word pictures. This is made necessary through the character of the subject matter. Hence it is that "The Volcano" is excellent propaganda, but not particularly noteworthy as drama despite the fact that Augustus Thomas wrote it. He presents a terrific indictment of the revolutionists who would overthrow our government and his in its general outline is founded upon facts.

The chief fault with the picture is that there is so much plot that it cannot all be told except by the employment of subtitles. Consequently the continuity is not of the best. Still it does offer volumes of truth, is told in a straightforward way, and carries such a strong note of patriotic appeal that its power to stimulate love of country cannot be denied.

The love motif is a side issue, but it serves to counteract the "naked truth" of the theme and give it a tender touch. The characterization is sound and excellently interpreted. In all "The Volcano" is American to the core and should be a worthy attraction for any house.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A timely, dynamic drama of the socialistic trend in the world will be unfolded upon the screen of the ———theatre next ———with Leah Baird as its principal exponent. This is not to say that it is an indictment of Socialism, but rather a compact visualization of the tornado of Bolshevism which is attempting to destroy the fabric of government. Written by Augustus Thomas, the foremost living dramatist in America, it is a picture which emphasizes in more than one place his skill at situation and climax.

The plot deals with the machinations of Alexis Minski, a radical chief, whose efforts at creating a revolt against capitalism and government in the United States are concentrated in a crowded part of the city, involving, it appears for a time, teachers and others of the intellectual class. Ruth Carroll (Leah Baird) a pretty school teacher, who falls temporarily under the influence of Minski, becomes the sweetheart of Captain Levison, a returned army officer, who has been assigned by the government to hunt down the radicals. Minski almost succeeds in convincing the girl that the Captain is plotting to arrest her and her grandfather. Terrified she screams out his death sentence to the eager Minski, who tries to execute it, three of his henchmen attacking the officer on a dock, where he had gone to tell the grandfather of his love for the girl.

Meanwhile, Davy, Ruth's soldier brother, who has just returned from France, comes to the rescue. With a small army of patriots he raids the revolutionists' headquarters and the entire anarchist crew is arrested. Ruth is retsored to her soldier lover and Davy finds happiness with Olga, an East Side girl, who had like Ruth come under the influence of the aliens.

It is a picture which exerts extraordinary fascination to the spectator because it picturizes the drama of the times.

SUGGESTIONS

You can go the limit on exploiting this picture, for it should be a clean-up because of its 100 per cent. American patriotism. It is an indictment of revolution as it is trying to get established in this country. Don't fail to use the newspapers to advantage. The picture is based upon actual facts and you can run excerpts of how the police descended upon the agitators in New York and dispersed them. If you are located near military encampments you can make a special play for the soldier patronage. They are sure to flock in numbers to see themselves keep alive the good old Yankee spirit. Tell that it is written by the greatest American playwright, Augustus Thomas.

Use catch lines. They can be used liberally and will catch the eye because of their authentic quality. Send out a teaser campaign stating that a powerful picture of the indictment of anti-government agitators will be presented at your house on a certain date. Play it up big in billboard display.

CATCH LINES

See "The Volcano"—a picture written by the greatest American dramatist, Augustus Thomas. It is a terrific indictment of Bolshevism and the menace to American government by alien agitators. It is based upon actual facts.

A volcano of destruction was about to descend upon the fair country of America. The word was passed. Kill! So men were marked to die. But happily a little group of patriots saved the day and—See "The Volcano."

PROGRAM READER

"If you don't like America get to h——— out!" That's what a returned American soldier said to the alien agitators during a sensational police raid on the bombmakers' headquarters in a startling scene of Augustus Thomas' powerful drama, "The Volcano," which comes to this theatre next ——— afternoon and evening. That was the answer punctuated with the nightsticks of the policemen.

It presents the love of a girl, but a girl who also has her country's honor at stake. You will see this bit of fiction coupled with startling facts visualized when soldiers raid a gang of internal foes. You will see the workings of the U. S. Secret Service in its fight against revolution. You will see a picture which will rouse your American spirit like it was never roused before on the screen.

"THE OTHER HALF"
(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Wholesome Drama Worth Special Exploitation

A DRAMA of peculiar timeliness and of most wholesome appeal. A compelling human interest story splendidly directed and with clear continuity. The photography and sets are perfect and the cast is exceptionally well fitted. Special mention should be given Florence Vidor, Zasu Pitts and David Butler.

The reviewer considers this one of the best pictures produced for several months. It is in a class by itself in that no situation seems forced acting. It is natural and absorbing. Like the two previous King Vidor pictures, a slight Christian Science theme is recognized.

This picture should draw heavily at first run and elite theatres if properly exploited. It will certainly please these audiences greatly as a picture. And a little extra exploitation should make this a strong draw at popular and family houses. And they will like the picture so much that they will continue coming if you get them in the opening day. For labor audiences you have here a particularly appealing picture, but as there are no so-called "big" stars you must do something extra to get them in the first day.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 18.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Other Half" is the latest King Vidor picture which comes to the ——— theatre beginning on ———. Mr. Vidor's last two screen successes were "The Turn in the Road" and "Better Times."

The latest picture is declared to be of peculiar timeliness and is said to realistically portray a human interest story of today in a wholesome manner.

Many popular and familiar names are noted in the cast. Florence Vidor, Zasu Pitts, David Butler, Charles Meredith and Thomas Jefferson are among the most prominent. The picture portrays a medium size town to which a captain and a corporal return to take up civil life after the late war.

They are great pals, but as the young captain succeeds his father in charge of most the city's biggest industries and the young corporal works hard as a machinist in one of his factories, their paths lead temporarily apart.

When the corporal is made foreman and requests certain repairs made at the factory to protect the lives of the workmen the young captain, now hardened to sentiment by financial environments, refuses. A falling wall buries the young corporal in the debris and temporarily blinds him and he apparently seeks justice in vain.

His hard working but breezy sweetheart sticks by him and becomes acquainted with the young financier's girl who walks in the higher places. This wealthy girl's interest is so aroused that she refuses marriage with the young financier and attaches herself to a newspaper to help it editorially and financially. An article that she writes opens the eyes of the young financier and he sees the light. And the young corporal's eyes are also literally opened at the same time.

Some declare that there is a sort of "Science" theme of brotherly love which runs like a silken thread through this picture. It is pronounced one of the best Brentwood productions by the Robertson-Cole people.

CATCH LINES

Capital and Labor opened their eyes when they saw "The Other Half."

It's a fifty-fifty proposition when the other half sees "The Other Half."

Patrons of the ———theatre are seeing how "The Other Half" lives.

Florence Vidor appears in "The Other Half," a Brentwood film for Robertson-Cole-Exhibitors Mutual release the familiar refrain of an old church hymn that has brought joy and peace to a great many persons.

"Though I speak with the tongue of men and of angels and have not love I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling symbol," is a passage in the Bible that was never popular with the oppressors.

King Vidor, a motion picture director who recently produced such pictures as "The Turn in the Road," and "Better Times," seems to have a thorough grasp of what immense themes are.

"The Other Half" by King Vidor, comes to this theatre next week. It is heralded as a powerful picture and its cast contains such prominent names as Florence Vidor, Zasu Pitts, David Butler, Thomas Jefferson and Charles Meredith.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture it would be wise to call attention to the last two pictures written and produced by the same director; "The Turn in the Road," and "Better Times." These is a theme of Christian Science recognized by a fast growing creed. Even those opposed to it like doctors, etc., will be curious to know to what lengths this director will go. This is all more deep-rooted and topical than most exhibitors imagine and is the one big exploitation angle to develop.

Provoke a controversy with any leading member or group of the medical profession by asking him if he believes it is not just a wee bit overdrawn to see a blind man regain his sight through "science." This is your big bet and worth many columns of publicity to you if you handle it right. This is an actual occurrence in the picture although really the inflicted person has only been temporarily blinded. Nevertheless the incident is planted in the film and there you are. Get busy on this and cash in.

Drama Has Many Good Qualities

ALTHOUGH this feature is not as strong as others that have appeared under the Harry Garson trademark, it has many good qualities that bid fair to carry it through nicely. While the story and direction are not of the very highest calibre, the cast is especially strong and contains many prominent names.

The story opens very well and while not intensely gripping, it arouses interest in its development. However there is a certain something that draws one and leaves its impressions, and impressions count a great deal nowadays.

Judge Appleton has four children, two boys and two girls. They all marry unhappily but one girl, who is deceived by an adventurer, and the story lays bare each of their lives. Their father dies and the children arrive home to beg forgiveness from one who was so kind to them.

Blanche Sweet possesses a pleasing personality and essential good looks and gets everything possible out of the role in which she is cast.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The Harry Garson production, "The Hushed Hour," will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Mr. Garson is best known as the producer of Clara Kimball Young and Blanche Sweet features. The story is by Gertrude Brooke Hamilton and was printed in one of the national magazines, exciting much comment because of its originality and the depth of its feeling. Blanche Sweet plays the leading role and is supported by such eminent players as Milton Sills, Wyndham Standing, Rosemary Theby, Wilfred Lucas, Winter Hall, Harry Northrop and Gloria Hope.

Judge Robert Appleton had lived a most honorable life, and at his death is survived by a widow and four children.

The children all but one of whom had married and had lived a fair part of their marital life with only ordinary success, had come from their widely separate homes to attend their father's funeral. Their mother tells them of the dead Judge's last request—that each of them, in turn, spend an hour beside him as he lays in peace.

The first hour was Daisy's, the younger daughter, and an artist of reputation. She falls in love with an adventurer, who betrays and leaves her with a young son.

The second was Luke's, who had run away from home at nineteen and after having a varied career had married a Southern girl. His old wildness still possesses him, however, resulting in much unhappiness for his wife and two children.

Bob, the eldest, marries a woman of wealth. She is a social leader and is flawless in propriety. But there is no love between them. A young girl in his office attracts his attention, and he falls desperately in love with her.

When he sees her in the company of a callous youth he decides to save her from his evil influences. He picks out a promisin[g] young chap in his office and throws them together. When they are on the verge of finding true happiness, jealousy seizes hold of him and he sends the young man to South America. However, he repents and reca[l]s him.

The fourth hour is Virginia's (Blanche Sweet). She marries a millionaire, who loves her very much, although it is of the strong forceful kind, which makes her shrink from him at times. And as time goes on a terrible barrier arises between them. During the Hushed Hour many things become clearer, many things her father had taught and lived; and there was never the slightest question of her husband's great love.

Blanche Sweet has the star role in "The Hushed Hour," Garson production

PROGRAM READER

Judge Appleton had lived an honorable life. He had never wronged a woman, shirked a duty, chilled a loved one or ever forgotten his God. He had four children, two sons and two daughters. All his life he had striven to instil in them all that was best in life. As they grew older and entered upon life's struggles, the weaknesses rather than the strong points predominated.

The children all married but one; but their marriages were not successful. At their father's death they had come from their widely separated homes and their mother told them of the dead Judge's last request, that each of them, in turn, spend an hour beside him as he lay in peace.

"The Hushed Hour," with Blanche Sweet, Milton Sills, Wyndham Standing, Rosemary Theby and Harry Northrop in the principal roles will appear at this theatre next ———.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you should lay special stress upon the title, as it is an exceptionally strong one and will attract attention wherever it is seen. Send out plenty of teasers calling attention to the strong lesson which the story carries and the remarkable way it is told. But do not forget to mention the fact that the story also carries a strong interest appeal. Also mention as a feature in your advertising that Blanche Sweet is starred in this production and tell of her remarkable performance in "The Unpardonable Sin," which was also a Harry Garson feature. Remind your patrons also of her exceptional work in "Judith of Bethulia," which was produced by Griffith a few years ago and which was the masterpiece of its time.

CATCH LINES

Did the children know they were forgiven for their faults when they spent a "hushed hour" with their father as he lay in peace? Let "The Hushed Hour" tell you at the ——— theatre ——— week.

His first false step was to paint the statue on the college grounds. He was turned out of college for so doing

"A MAN'S FIGHT" (UNITED)

An Average Western Melodrama

A MELODRAMATIC western, with the usual frills and embellishments. The action is fast and brings the wealthy young eastern idler from his New York home, via Sing Sing, to the head of the independent copper interests in Arizona. While the entire story may seem rather far-fetched to the blase fans, the enthusiasts on anything melodramatic will undoubtedly swallow it, hook, bait and sinker.

The cast is good and the directing is fair, with some mob scenes that were poorly handled. The "constitutional amendment" championed by the hero is carried, but the sub-title proclaims him Senator. Convent scenes are never appealing and are sometimes resented. This picture shows the hero's sister doing penance for what she thought was her brother's crime. It's a clean picture.

This may draw best at the first run and elite theatres, but these audiences will not fancy the picture greatly. At the popular, family and labor class theatres the draw should also be good and these audiences will like the picture best.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 11.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dustin Farnum is coming to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in his latest United picture, "A Man's Fight."

This opens in New York City where he portrays the role of an idle young man of wealth who finally rises to the occasion when the big moment comes. A man whom he had previously quarreled with is shot during a scuffle with the hero's sister. Both brother and sister confess to firing the shot that killed, in order to protect the other.

The outcome is that the brother is sent to prison for a short term and when released he is disowned by his father and goes West to start anew. The sister goes into a convent. The young man's fight for the independent copper interests in Arizona brings him into politics and when about to grasp victory he is confronted by his past as a convict.

A very pretty young girl is his stenographer. And she is just as smart as she is pretty. It is this young girl who finally appears in the big town hall and takes such a leading part in the big scene which carries the hero success and clears the name of both himself and his sister.

And this brings order out of chaos and leaves the hero and heroine to enjoy their well earned happiness. There are said to be many thrills in this melodrama of western life. Prominent in the cast supporting Mr. Farnum are Lois Wilson, Dorothy Wallace, J. Barney Sherry and Wedgewood Nowell.

PROGRAM READER

He left Sing Sing prison and hurried home to his wealthy father in the palatial New York home.

And his father disowned him. He had been an idler all his life and when the big crime occurred which sent him to pay the penalty, his own sister cut herself off from the world also and became a nun.

How the young idler and ex-convict overcame this terrible handicap and won out unaided in the far West is a story of love and thrills.

He won his heart's desire. He not only won the sweetheart but he was successful in becoming a Senator. And he won wealth. But to cap the climax he found that his convict past was to be brought against him.

And in the great denouement he was vindicated. This story is dramatically told in the United photoplay coming to this theatre next week.

Dustin Farnum is the star and the title of the production fathered by the United Picture Theatres of America is "A Man's Fight."

Dustin Farnum is starred in "A Man's Fight," a United feature, released through World Film Corp.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked your best bet is of course the star. He is credited with having a great following and therefore his name should be foremost in all your advertising and publicity. You can also augment this by mentioning several other of the strongest names in the cast. Many of the principals are well known and have followings undoubtedly of their own.

"A Man's Fight" is a good title and without forgetting to emphasize that it is a high class Western melodrama with love, action and thrills you should tell of the labor agitation that promised to ruin a good man financially and just how he arose to the occasion and solved his own labor question. This is a good tie-in on a theme that fairly covers the front pages of all our newspapers at this time.

Agitators are hired by the trust in the story to fight the independent copper interests and they succeed in stampeding the hero's employees into a strike and a proposition to seize the mine for labor exploitation. But the hero wins his men back again in such a fashion that they try to fairly lynch the agitators.

Strong Cast Supports Constance Binney

The names of the players who will support Constance Binney in her first production for Realart, "Erstwhile Susan," have been linked with some of the foremost stage and screen stars in theatrical and photoplay successes of the present day. The programs of such pictures as "The Birth of a Nation," "The Unpardonable Sin," "The Lion and the Mouse," and "The Fall of the Romanoffs" contain the names of actors who will be seen with Miss Binney. Several of these players have been associated on the stage with leading lights of the stage, including Mrs. Fiske, Henrietta Crossman and others, in plays that have withstood the severe test of time.

Mary Alden, Jere Austin, Anders Randolf, Alfred Hickman, Leslie Hunt, Bradley Barker and Georges Renavent are among the well known players who will be seen in the cast.

Auto Service Prevents Exchange Tie-up

Goldwyn's Boston exchange met a critical situation last week when 25,000 shop employees of the N. Y., New Haven & Hartford railroad walked out, seriously crippling the service on that road. With every prospect of the strike spreading, Goldwyn made immediate arrangements for a fast automobile delivery of films throughout the New England territory.

World Offers a Novel Series

Stories from "Heart Throbs" Will Be Offered as Two-Reel Productions

ONE of the most unique publications ever issued for public consumption was a volume that owed the selection of its contents to thousands of people scattered throughout the world wherever English is spoken. That book bears the title of "Heart Throbs." It grew out of an inspiration of Joe Mitchell Chappell, a Boston magazine editor. He sent out tens of thousands of letters to people all over the world requesting them to send him the name of a short story or poem that gave them their biggest heart throb. The response to these inquiries furnished Mr. Chappell with the leads as to the best of these literary contributions and out of which grew the book "Heart Throbs." The sales of this novelty ran into hundreds of thousands of copies.

Mr. Chappell has gathered the very cream of these literary gems that appeared within the covers of "Heart Throbs" eighteen stories that he will convert into a similar number of two-reel pictures that will be distributed by the World Film Corporation through its exchanges scattered throughout the United States. In order to get a consensus of opinion as to which of these heart throbs were the most popular, Mr. Chappell sent letters of inquiry to the most notable captains of industry, leaders in art, education, science and literature, the outstanding figures in politics and diplomacy. The votes of these men and women were about equally divided for first choice between Julia Ward Howe's "Battle Hymn of the Republic," Oliver Wendell Holmes' "The One Hoss Chaise" and James Whitcomb Riley's immortal "Old Sweetheart of Mine."

These will be the three first pictures made by Mr. Chappell's company. The studio work will be done in Boston. In making the picturization of these subjects, included in the continuity will be the picturing of the inspiration or the thing that suggested the writing of these literary gems. Within a very short while World Pictures will announce the title and date of the first release.

New Short Subject

The newest of the short subjects being released monthly is the one reel "Legends of The Wilderness," being photographed by L. J. Burrud. Various localities of Western America are being filmed for their lengendary and scenic interests, and a year will be used by the Burrud expedition in covering the western half of the Western Hemisphere.

Ex-Soldiers Back with Fox Organization

Lieutenant Howard Irving Young and C. Doty Hobart, two well-known scenario writers, have been added to the Fox Film Corporation staff to make the film adaptation of the first William F. Russell production, entitled "Sacred Silence." This picture will be made from the big New York stage success, "The Deserter," from the pens of Alice Anna Chapin and Robert Peyton Carter.

This addition to the Fox forces reunites a trio well established in the production branch of the film industry —the third member being Harry Millarde, who is directing the picture. This same trio of Young, Hobart and Millarde once created many successful features under the Kalem brand.

Lieutenant Young has just returned from eighteen months' service overseas as first lieutenant with the American Expeditionary Forces.

Appointed to Exhibitor Mutual Branch

Chas. W. Tyler has been appointed Branch Manager for the State of Indiana by the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation of New York.

Mr. Tyler will distribute the big moving picture productions of the Robertson-Cole Company, Bankers and Brokers of New York, who are the largest exporters of Moving Pictures in the world.

"CHOOSING A WIFE" (FIRST NATIONAL)

Slow Moving Society Drama; English Cast

A SOCIETY drama made in England with a British cast. Its high spots are in pathos and almost-tragedy, and it also has its emotional periods. Although it is slow moving and conversational it has a slight suspense element in its favor.

The producers have resorted to the very liberal use of sub-titles to account for the very few exterior scenes. Nearly all the scenes are interiors in an old English mansion. The blase picture fans, taught to expect rather adrupt action, will not care for this picture, but it may have a charming appeal for the older folks who do not attend the theatres so often.

This picture if heavily exploited may draw average at the elite or first run theatres in the larger cities. And it should draw as well in the family theatres. It may generally satisfy these audiences as a picture if you place a lively comedy and a good weekly with it for variety. The popular and labor class theatres may find it hard to draw them in and it will not register with these audiences as a picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 10.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

It does not apnear to be the rule for British producers to announce their casts, as they do not seem to place so much stress upon what American producers consider the so-called drawing powers of the screen actresses and actors.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Choosing a Wife" is the picture, sponsored by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which comes to the ——— theatre, beginning ———.

This is a story of a man of middle age who proposes marriage by letter to a young English girl, and the wrong woman receives the proposal and believes it was meant for her.

She had arrived at the age of spinsterhood and was taking care of the young motherless niece of her brother. When the beautiful young niece made her debut in society the spinster loaned her a dainty lace handkerchief, which the girl dropped accidentally during the evening.

The man picked it up, and seeing the name "Dolly" embroidered on the piece of lace, assumed that this was the girl's name. He became infatuated with her and before going on an exploring trip he wrote for her hand. The real Dolly, the handsome spinster, received the letter and was accepted by mail just before sailing.

In the meantime the young niece became engaged to a youthful curate. The terrible mistake in identity, with all its heart harrowing consequences, is brought out in an emotional and appealing manner when the explorer returns. All the wedding presents were about to be returned by the heart broken and humiliated spinster, when suddendly the explorer finds that a great truth has suddenly dawned upon him and that he came very near letting his life's greatest happiness go from him by default.

And there is a happy ending provided for this pathetic and well nigh tragic story. A notable English cast interprets the principal roles of this society drama of today.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you are forced to concentrate all your energies upon the drawing possibilities of the title. It is an elastic title and can be made compelling from many angles. The cast of players is unknown to the American public, as this is an English production. It would be essentially advisable to advertise the fact that this is a British-made picture portrayed by a notable cast of English artists. This will show your patrons that you are not trying to put something over on them that they did not expect. And if they come to see an English production, knowing it to be one in advance, they will appreciate the picture more.

Therefore the title and the catch lines should predominate in your advertising. The picture is not adaptable to circus stunts in advertising nor will it suggest any lobby display. The fact that in this story a spinster receives a proposal of marriage not intended for her, and accepts the man by letter, as also calculated to awaken interest in the production.

PROGRAM READER

She was a spinster. A handsome spinster, but just about becoming conscious of the slight lines which she imagined would so soon furrow her face.

Her time had been taken up in properly raising the young motherless girl of her brother. The time of life most enjoyed by young girls was not spent in company with young men. It seemed that her chance had passed her by.

And then she received a proposal of marriage from a man whom she much admired. He was just about to sail away on an exploring expedition and desired her answer by return mail.

The happy spinster accepted him and he received her letter of acceptance the hour he sailed. And her heart was filled with joy.

But here's the tragedy.

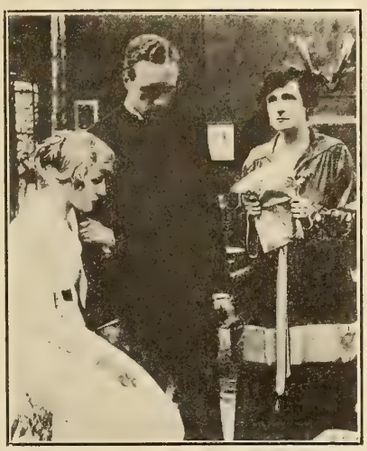
The proposal was never intended for her. It was meant for the charming young niece. The man had picked up a handkerchief which the young girl had dropped on the night of her debut when he fell in love with her. The name "Dolly" was embroidered on the dantiy piece of lace. And he at once naturally assumed that this was the young girl's name.

But it seems that the spinster had loaned her young niece this handkerchief on that night.

Can you imagine a more terrible situation or anything that promises more heart-breaks than the foregoing?

And yet this tangle is pleasantly straightened out in "Choosing a Wife," which comes to this theatre next week.

A notable English cast interprets this society drama of great emotional interest.



A tense moment from "Choosing a Wife," a British film, released by First National

CATCH LINES

He wrote to the wrong woman when "Choosing a Wife."

Be sure you know her right name when "Choosing a Wife."

Don't propose to the aunt when "Choosing a Wife."

Middle-aged bachelors should forget the chickens when "Choosing a Wife."

Shun the mail's when "Choosing a Wife."

Mail-order methods are precarious when "Choosing a Wife."

"THE PEACE OF ROARING RIVER"
(COLDWYN)

Good Dramatic Vehicle of Human Emotions

A DRAMA with locale first in a middle-west city and then in a western mining town. The star appears in a role that will command your sympathy and hold it to the last when she comes into her long deferred happiness.

The story is one of pathos, love and hate, but is not actively melodramatic. Hardee Kirkland realistically portrays a character that registers heavily. Several very tense situations compel the interest to hold, although the picture is not fast-moving. Direction, cast, photography, sets, etc., are all up to standard. It is a "heart" picture playing to the emotions and carries a sufficient suspense element. A good dramatic production of human emotions. The title has no basis in the story and does not fit the production.

Should draw best at cosmopolitan and elite theatres and give excellent satisfaction to those audiences. The draw should be above average in the family and labor houses and completely satisfy those crowds.—Length, 6 reels.—Released July 27.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Madge Nelson.....Pauline Frederick
Hugo Ennis.....Thomas Holding
Nils Olsen.....Hardee Kirkland
Sophy McGurn.....Corrinne Barker
Widow McBirney.....Lydia Yeamans Titus
Kid Follansbe.....Edwin Sturgis
Story by George E. Van Schaik.
Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.
Photographed by Edward Gheller.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Pauline Fredericks comes to the ——— theatre beginning ———in what is heralded as her latest and most powerful dramatic production from the Goldwyn Studios.

"The Peace of Roaring River" is the title and the star portrays the role of a young working girl in a middle-west city just after a siege of sickness in a hospital, and out of work.

Her doctor advises the country air and her landlady finally induces her to reply to a matrimonial advertisement apparently inserted by a lonesome mine-owner of Nevada. Then the scenes change to a Nevada mining town during the correspondence which followed.

It seems that the young post-mistress fairly hated a young mine-owner there because he spurned her attempts at making him love her. It was this woman who inserted the advertisement in the matrimonial paper and it was this same post-mistress who appropriated every letter and answered it, signing the young miner's name.

The beautiful young working girl of Omaha finally pawned her mother's jewels to make a journey to Nevada and one day when the young miner returned to his home he found the young girl there with her trunk. He suspected a blackmail plot and his actions frightened the girl who shot him. There are many stirring scenes from this point.

The girl quickly repented of her hasty action in shooting the man but she had been all unstrung during the previous night's vigil when he was up in the mountains. She quickly secures the doctor after a wild and hazardous trip and was overjoyed to find that the wound was not fatal. The men of the town, and also the women, stirred up by the post-mistress, determined to run the "hussy" out of the town but here is where the beautiful and much persecuted finally comes into her long deferred happiness.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture your best bet is to dwell heavily on the theme augmented by the drawing qualities of the star. The menace of the matrimonial publications is what you should harp on because this supplies the plot or theme around which the photoplay play revolves.

Therefore the material found in the catch lines and the story, and also the lines you can lift from the "Program Reader" herewith, should be used unsparingly and should arouse considerable interest. For a lobby display you can use placards lettered as follows: "Warning; Young girls should beware of 'The Menace' of the matrimonial papers. Pauline Frederick as Madge Nelson in 'The Peace of Roaring River,' emphasizes this; Warning."

A matrimonial bulletin throw-away is printed by the company and should be very effective. Or else you can print a fac-simile matrimonial two-page paper yourself that should be striking if you save the tie-in for the lower half of the second page.

Pauline Frederick is starred in the Goldwyn feature, "The Peace of Roaring River"

PROGRAM READER

She left the hospital weak and was unable to secure the work that would enable her to purchase proper nourishment.

And her landlady persuaded her to answer an advertisement in a matrimonial paper. Marriage seemd the only thing left open for her.

She was a beautiful girl and always thought that love would be the only inducement that would impel her to accept a man into her life. But it was now a case of self preservation.

The girl was finally induced by the letters she received from an apparent admirer she had never seen, to leave the middle-west city and go to him in a Nevada mining town.

She had to pawn her mother's jewels to secure the necessary railroad fare. And while the young miner was away on a hunting trip she installed herself in his cabin with her trunk and all through the dark night alone she was almost panic stricken at the weird noises of this wild country.

And he came in the morning. But he had no welcome for her. And she shot him.

All this, replete with tense action, to the finale which brings to this girl her long deferred happiness, is told with great effect in the Goldwyn picture starring Pauline Frederick.

It is entitled "The Peace of Roaring River" and comes to this theatre next week.

CATCH LINES

Misguided by an advertisement in a matrimonial paper a forlorn girl seeks "The Peace of Roaring River" and finds chaos.

To keep the gaunt wolves from her door she desperately resorts to the alluring advertisements of a matrimonial paper and finds "The Peace of Roaring River."

If it's an effective peace, a universal peace, a lasting peace, that we require, the ——— theatre offers us "The Peace of Roaring River."

Pauline Frederick in the role of a girl at war with conditions finally compromises on "The Peace of Roaring River."

"A FAVOR TO A FRIEND"
(METRO)

Emmy Wehlen Scores in a Delightful Comedy

A BREEZY little comedy-drama which carries a wealth of delightful situations is "A Favor to a Friend," Emmy Wehlen's newest feature under the Metro banner. The plot carries through swiftly, is filled with sparkling incidents, and the comedy portions are scattered with a prodigal hand. True it has its obvious character, but it is so refreshingly told that this factor is never realized until it is over. And if one wanted to be analytical one could say that it is extensively padded—yet it is padding which never intrudes to the spectator's dissatisfaction.

The plot may be far removed from actualities, but this is unimportant since it makes no pretense of sounding any truths, but only strives to while away a pleasant hour. Which it does with plenty to spare. It is a delight to see Miss Wehlen jump from the frying pan into the fire. To escape her guardian she allows herself to be kidnapped by a likeable young fellow. And the action sparkles when she realizes how pleasant is her predicament. And to give it weight a melodramatic vein lurks beneath the surface.

Director John Ince has realized on its farcical values and his cameraman has given it breadth with some enchanting locations. Miss Wehlen is captivating as always and gives a charming performance. And Jack Mulhall, Hugh Fay and Joseph Kilgour contribute excellent assistance.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 18. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Favor to a Friend," the Metro comedy drama which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ———of———week marks Emmy Wehlen's return to the screen after an absence of several weeks. Her many friends will be glad to know that her return is marked by a picture, the comedy of which sparkles with rich humorous values. As Mary Worthington, the heiress and imposter, Miss Wehlen plays with a grace and charm and an appreciation of the high lights of the story that again stamps her as one of the skilful actresses on the screen.

Briefly the story tells of an heiress' rebellion against her guardian, Mark Arnold. Unless she signs certain papers he and his cohorts are sure to face a long prison term. But she rebels and the consequence is she is locked in her room but manages to escape. Mary has a friend, Gloria Morning, who is the star of an unsuccessful musical show. And so she plans to look her up. The press agent of the play conceives the idea to have the star come up missing so as to attract the attention of the public. He outlines his plan to Robert Garrison who consents to steal Gloria and keep her a prisoner in his mountain cabin. But the young kidnapper mistakes Mary for the actress. When she realizes the scheme she is immensely grateful since it takes her away from her guardian. And Mary carries out the deception admirably.

Of course everything develops romantically for her and the guardians are given their just deserts in the end. By running away she saved her fortune and the show and found a wonderful husband. The comedy is plentiful in the picture and fairly sparkles. The titles are rich in humor while the situations show an originality that make them interesting. Miss Wehlen receives splendid support. Luther Reed wrote the story and John Ince directed.

SUGGESTIONS

If the previous Emmy Wehlen pictures were popular at your house advertise "A Favor to a Friend" as marking another worthy offering to her credit. It sort of brings her back to the screen after an absence of several weeks. You might make something of an event of her reappearance. Advertisements written in the form of an invitation to meet Miss Wehlen again at your theatre would be attractive and if you have a mailing list of regular patrons play up her return.

As regards the story you can feature strongly its comedy values. Without doubt it will prove amusing to every class of picturegoer. The theme is one that possesses a lot of interest and you can develop this in your advertising. You can get copy from the program reader printed elsewhere on this page. Don't be afraid of using superlatives in talking about the picture. Use catch lines to the limit—the theme warrants their display. Tell that it is a play of love and adventure. But concentrate for the most part upon the star. Mention her wonderful gowns if such an announcement is attractive to your feminine patrons. Play up the fact that it is an exceptional picture.

A love scene from the Metro feature "A Favor to a Friend," starring Emmy Wehlen

PROGRAM READER

They could lock her in her room but they couldn't keep her there. They wanted her to sign a horrid old paper and she just wouldn't do it. They were desperate—desperate for money, and the girl was rich and signing the paper would keep them from prison. But she escaped—escaped from her boudoir and flew straight into the arms of a kidnapper. A dashing young fellow, too, and he had a nifty roadster. And soon they were speeding to the mountain cabin where he lived.

What was his game? Well he called her Gloria when her name was Mary. He had orders to kidnap Gloria and make her missing for a time so that her absence could arouse curiosity and make the show a success. Well Mary was Gloria's friend and she made out that she was Gloria. Why not? Wasn't it fun and didn't she grow fond of her kidnapper? Besides he kept her away from the horrid old guardian. Well Gloria turned up safe and sound and she knew the jig was up. But he had grown to love her too and—See Emmy Wehlen in the sparkling comedy-drama, "A Favor to a Friend" which comes to this theatre next ———.

CATCH LINES

See Emmy Wehlen in "A Favor to a Friend." It is a rich, sparkling comedy-drama. Come and get acquainted with a kidnapped heiress who flirts with fire and doesn't get her wings singed. See it. It is a genuine treat.

"A WHITE MAN'S CHANCE"
(BRUNTON-HODKINSON)

Kerrigan Is Heroic in Conventional Picture

"A WHITE MAN'S CHANCE" is all characterization—heroic characterization as served up by the star, J. Warren Kerrigan. He is a firm believer in the "old school" methods that a photoplay is more important as a vehicle for an actor's personality than that the story should be the thing. Hence it is that the picture presents him in a screen holiday with the plot largely subordinated. It is a conventional number depicting in a dashing sort of way the ancient and accepted order of Mexican bandits (a small army) put to rout by a lone, but courageous American.

He is disguised as a Spanish grandee which permits him to use the sweeping arm of chivalry toward the heroine. And when her life is threatened or his own, he enters the fray in careless abandon and comes up smiling with nary a scratch. Which of course robs the feature of what would be good suspense if he had allowed himself to go under occasionally. And so the characterization doesn't ring true. There are several mild thrills in the action which are noticeable in the exhibition of horsemanship and the love episodes are worked out with a measure of charm.

The atmosphere is richly suggested and the action has plenty of zip. Among the players who are more or less submerged in their parts is Lillian Walker, who plays opposite the star. The picture will please the Kerrigan devotees and all others who indulge in hero-worship.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A White Man's Chance," which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— with J. Warren Kerrigan as the star, gives every promise of surpassing in popularity any previous subject in which this favorite screen actor has been featured. An adaptation of Johnston McCulley's Munsey's Magazine story, it presents the star in a colorful role—a role which takes him to the land south of the Rio Grande. He appears as Donald Joseph Blenhorn, junior member of a Boston law firm and it is his object to investigate the man whom their client, Dorothy Charlton, is to marry. According to her father's will this process must take place.

The young lawyer finds Dorothy at the home of her foster-father, Wililam Roberts. But instead of appearing as an American he is disguised as a Spanish grandee, Don Jose Alverez. His presence is not looked upon with favor by Hugh Hankins, the man he is to investigate, and he incurs the enmity of a couple of ranch hands. Indeed Lopez and Gonzales attempt to assassinate him but mistake him for the storekeeper. Naturally suspicion falls upon him as the murderer. However he escapes through his American resourcefulness, catches the culprits and turns them over to justice. An infuriated mob attacks the Roberts house, and after a short but exciting fight he quells the disturbance. In the course of events Hankins shows his real character, is whipped by Don Jose, and Dorothy confesses her love for the "Spaniard." Thus he reveals his real identity. He heartily recommends the girl's suitor to the law firm—because that suitor is himself.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is J. Warren Kerrigan again and he is appearing in the first of his new series of ten pictures which are released by Hodkinson. You might bring out in your ads that the star will appear regularly upon your program. He is a favorite with the feminine picturegoers. Run stories about his long and active career upon the screen. Use stills liberally. He has a number of good ones wherein he appears as a Spanish grandee. And you can decorate your lobby with them. If you employ an artist you can have him paint a likeness of the star in his picturesque garb. It is sure to attract attention. Then for your story copy bring out that he has a fighting role of an American who journeys into Mexico and proceeds to show the natives how to behave.

"A White Man's Chance" stars J. Warren Kerrigan a W. W. Hodkinson feature released through Pathe

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ——— theatre will have an opportunity to renew their acquaintance with J. Warren Kerrigan next ——— when he appears in the first of his new series of pictures, "A White Man's Chance." This popular star has always had a secure place in the heart of the public. And the subject which has been given him is, seemingly, made to order for his colorful personality. He plays a good old fashioned American hero who arrives from Boston in a sleepy Mexican town with the object of investigating the love affairs of his fair client. Being a lawyer it is his duty according to the terms of her father's will.

How he disguises himself as a Spanish grandee and awakens the town from its resounding slumber, how he incurs the enmity of several natives to say nothing of the client's fiance, how he fights his way through a series of exciting adventures and comes up smiling are situations which make the picture one of the most interesting that has ever appeared at this theatre. It throbs with action and thrills. And there is a beautiful love story to balance the anxious moments. See it.

CATCH LINES

He had a good excuse to fight his way through a horde of enemies—because at the far end of his journey a beautiful girl beckoned with eyes of love. See J. Warren Kerrigan, the popular star, in a colorful melodrama, "A White Man's Chance."

He went into Mexico to investigate the man who was to wed his client and he fell in love himself. It was some task he assigned himself for wily enemies constantly lurked in his path. Did he come up smiling? See "A White Man's Chance."

"THE THIRTEENTH CHAIR"
(PATHE)

Mystery Melodrama Is Good Entertainment

BAYARD VEILLER'S powerful mystery melodrama, "The Thirteenth Chair," has been adapted to the screen with a fair measure of success. While it differs from the original in its early development and suffers accordingly, yet along about the middle it runs true to form and finishes with plenty of strength. Indeed the action has a cumulative force in the concluding reels which is gripping to the spectator. But whereas the play only depicted one crime mystery, here, there are two unraveled. Yet Leonce Perret could not have constructed his picture any other way for had it been followed faithfully the thing would have ended at the third reel.

To those who have seen the play it will suffer in comparison because it is not so compact with mystifying action nor is it so endowed with electrifying suspense. The early reels are a trifle too involved so that the gist of the drama seems lost.

However, the plot soon finds itself and the ultimate result is wholly satisfying. Its originality is noteworthy, the handling of the theme is on the whole well done, the backgrounds contribute tone and quality, and the acting is entirely adequate. The denouement cannot be anticipated. So the mystery note is splendidly realized.—Length, 6 reels.—Released August 31.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by Leonce Perret.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Thirteenth Chair," an adaptation of Bayard Veiller's great stage success of the same name, will be presented in motion picture form at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is a Pathe production, and is said to be as richly endowed with mystery, action and suspense as the original.

It tells the story of the murder of two men, one, Stephen Lee, the other, Edward Wales. The former, having been declared bankrupt, conceives the scheme of blackmailing Helen Trent in order to reimburse himself. However, her brother, Willy Crosby, and her friend, Helen O'Neil, decide to interview him. While Willy remains outside Helen is engaged in a fierce struggle to regain the incriminating letters. Worried over her absence, the young man enters to find the girl staring at the dead body of Lee, who has a knife thrust in his back.

The scene shifts to the Crosby home, where Edward Wales has engaged a clairvoyant to solve the mystery the following day, Friday, the 13th. The lights are switched off and the guests are assembled in a seance, when Wales, who has been sitting in the thirteenth chair, is murdered in identicall- the same manner as Lee. Inspector Donahue takes charge, but an examination of the guests fails to reveal the weapon. By pre-arrangement with the clairvoyant, she is accused of the murder. This has the result of causing Helen O'Neil, suspected of the crime, to rush to her mother's protection, thus disclosing the relationship between them.

Another seance is held and the clairvoyant, through trickery, points to the real murderer. And he confesses. He killed Lee for breaking up his home and stealing his fortune, and Wales to prevent him from discovering the truth. "The Thirteenth Chair" was produced under the direction of Leonce Perret, and it is excellently acted by a large cast headed by Yvonne Delva and Creighton Hale.

SUGGESTIONS

This powerful mystery melodrama should be exploited to the limit. It is one of the greatest melodramas ever written. So feature it as an adaptation of Bayard Veiller's play of the same name. Play him up in all your copy as the author of "The Thirteenth Chair" and "Within the Law." The picture should be widely advertised in all newspaper spreads and a circular campaign should be started weeks in advance. Tell that the biggest mystery drama ever written will be at the ——— theatre in the near future. Keep your crowd interested as to when it will appear. Arouse their curiosity concerning the mystery. Give away just enough of the plot to keep them mystified. Catch lines would be a good angle and the title lends itself well to all manner of exploitation. Send out attractive teasers along the line of "Who sat in the thirteenth chair on the night of Friday, the 13th?" "What happened?" Mention the source of the picture and the success it met with on the stage. Play up the superstition of the figure "thirteen."

Marie Shotwell, appearing in 'The Thirteenth Chair" a Pathe release

PROGRAM READER

There had been a murder committed. There was no mistake about that with the body of Edward Wales lying on the floor. The guests were assembled in a seance and a clairvoyant had been engaged to solve the murder of Stephen Lee who had been a friend of Wales. Both men were assassinated in the same manner. And Wales occupied the thirteenth chair. The lights were turned off at the time and the stillness of the room was punctuated by the piercing cry of Wales as he toppled over. Who killed him? Suspicion rested on every guest. And no one was permitted to leave the room. Another seance was held and the finger of the clairvoyant pointed to the guilty person.

Thus is outlined the stirring action of "The Thirteenth Chair," the pictorial adaptation of Bayard Veiller's play of the same name. It is one of the most powerful mystery melodramas ever written. It will never be forgotten as a play, and as a picture it will be enthusiastically received. Manager ——— feels elated in the fact that he can interest the ——— patrons in this Pathe Special production. The stars are Yvonne Delva and Creighton Hale. Remember the date, next ———.

CATCH LINES

See "The Thirteenth Chair." It is a powerful mystery melodrama and baffling in the extreme. Who killed Lee and Wales? Both were murdered in the same manner. Suddenly—See "The Thirteenth Chair," an adaptation of Bayard Veiller's play. It will raise shivers of excitement and suspense.

(JEWEL-UNIVERSAL)

Psychological Study Is Novel and Absorbing

UNIVERSAL offers a richly dramatic subject in this psychological study of a man's character. It just about hits the highwater mark of picture production in its compact scenario, its engrossing theme, its progressive development and the excellent enactment by a very capable cast headed by Dorothy Phillips. Maximum results have been obtained with a minimum of effort. The situations and climaxes are achieved from a single idea and they are vigorously accentuated without the least resort to counterplotting.

Telling the tale of ambitious youth it presents most dramatically that ambition is a curse instead of a virtue. It strips man of his veneer and topples him from his high estate. And the climax is reached with tremendous force, through an array of intense scenes which have builded surely and swiftly as the tide. A tragic finale is unfolded when a most surprising twist reveals the fact that the events would have happened had the youth followed the gods of ambition. Instead his idea is but to serve and not to conquer.

The picture could have ended at the fifth reel without the subsequent anti-climax and the novel development, and it would have proved powerful. The surprise ending saved the concluding moveish scenes. "Destiny" has a sound moral. It shows real people at the crossroads of life.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Phillips, the emotional star, has in "Destiny" the first picture since "The Heart of Humanity," and it appears at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This story by Charles Neville Buck is based upon a powerful theme which is presented as a psychological study of a man's character. A farm youth dreams of ambition. Unlike his brother, who is a weakling, he dreams of lording it in the financial world, of becoming one of its biggest figures.

The pages of the book of might-have-been are turned ten years forward; the youth is seen as a man with his dreams fulfilled. Indeed Hamilton Burton, the boy, has become Hamilton Burton, a man of might. He becomes a Napoleon of finance, but loses his soul. He breaks up the romance of his sister with Jefferson Edwards, his bitterest rival in the business world, and brings down tragedy upon his house. His father and mother die and he meets a tragic death at the hands of a man he has ruined. The chapter of the fairy-book is turned back, however, and it is all a dream. The boy-conqueror has listened to the wise counsel of his sister, a girl of remarkable intuition. He is happy to serve mankind not to conquer it. Ambition is a false god.

It is a compelling human picture and gets beneath the skin and touches real flesh and blood. And there is a logical, convincing story and one with a deep moral. Miss Phillips again demonstrates her emotional powers and she is excellently supported by Antrim Short, William Stowell, Tom Ashton, Stanhope Wheatcroft, and Walt Whitman. Rollin Sturgeon staged the picture rrom a scenario by Elliot J. Clawson.

SUGGESTIONS

There is no getting away from the power of this picture. So you can exploit it with considerable expenditure. And with no feeling that you will be the loser. Make mention that it is the first picture that Dorothy Phillips has made since "The Heart of Humanity." That is a big note in its favor. Your patrons got a lot for their money in that feature and they will expect something as good here. Well they won't be disappointed. Mention that. Use streamers and send out your teasers and circular letters. Play up the title. Who was the man of Destiny? Ask your patrons that. Napoleon. And he fell from too much ambition. That is the theme of the picture. It shows the crossroads one of which every human being must take in his course through life. Ask your patrons which one they will choose—the road that leads to happiness or the road to sorrow and despair. Tell them that they cannot tell the roads apart, but must be guided by their judgment. Feature it as a big, red-blooded picture—one with a message but dramatically told. Play up catch lines. Mention the supporting cast. Advertise it big in every way. You are fully guaranteed because the crowd cannot be kept away.

Dorothy Phillips, star of the Universal production, "Destinly"

PROGRAM READER

A gripping story of life, as it is, will be shown at this theatre in the near future when Dorothy Phillips appears in "Destiny," a story by Charles Neville Buck. It is described as an intensely dramatic offering, dealing with modern American life and leading up to a tremendous climax. The theme of the picture deals with the results of an overwhelming lust for power. This ambition presented in a laudable light at first, is gradually transformed into a thing of evil, which wrecks the lives of those dearest to him, and his own. Then the fairy-book of life is turned back and—

To mention more would be giving the story away. Suffice to state that it is one of the most absorbing pictures, one of the most dramatic which Manager ——— has ever played. It is presented with an admirable cast which includes William Stowell, Harry Hilliard, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Walt Whitman, Antrim Short, Tom Ashton, Allan Sears and others. It is a rare treat, is "Destiny." See it.

CATCH LINES

He became a Napoleon of the financial world. He had conquered but he had lost his soul. Suddenly he found himself at the brink of the precipice. Did he topple? "Oh the mills of the gods grind slowly but they grind exceedingly fine." See "Destiny."

"THE GIRL ALASKA"

Picturesque Appeal in World's Latest

WORLD comes forward with the announcement that its latest release is the first and only picture ever made on Alaskan soil. This is believable when one takes into consideration the scenic investiture of "The Girl Alaska." The pictures are countless which have carried Alaskan stories, but it can truthfully be stated that they have been framed against California backgrounds. So "The Girl Alaska" with its actual scenery contains a picturesque appeal which cannot be denied.

Otherwise the story is conventional in theme and treatment since it serves up the ambitious search for gold—a search, however, which takes an adventurous course. A love story is introduced that has its reward in the absence of accentuated villainy and it is punctuated with notes of gentle pathos. But it is the pictorial background which will invite the spectator's attention more than its dramatic framework. It is a feast for the eye.

And the vast silences, the trackless wastes will bring home to him the realization that Alaska is indeed a land of the survival of the fittest. Lottie Kruse enacts the part of the heroine and gives a pleasing performance. She is supported by genuine "sourdoughs" aside from her leading man.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 18. —Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

"Alaska" .....Lottie Kruse
Supported by Henry Bolton and others in a story especially written for her.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Girl Alaska," a World production, will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week featuring Lottie Kruse. As its title suggests it is a story of Alaska—a story of the trackless wastes of the North and the survival of the fittest. The merciless reaches of snow hold nature in a tight grip when the girl sets foot in Skagway, the gateway of Alaska. She has been an orphan since her father went North in search of gold. Reading in the newspapers about the opportunities offered to ambitious young men in Alaska, she determines to disguise herself as a boy and follow his adventurous path. And discovered as a stowaway on the northbound ship she gives her name as Alaska and is obliged to scrub decks. When she suffers several indignities a fellow passenger, a youth about her own age, comes to her rescue, and instantly wins her friendship.

They decide to go as pals and he pays her voyage. So Skagway is reached. A "sourdough" offers to guide them to a rich gold country out of gratitude for grubstaking him, but after a tedious journey the pals manage to reach the cabin of an old gold seeker, who, offers them hospitality. Pay dirt is struck but the old man succumbs to illness, but not before the girl learns that he is her own father.

Then one day the young man decides to return East and bring back a bride. He meets with an accident and is rescued by his pal who nurses him back to health. And eventually he discovers that she is a girl and the best little pal in the world and so they marry. The picture contains all the elements which characterize such a tale. But to embellish them is a wealth of picturesque scenery of actual Alaskan country.

PROGRAM READER

The only memory she had of her father was when he left her to make his way in Alaska seventeen years before. And he never came back to take her out of the life of drudgery she had known. But the girl had a sense of adventure and suddenly it dawned upon her to become a boy and follow him to Alaska. The steamer was to sail and she was a stowaway and like all stowaways she was soon discovered. And the old drudgery came back until a fellow passenger came to the rescue and paid her passage. Thenceforth they became pals and agreed to hunt gold together in the land of the frozen North.

How she nursed him back to health, how he never discovered that she was a girl until she carelessly took her cap off one day, how she agreed to be his wife as well as his pal are situations which make "Th Girl Alaska" a thoroughly interesting number. Pretty Lottie Kruse is the star and the picture comes to the ——— theatre next ———. Don't fail to see it; there are gigantic snowslides, wondrous glaciers and other genuine Alaskan scenes.

Lottie Kruse, star of "The Girl Alaska," a World feature

SUGGESTIONS

The most important angle to advertise in this feature is the announcement by World that it is the first and only photoplay ever made on Alaskan soil. Your patrons have seen "snow and mountain" pictures which have been represented as bearing the Alaskan brand of scenery, but here you see the genuine thing. Bring out this angle emphatically. Tell that it has wonderful scenic effects, a real Alaskan dance hall, genuine Alaskan mining towns, gigantic snowslides, thrilling fights and a spectacular gold rush. Tell that it is an interesting story of love and adventure in the great Gold Country.

Bring out in your copy and catch lines and teasers that a search for gold takes place amid the frozen beauty of the alluring north country—a country full of primitive nature and primitive passions. And it has an all Alaskan cast except for the principals. Make much of such expressions as "sourdough" meaning old-timer, and "cheechako" meaning a new-comer. Use all the one and two column cuts which are given by World. There are no big features in the character of the story to bring out so go strong on the genuine location and the scenery. You might bring out the star. She is pretty and stills would serve to attract the passerby.

"EVANGELINE"
(FOX)

Longfellow's Poem Is Artistically Picturized

LONGFELLOW'S immortal poem, "Evangeline," has been wonderfully humanized upon the screen by William Fox. The sublime and tragic love story told so beautifully in the poet's word pictures is translated into a photoplay with remarkable fidelity. The result is it remains faithful to one's own conception. Such treatment is important in a work of this character. It makes the subject vital, truthful and lifelike. Raoul Walsh is a director who can draw a canvas with the utmost appreciation of the author.

As drama goes it carries no appeal. But that is not important. What is important is the spark of the poem which is caught and carried onward—the spark, the inspiration of his beautiful song of faith and love. The picture introduces a prologue which reveals a lover's quarrel. And the poem is read and visualized to point an object lesson in faith and devotion. And the spectator is drawn into the canvas and follows the lovers with the keenest sympathy from the time they plight their troth in youth only to be torn apart, to the day in a far-off land when they meet in the autumn of their lives.

Excerpts from the poem are used in the subtitles and they contribute in giving it beauty. It is spectacular and rich in atmosphere. And acted with fine understanding and feeling by Miriam Cooper as Evangeline, and Albert Roscoe as Gabriel. Some of their scenes are heartrending, and a deep running note of pathos is felt throughout the visualized reading.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A pictorial presentation of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's immortal poem, "Evangeline," will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This should arouse the deepest interest among picturegoers for the sublime story of the Acadian lovers has undoubtedly been read by us all. Evangeline, Gabriel, Benedict, Basil and Father Felician are humanized. They are given the breath of life. There is no need to outline the poem. All are familiar with it. All have read it, not once, but many times. And so it is given lifelike proportions. The English come and dispossess the happy villagers. It is the wedding morning of Evangeline and Gabriel and they are torn apart not to meet again until old age has creeped onto them.

A beautiful poem and beautifully expressed upon the screen with all its vitality, its happiness, its sorrow, its faith and love intact. R. A. Walsh who staged the picture has given it a fine production. One feels transported and the emotions play at the heart as the poem unfolds. The atmosphere is richly suggested, the locations being picturesque and beautiful. And all thrugh the picture the poem carries on its divine message of love and devotion.. A notable cast of players has been selected to interpret the lovable characters. Hiriam Cooper is Evangeline and contributes a performance marked for its understanding and charm. Albert Roscoe plays Gabriel, the lover.

CATCH LINES

How many times have you read Longfellow's sublime poem, "Evangeline," and marked its beauty- One of the greatest works in the English language, it has been translated on the screen with its spirit, its divine theme given the breath of life. See it.

Longfellow's immortal classic, "Evangeline," will appear as a picture at the ——— next ———. See it. See this wonderful humanization of undying love and faith. It is big; it is spectacular; it is real.

And they were torn apart on their wedding morning never to meet again until the autumn of their lives. Evangeline and Gabriel. See "Evangeline"—it will sooth your aches—it will transport you into Elysian fields. An inspiring poem—an inspiring picture.

SUGGESTIONS

A every picturegoer is familier with this sublime poem of Longfellow's you don't have to be advised how to advertise it. A bare announcement that it will be humanized with wonderful expression would suffice to draw the crowds. Still it is big enough to play up with emphasis. No expense should be spared on the circular letter campaign. Get in touch with people who do not frequent your theatre. Make a bid for the patronage of those who do not attend photoplays. They will be converted after seeing this picture.

Miriam Cooper, appearing in the William Fox production, "Evangeline"

Send out invitations to meet Evangeline at your theatre next ———. You might have cheap editions of the poem given away as souvenirs far in advance. Run stills of the scenes and the players. The picture carries beautiful photography. Mention that the beautiful Miriam Cooper plays Evangeline. Mention the director. He commands a big name in the picture world. Link up with the schools and run special matinees for the children. The picture is big enough to run as a special.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ——— takes great pleasure in anouncing that a picturization of Longfellow's immortal poem, "Evangeline," will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Our patrons should miss no opportunity to see this wonderful production. The poem is one of the grandest works ever conceived by man. And every picturegoer has undoubtedly read it. However, we state that your conception is faithfully visualized. You will follow the undying faith and devotion of the lovers, Evangeline and Gabriel, with the deepest interest and sympathy. It will bring a tear to the eye as it does when you read it.

"Evangeline"—the story of love and broken hearts. The story of happy Acadians who are scattered like the sands of a desert storm. You will come and see it and you will leave inspired, transported, so to speak. Such a picture makes life endurable. So don't miss it. A notable cast has been selected to play the important characters. Remember next ———. Come early.

Stage Play Brought Up to Date in Film

Like many stage revivals of famous plays, Vitagraph's forthcoming picturization of Clyde Fitch's "The Climbers" has been brought up to date. This does not mean that the story has been altered to any great extent, but as the original stage production took place sixteen years ago, before motor cars, aeroplanes, and the like were so much in evidence, some changes were necessary. The action of the play is of to-day and if done as originally written the famous drama would appear helplessly old-fashioned.

In the picture version the rapid wooing of Blache Sterling, the original Amelia Bingham role now played by Corinne Griffith, is shown by a number of clever interposes.

Virile Story Made by Lynn Reynolds

"The Brute Breaker" by Johnston McCulley, well known magazine author, has been filmed as a six-reel feature at Universal City. Lynn Reynolds, best known as the producer of virile, outdoor stories, had charge of the production. Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams are featured in this drama of the logging country, with its picturesque background of the big California forests.

Frank Mayo is a well known stage favorite. He starred with Kathryn Adams and J. Barney Sherry in the Universal photoplay, "A Little Brother of the Rich."

The supporting cast includes such well known names as Harry Northrup, Jack Curtis, Frank Brownlee, Charles LeMoyne, Bert Sprott and Burwell Hamrick.

Universal Branch Notes

R. Wilkerson, one of the best known film salesmen and exchange managers in New York City has been transferred from the New office of Universal to be manager of the Kansas City Universal exchange.

Joe Friedman, office manager of the Detroit Universal exchange is now making a trip through the Southern states to superintend the new sales plans recently inaugurated in all the Universal exchanges. His first stop in the installation of this new operating system was at Charlotte, N. C.

Monte Blue has signed a contract with Famous Players for a period of five years, to appear in specials

Picture With Direct Trend

United's "The Woman Under Oath" Is Claimed to Be Without Final "Twist"

COMMENTING on the frequent irrelevance of picture titles and dwelling on the claim that in too many cases titles bear very little relation to the subject matter of the story, the New York Tribune in a recent article points to Florence Reed's latest United Picture Theatres offering, "The Woman Under Oath," as a notable exception, declaring that the picture is actually about what it says it is about.

Of interest to exhibitors of "The Woman Under Oath" in connection with their exploitation of this feature and as an argument in rebuttal of the criticism that the story is deliberately planned to lead the thoughts of the audience along a line of action which builds up to an erroneous conception in order that at the climax the story may be given a sudden twist into the true channel, and thus produce complete surprise, United's scenario department has this to say in justification:

"In 'The Woman Under Oath' the customary procedure in the application of the unexpected twist has been reversed, and the coup is executed with such admirable showmanship as to deserve special notice. The story builds resolutely to a tremendous climax and with such consistency that there would have been danger of its anticipation in the minds of the audience, had not those minds been properly diverted at the outset. This is accomplished by the establishment of a talking point, useful for publicity purposes, but even more valuable as a false guide-post to lead the thoughts of the beholder in the direction the producer would wish them."

A Serious Play for Vita Star

Gladys Leslie in "The Girl Woman" Has Her First Real Emotional Role

VITAGRAPH'S "The Girl Woman," with Gladys Leslie in the leading role, is the subject of more than usual interest as it serves to introduce the star in an entirely new type of character, entirely foreign to anything she has hitherto attempted. Miss Leslie won her success and earned her stardom through her clever work in plays in light vein—comedies and the lighter dramas. In "The Girl Woman," however, she has a highly emotional role. The play is a serious one with just a sprinkling of fun in the earlier scenes.

Miss Leslie's shift to the more serious play is made at the direction of Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph. Several weeks ago Mr. Smith happened along when Miss Leslie was playing a brief scene in a light comedy. There was a touch of seriousness in the scene, calling for considerable emotion, and the star played it so splendidly that Mr. Smith decided then and there that she should have a chance at a serious part. That Miss Leslie has justified her employer's confidence is shown by the fact that she is now at work on another serious drama, "Fate in the Balance."

"The Girl Woman" was made under the working title of "Belinda Puts Her Hair Up," the name under which it was written by A. Van Buren Powell. It was decided, however, that the original title was too suggestive of comedy, especially with Miss Leslie's previous association with that type of play.

Vitagraph has supplied Miss Leslie with an excellent supporting company. It includes, among others, Maurice Costello, Priestly Morrison, William E. Lawrence, Joe Burke, Frank Norcross, Julia Swayne Gordon and Walter Horton. Tom Mills was the director.

New Capital Comedy

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announce for early release the latest "Smiling Bill" Parsons picture, "He Did and He Didn't."

Marsden Is Directing Earle Williams

The use of a silencer on a revolver plays an important part in "The Black Gate," the mystery play Earle Wiliiams is now making at Vitagraph's West Coast studio. The silencer was first used on the stage in "Within the Law" when Joe Garson, played by William B. Mack, kills a detective. This was done in full view of the audience and there was no doubt as to the identity of the murderer. In "The Black Gate," however, the murder is not shown until the guilty man has confessed and is then only an explanation of how he committed the crime.

"The Black Gate" gets it name from the electric chair, which looms not only before the murderer but the hero, who is unjustly accused. Word comes from the Western studio that Earle Williams is very happy in the role of Shaler Spencer, and that the work is progressing nicely under the direction of Theodore Marsden who has just re-joined the staff of Vitagraph directors after a long absence due to a serious accident.

History Making Days in "Daring Hearts"

Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, who wrote "Daring Hearts," which is nearing its release by Vitagraph, took two of the greatest days in history as the time for their story. The action of the play begins on the day war was declared on France by Germany, and ends on the day the armistice was signed more than four years later. But while the play is of the war it is not in it. The stirring events in France and Alsace which fell between those days have little to do with the story.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne have the two leading roles.

Hart Studio Renovated

The Hart studio in Hollywood today looks like an empty shell. Everything has been taken out of the structures, practically to make way for complete new equipment in preparation for the start of the famous Western star's new productions for Famous Players-Lasky.

Simplex

THE MEN WHO KNOCK THE SIMPLEX

(And How Some Knockers Can Be Cured)

There are two kinds of men who do not like the Simplex Projector

One is the man who has never used one and in many cases has not even seen one. This man, however, after honestly investigating our claim for superiority will agree that perhaps he was mistaken—after using the Simplex a day or so he will invariably confess that he never dreamed a motion picture projector could be so good—and he'll fight if you even infer that there are better projectors.

This has happened in thousands of cases.

THE OTHER IS A DIFFERENT TYPE

He is the man who has some other kind of projector to sell. His likes and dislikes of projectors are created by the amount of profit which he makes or loses. This type of dealer has been accustomed to the trade coming to him for his projectors and he regarded the Simplex first with amusement, then with tolerance and now alarm. For with the finest material, workmanship and appliances, the Simplex is the leader among projectors, it being used by the majority of studios, producers, directors, and high class exhibitors.

So with the Simplex being installed all around them, many of these competitive dealers are becoming desperate and have resorted to the telling of libellous tales of "How the Simplex is being made of cheaper material," and "How the Simplex is falling down in the big houses," etc., thinking that by so doing they can stop the onward rush of the popular Simplex.

The first type of man we can convert as we always have. If you meet the other type of man and his story, send us his name and address and a copy of his statement and even though we are working day and night at the Simplex factory, we still have time to attend legally to the man who in order to sell his own make of projector, is willing to malign the product of another.

THE SCENES in the photodrama "Male and Female" have never been surpassed for color, variety, and compelling beauty. The story carries the plot from the ultra-luxurious home of an English Earl to an uninhabited, uncharted, tropical island where the stranded party learn to live the primitive lives of wild people. The contrast in settings, as in delineation of characters, is nothing short of remarkable. Prints will soon be ready for exhibitor showings. The photoplay will speak for itself.

Charlie Comedy Chaplin, being the supreme court of final resort on all matters connected with the enterprise known as the laugh, has the right to be heard with infectious attention.

Reviewing the field of comedy, realizing that none there is to challenge his own unconquered throne, he has said these words:

Strong words, those, C. C. and therefore to be taken as the Law. Who would dispute them?

We Challenge America

Desert Gold is more than "the greatest Zane Grey picture ever produced."

It has the vitality and remarkable force and imagination of Benjamin B. Hampton, a new producing genius, plus the personal supervision of Zane Grey himself.

Desert Gold has been held back to match and whip any other "big picture" that any other producer has in reserve, or thinks he has.

Any exhibitor who has heard that his competitor has a "great picture" scheduled has, in Desert Gold, a greater one; any exhibitor with one big one booked, in Desert Gold, can book one still bigger.

ZANE GREY'S MOST POWERFUL MOTION PICTURE

With This Production

Desert Gold is courage in the saddle and romance in the heart of Youth.

It is the story of fighting Dick Gale who rode into the jaws of Hell for a girl; a story of loyalty and riches; of revenge and retribution; of gigantic action!

It is the most compelling picture of this year and all the other years you can remember. It is breath-taking. It thrills you like an electric battery.

It is built according to a new pattern; by a new imagination; under a new system of production. It is "not in the same street with any other picture."

Mr. Smith, the President and General Manager, has recently returned from a three years' trip around the world, visiting the Orient, Russia, Finland, France, Switzerland, Scandinavia, Great Britain and all of the South American countries. The reason for this tour was to learn FIRST HAND THE KIND OF FILMS OF GREATEST APPEAL IN EACH TERRITORY. The confidence of foreign distributors has often been impaired by receiving from American exporting agencies films of no use in their countries. The only film productions distributed by GUY CROSWELL SMITH, LTD., will be such as have been carefully selected with a view of their particular fitness in the various foreign countries. The personal knowledge that Mr. Smith brings to this organization WILL ASSURE A SERVICE TO FOREIGN DISTRIBUTORS that has not before been extended to this most important branch of the American film industry.

BROKEN BLOSSOMS

Adapted from Thomas Burke's Famous Limehouse Night Stories

Griffith's development of the waif heroine in "Broken Blossoms" becomes a classic of the screen that will live alongside of Dickens' Little Nell and Bret Harte's M'liss. Human nature is the same the world over and hearts will go out in the same sympathy to this little girl from Limehouse as they did when Dickens brought forth his immortal child and Bret Harte touched the kinship of the world with M'liss's smile and homely philosophy.

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" recently completed an engagement of over 150 performances at George M. Cohan's Theatre, New York, at the highest prices ever paid for a motion picture production—three dollars for orchestra seats.

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" will be presented in London for an extended engagement at one of the largest dramatic theatres in the Fall.

ANNOUNCEMENTS OF THE PURCHASE OF OTHER IMPORTANT PRODUCTIONS WILL BE MADE SHORTLY.

GUY CROSWELL SMITH, LTD., OPERATES INDEPENDENTLY AND HAS NO AFFILIATIONS WITH ANY PRODUCING CONCERN. Therefore, the selection of productions will be influenced solely by their merit and fitness for foreign distribution.

GROWING!

Ideas are what count in any business.

The Realart Pictures idea was born two months ago.

No steps then had been taken toward organization; no stars had been engaged; no offices had been leased, no studio arrangements had been made; no branch managers had been employed, none of the mass of details connected with launching a great commercial enterprise had been approached.

Today, Realart Pictures Corporation is a reality — one of the livest organizations in the motion picture business. It has engaged three great stars. It has five pictures in work. It has established branch offices and installed branch managers in twenty of the principal cities of the country. It has under way an extensive advertising and publicity campaign, rivaling that of concerns which have been in the business for years. In short, it already has bridged the big gap between anticipation and achievement.

That's the enormous driving force of the Realart idea. That's why Realart today is able to announce on the following pages eight great productions by one of the master directors of filmdom.

And Realart is just beginning!

Allan Dwan

REALART

To Release Allan Dwan Productions

You know Allan Dwan—

Dwan, director of many Douglas Fairbanks successes; of William H. Crane in "David Harum;" of Clara Kimball Young in "Cheating Cheaters;" of Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower"—

Dwan, who has contributed so generously to the profits of the photoplay exhibitor!

This genius of motion picture technic is to make eight productions for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Isaac Wolper, President, to be released through Realart. And his first picture will be the novel that has been read by new thousands every year for twenty years—the novel on which AUGUSTUS THOMAS based a stage play that has survived nearly two decades of changing tastes and incessant competition—a story famed for its rippling style, its swift dramatic action and the hypnotic power of its love appeal.

SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS

This new Dwan masterpiece is destined to be a triumph of the coming season.

Our Missionaries in the Field

REALART'S branch managers are its missionaries in the field. They come into intimate, personal contact with the Exhibitor. We believe you will agree with us that they are a fine, representative body of men, who can be trusted to tell the truth about any proposition they may be handling. Realart trusts them.

LOS ANGELES says —"A Master Picture"

GUY PRICE, of the Herald, says it is a big theme directed by a master hand—with a mighty cast. If the play meets with the same response in New York as it did at the California Theatre it will be an immediate success.

GRACE KINGSLEY, of the Times, says it is a powerful story vividly told. Holubar has a way of revealing his meanings in lightning-like flashes that keep one thrilled and uplifted.

WILLIAM CAMPBELL, of the Record, says that DOROTHY PHILLIPS never appeared in a more convincing role than that of the tigerish, war-like, bobbed-hair little Russian anarchist leader.

FLORENCE LAWRENCE, of the Examiner, says it is a broadly conceived spectacle dealing with problems which all the world must face. Miss Phillips rises to tremendous heights.

HENRY DOUGHERTY, of the Express, says Allen Holubar has produced a wonderful picture which will be numbered among the truly great productions of the year.

The Greatest Love

UNIVERSAL Production

"The RIGHT TO HAPPINESS"

From the

California Theatre to Carl Laemmle

We wish to thank you for bestowing on our theatre the honor and privilege of giving "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS," the new Holubar-Phillips super-production, its world's premiere.

Never, during the entire time the California has been in existence, have we had so many voluntary expressions of unqualified commendation from our patrons.

For the entire engagement, from the opening matinee to the closing night, we had throngs of eager patrons lined in front of our box offices and entrances, and the gross receipts of the week's business exceeded our greatest expectations.

I consider the work of Dorothy Phillips in the role of SONIA, the girl of the tenements, absolutely the most artistic piece of emotional acting given to the screen this year, and I want to congratulate the Universal on having in Miss Phillips, truly, a star of stars.

FRED A. MILLER

Story Ever Told

JEWEL
de Luxe

from Carl Laemmle to Allen Holubar

My dear Mr. Holubar:

In my years of experience as a moving picture Producer I have had the pleasure of viewing—and producing—many fine pictures.

And I have found that the truly great picture—the drama which lives longest in the memory and enjoys the widest popularity—is always and without a single exception founded on nobility in human character as expressed in love for mankind.

I think that, in "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS," you have created a picture which will live for many, many years to come. Certainly, there can be no nobler theme in any play, book or picture than that which you have here put upon the screen—and you have developed this theme with the talent of a Master. You have created not only the Picture of Today but the Picture of Tomorrow—the Picture of the Generation.

I tender Miss Phillips as well as yourself my thanks and my heartiest congratulations.

Unique Co-operation

for moving picture advertisers in Cleveland

Readers of Cleveland's First Newspaper are being persistently educated to "Shop First in the Plain Dealer" for latest movie developments, advertising and news features. Interest and confidence is inspired by frequent articles "selling" The PLAIN DEALER'S regular Photoplay Pages and Motion Picture Directory in the most and most influential homes in Cleveland and Northern Ohio, making PLAIN DEALER readers a sold-in-advance audience.

No other paper in this territory of 2,800,000 movie prospects is doing so much to further photoplay interest. No other is needed to reach Cleveland and environs.

"Shop First" movie talks are only one angle of the PLAIN DEALER'S many-sided co-operation to moving picture advertisers equalled by no other metropolitan newspaper. Let us give you details, produce evidence that proves these claims. Ask your advertising agent or wire for special representative.

Let these Stills' small voice tell you about

Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum"

Silk pajamas, a millionaire granddad, a bad temper and nine timid servants belonged to Amy.

Amy's granddad often told her that all the money on Wall Street couldn't buy an interest in her love.

Amy's only torture was her schooling—and she didn't let this affect her young life.

Amy came here, to this street, especially built for "The Hoodlum," at a cost of $20,000.

She broke friendship with her granddad because her father wanted atmosphere for his sociological book.

She soon forgot about silk lingerie, donned an apron, shaved the spuds, boiled java and seasoned cabbage.

A "First National" Attraction

You'll probably think our salesmen have gone crazy if you try to book this before it has its first run in your territory

Instead of rolling her eyes at Fifth Avenue lounge lizards she learned to roll craps with Dish Lowry.

Manhattan's anti-crap law resulted in a slide down a coal-chute; novel touch of Director Franklin's.

"Gawd," said Amy. "Look at them rats." She could hear the blue-coats coming.

Amy felt she was in for a vacation on the beautiful island of Blackwell.

Luck was with her. She hid under an unknown coat-tail while the cop invented new cuss words.

"This guy's got heavy dough," Amy told Dish Lowry. "We'll have to frame him for a crap game."

A "First National" Attraction

Better Wait! Watch it with an audience first

We think it the greatest character study of Miss Pickford's career

Amy felt as petered-out as a boarding house prune-bowl.

To Hurdy-Gurdy jazz, Amy twisted her hips and other things in shaking the shimmie with Dish Lowry.

Madgie Maloney didn't speak French but she taught Amy many things a young girl ought to know.

At six o'clock the Moe Isaacs family started off a penetrating fried-onion barrage.

This thug made Isaacs and Maloney fight on the same side for once. Amy paid him six bits.

The tenement baby was sweet; but it didn't have any manners. More work for the suit-cleaner.

A "First National" Attraction

Rich girl, poor girl, gambler girl, thief—all Mary Pickford parts

"The Hoodlum" was directed by a man by the name of Franklin—initials, S. A.
The photographer—Chas. Rosher. Yes, same man shot "Daddy Long Legs"

Then came her understanding—that Love is the only luxury granted to the poor.

Amy didn't know she was telling her troubles to her own rich granddad who she thought was in Europe.

Midnight—robbing her granddad's home to secure papers to vindicate her tenement Romeo.

Caught red-handed! Pistols leveled at her and her fiance. And her granddad in Europe!

Her granddad watched the detectives remove the bracelets.

And Amy, with her father, came back to former luxury—broadened, ennobled and more beloved.

A "First National" Attraction

Yes, They Live and Breathe

Mutt and Jeff are actual men who are screened by modesty

From all parts of the world William Fox has received communications asking if MUTT and JEFF are really living persons or FICTITIOUS characters.

Believing YOU, as a READER of this paper, are entitled to the frank TRUTH regarding Capt. Bud Fisher's best friends, we will REVEAL a SECRET.

Mr. Mutt in everyday life is Archibald J. Mutt. He is a BOILER MAKER, 43 years old, with the slight affliction of Rheumatism. He LIVES at 427 Piccolo Avenue, The Bronx. Mr. Mutt is employed by the New York Central Railroad, and in the recent strike was spokesman for the Nut department of the boiler division. Mr. Mutt has TEN children and ONE wife. He pays $17 a month RENT and takes a Turkish BATH every four calendar WEEKS. Among his FADS are having his shoes SHINED and having his hair CUT on each Friday falling on the 13th.

As for Jeff, he is Edgar Horace Jeff. He is 51 years old, TIMID and BASHFUL, and through years of faithful SERVICE as a tender of bar, his only physical AFFLICTIONS are small corns and LARGE bunions. In his dancing shoes he measures 4 feet 10 inches.

THE MEASUREMENTS

	MR. MUTT	MR. JEFF
Height	6 ft. 6 in.	4 ft. 10 in.
Weight	118 lbs.	118 1-2 lbs.
Chest	22 inches	49 inches
Hat Size	6 7-8	7 3-8

Mr. Jeff, an advocate of the Rooseveltian theory, is directly RESPONSIBLE for a family of 12 children, but, UNFORTUNATELY, he is a WIDOWER.

In the best social circles of the Bronx, it is ASSERTED that Mr. Jeff is engaged to marry the FASCINATING widow, Mrs. Katrinka Kaltenblatz, who is the happy mother of 8 children, all living.

Mrs. Kaltenblatz presides over one of the most ATTRACTIVE delicatessen shops in the Bronx, the AROMA of which RIVALS that of the CELEBRATED perfume factories of France. Recently this social leader broke her RIGHT arm while HANGING out the family wash. She fell THREE stories.

Capt. Fisher advises that Mr. Mutt and Mr. Jeff have both received MEDALS for having SHOT a film salesman after a DESPERATE encounter.

Mr. Jeff RESIDES at 1474 Unconscious Avenue, The Bronx, a HOME he selected because it was near the Pinochle parlor at 2555 Webster Avenue, where nightly he PLAYS for modest stakes with Mr. Mutt, on which FREQUENT occasions he is usually OUT of luck.

Always are they Captain Fisher's guests.

It is of interest to KNOW that Capt. Bud Fisher first met Mutt and Jeff at the UNITED FIREMEN'S BALL, in Canarsie, where they were RIVALS for dancing HONORS.

We must ADD that Mr. Mutt and Mr. Jeff are BOTH very SERIOUS men.

They live their lives QUIETLY but with SPEED.

They are CAREFUL, saving, and yet generous and none may say they ever denied ASSISTANCE to a needy FRIEND.

If YOU, as a reader of THIS newspaper, desire more information regarding these INTERESTING gentlemen, you are invited to see them in their MASTERPIECES of comicosity.

The next releases at Fox Exchanges of Mutt and Jeff cartoons are "Sound Your A," "The Frozen North," "Hard Lions," "All That Glitters Is Not," "Everybody's Doing It," "Mutt and Jeff in Spain," "Honest Booking Agents," "New York Night Life," "Bound In Spaghetti," "In the Movies," "Window Cleaners," "Confessions of a Telephone Girl," "The Plumbers."

Better Times

A Brentwood Picture
Directed by King W. Vidor Creator of
"The Turn in the Road"

Joy! Joy! Joy!

With laughter and life in every scene the latest Brentwood picture is sweeping the country as did "The Turn In the Road."

Happy at start and finish the audience never worries about the turrible villyun. A sweet, clean picture without a single forehead wrinkling moment.

"ONE of the best pictures produced in several months."

"They will like this picture so much that they will continue coming."
—Tom Hamlin, Motion Picture News.

"It has what many of the current offerings lack, sincerity, and genuine appeal.

"Mr. Vidor's direction is distinctive, it is untheatrical and it is natural."

Theatre Changes Policy to Get GOLDWYN PICTURES

Signed Year's Output

Full Week Runs

Excellent Advertising-Delivering the Goods

C. W. Midgley, manager of the AMERICAN THEATRE, Oakland, Cal., the most important house in that section of the country, has written a letter. It is so emphatic and makes such extraordinary statements, that it is being passed on to the other exhibitors of the nation. Here is what Mr. Midgley wrote:

Dear Mr. Goldwyn:

We have reviewed the first four of the new productions and desire to congratulate you. We are so enthusiastic over the showing you have made that we are signing up for the entire year's output. We are changing our policy from three and four day to full week runs on every production. You have, through your excellent advertising and the actual delivery of the goods, raised our enthusiasm to the highest pitch, and have sold us. Now it is up to us to sell the wonderful product to the public.

(Signed) C. W. Midgley,
American Theatre,
Oakland, Cal.

OUT OF THE INKWELL

In some of the past Bray Pictographs, we did a little experimenting with a brand new super-animated cartoon.

We wanted to see how the public liked it. We wanted to see if they liked it as well as we did.

They did.

Already "Out of the Ink-well" by Max Fleischer, is the classic of animated cartoons. For humor, surprises, delicacy and accuracy of action, nothing has ever approached this feature.

The little clown who grows right before your eyes out of the pen point and then shrivels up and flows back—just drops of ink, is known from Coast to Coast.

He is going on with many new tricks, inspired by the genius of his creator and aided and abetted by the staff of Bray idea men

If you have not yet realized the unusual features of this greater short-reeler, think of all that is being given in concentrated, crystallized form, weekly.

In addition to the animated cartoon, comes shortly, the world's first colored cartoon. (Bray is always the first in every improvement of short-reelers.)

Scenics Beautiful

Produced By Robert C. Bruce

"Scenic Succotash"
A copyright recipe for making a scenic picture from the "left-overs" of a season's scenic shooting.

"The Lonesome Pup"
The Great Dane left to shift for himself through the hills and valleys of the California mountains.

"Frozen Thrills"
The man who longed for heart palpitation and the story of his little adventure that resulted in a chilly finish.

"The Pale Pack Train"
The summer wanderings of two men, five white horses and a dog and a half, in the mountains of Oregon.

"Men Met in the Mountains"
Acquaintances who are met by one who elects to spend his life in Nature's silent places. A Close-up of the "packer."

"Sundown"
The most colorful of Nature's paintings—mountain, lake, river and ocean—photographed into the setting sun.

"Separate Trails"
The loneliness of a man who thought he had lost his dog—magnificent scenery and interesting story.

"Horizon Hunters"
The beckoning phantom of the horizon—always insisting that something "just over the ridge" must be seen.

It is never necessary to exaggerate the quality of the Robert C. Bruce Scenics. Every picture is backed with the experience and knowledge gained in the production of EIGHTY successful Bruce attractions. And, we know that our leadership can only be maintained by a constant effort that will make each new Bruce series better than any that have gone before.

Big Pictures

¶This will be a year of big pictures.

Production is aiming at a high level.

This is clearly indicated in a considerable number of notable pictures lately finished and which will have had their premieres this month; many ambitious productions are under way and projected; important purchases of books and plays have been made; the leading author is prominent in picture production as never before; whereas in the previous years a few directors stood out sharply by reason of the excellence of their work, today there are many who are evidencing skill and sincerity.

All this has come about with considerable of a jump.

The answer, of course, is organization; picture making organization has rapidly advanced in response to a public demand for better pictures.

But at any rate the notable picture is here—on a general scale; and the situation will distinguish this year in picture history.

It will have a pronounced effect upon trade conditions.

In the first place it means longer runs: not merely that, it means a quick and considerable extension in runs.

We are told, in the case of a prominent star, that booking contracts show a doubling of runs this year over last. In two years the sales manager of this concern predicts that runs, on this star's pictures, will be trebled.

This is an extreme situation. But there are several stars quite as prominent whose present plane of production is just as high. And there will be many pictures without prominent stars whose story interest and general excellence will place them upon the same box-office level.

Longer runs encourage longer runs. And, all in all, it is reasonable to decide that all feature pictures this year will have a proportionate advance in length of run never approached in any previous year.

Here is a most significant situation for every producer, distributor and exhibitor to consider well.

Fewer pictures result in better pictures and better pictures in longer runs. And the circle continues. Longer runs result in fewer pictures, and call for better pictures.

So the longer run situation, this coming season, will have a marked effect in (1), quantity of production; (2), quality of production; (3), rental prices—indeed, upon the whole economic structure of the industry.

We should not, however, base this longer run situation upon past conditions, even upon last year's conditions.

In the first place a large number of new theatres have been built or are fast approaching completion. We are fully aware of this fact and we must also be aware that this large string of big and magnificent houses will prove a new factor in the business. They have large seating capacities. Their music and comfort will appeal to the highest class of audiences. They therefore demand notable productions—the inferior feature will not do at all. And they also demand longer runs.

To keep their seats filled they will have to advertise extensively. And this introduces another factor this year; in addition to big pictures and big theatres, we shall have big exploitation.

This will be a year of big exploitation.

There will be several producer campaigns upon a national scale. Exhibitors will use larger space. The notable picture will get an immediate response from the newspaper; photoplay departments will be increased and improved; in this connection we shall probably see new publishing developments.

So we shall have, this year, more seats, but especially more seats for the higher class audiences; and we shall have a greater and better public; and increased advertising will greatly increase attendance.

* * * * *

The New Theatre

¶A theatre now under construction in a city of 440,000, and where the present theatres have the leading services tied up, writes and asks if, in our opinion, there will be enough independent pictures this year? Will they be of a quality that will make the new theatre hold its own in the face of such competition?

Yes, we are confident there will be enough such pictures—more this year than ever before.

We suggest the foregoing editorial as an answer to the theatre.

And, furthermore, we believe that this new theatre cannot only hold its own, but stir the others up considerably—provided it knows how to advertise.

We believe that this advertising equipment is quite as important to any theatre as the booking question. That was proven last year. Advertising will be even a greater factor this year.

* * * * *

Labor and Motion Pictures

¶At a meeting of the producers and distributors branches of the National Association of the industry, held on August 6th, a resolution was passed and made public which has since been construed by labor leaders as an affront to organized labor.

If the Actors' Equity Association is a labor organization; if the American Federation of Labor may consider the Actors' Equity Association a unit of labor organization then, we regret to say, the resolution could easily be so construed.

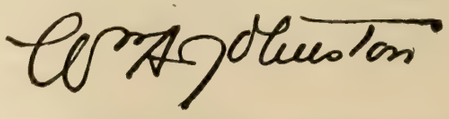
However, we are equally certain that, in forming and passing the resolution, the producers and distributors branches had no such intention whatsoever. And we are greatly in hopes that they will see their way clear to set themselves and the whole industry straight in the matter.

The actors' strike was not our quarrel. It is still not our quarrel; and it must remain not our quarrel. This, briefly, is the deep-seated conviction of the industry at large.

Photoplay producers and actors have had no part in the bitterness of feeling back of the strike, which feeling has been growing for years. On the contrary, their mutual relations have been pleasant and satisfactory. Their contracts are different from stage contracts. Photoplay actors are excluded from the Actors' Equity Association, except those from the stage.

In other words, we are simply a neighbor looking over the fence. We know nothing of the reasons for and ramifications of the quarrel going on, and we want no part in it, whatsoever. We have other and even greater issues before us. No matter what invitations are extended to us, no matter what immediate temptations may prevail, the motion picture industry, its producers, distributors, its army of exhibitors and operators—with their huge aggregate investment, machinery and responsibility want and most seriously want to keep hands off.

There can be no inducement, there must be none, greater than the welfare of the whole industry in the face of so serious a menace.



Dealing in Personalities

AS we go to press it appears that exhibitors will not have to get in line with a strike against the Daylight Savings measure which has been keeping countless dimes away from the box office. The House of Representatives has overridden the veto of President Wilson for the repeal of the bill, and it now remains for every thinking exhibitor to concentrate his efforts upon the Senate and by wire and letter advise them that the measure has had a disastrous effect upon business in the picture theatres.

"Personalities" would like to give credit to many individuals in the industry for their work in trying to get the bill repealed, but a list of the names would require more space than we have here. But you know we mean YOU.

And while on the subject—how about the tax repeal thing? Frank Rembusch is hard at work convincing communities that the picture did as much, and more, to win the war than did ice cream, still the soda tax was repealed.

Heard at the convention in Richmond August 14: "If the price of film goes up, my theatre shuts up." The speaker was "most any exhibitor present." But that wasn't all that was heard at the meeting. You can't afford to miss a word of the story carried in this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

NEW YORK and "Personalities" were hosts last week to a real honest-to-goodness pioneer exhibitor-manager. Theodore L. Hays, manager of the New Garrick and New Liberty theatres in St. Paul, dropped in on film row, incidentally calling on various of the producers. Sixteen years ago Hays was trying to convince some of the wise ones that pictures were here to stay, but they insisted the celluloid drama was but a passing craze. Which was right? At present the live-wire manager is giving the music publishers who want to keep exhibitors from using copyrighted music a run for their money. The fight against this evil is reported as aggressive and successful in the Twin Cities. This has not improved the friendship between the towns.

"Personalities" pauses in its mad rush through life to express deep regret at the death of James E. McBride, the Fox executive. He will be missed.

OUR Exhibitors' Service Bureau approves the following: A. G. Talbot, owner and general manager of the America theatre at Denver, Colo., the mile-high place, has been making a tour of mountain and coast cities in view of seeing what other exhibitors are doing that he may improve the program at his house. The theatre, by the way, has the slogan of "See America First." Manager Talbot concluded his trip with a three-day stay in Los Angeles, and is of the opinion that Coast theatres, collectively are superior to those found in any other section of the country. Prior to this most recent trip, Mr. Talbot made a tour of the East and Central West, and came to this conclusion: the five finest theatres in this country are Grauman's, Los Angeles; Circle, Indianapolis; California, San Francisco; Rialto and Strand, New York. Mr. Talbot places them in the above order with respect to beauty, convenience and program.

Poor New York.

Mr. Talbot, and other exhibitors, may be interested in the announcement that the new Moss theatre, in New York, is to have runways instead of stairways, up which an auto can be driven to the topmost seat in the house. Suppose the architect saw to it that the doors are made wide enough to admit the automobiles.

HAVE you heard the news? No, we know you have not, because you haven't read this issue yet. But Universal is planning to send a company to China under the supervision of Henry McRea. The expedition is scheduled to start September 18, and will have Harlan Tucker and Marie Walcamp as star players.

The kind of productions to be made has not been announced. Look for it in MOTION PICTURE NEWS later.

Here are five champions in one snapshot. They are the Honor Month lads who won the Pathe week-on-Broadway campaign, and were guests of the Home Office amid the dazzling Mazdas. They answer to the names of Harry Taylor, Kansas City; H. R. Calloway, Cincinnati; D. C. Stearns, Cleveland; March Wood, Oklahoma City, and Jack Auslet, New Orleans.

ACTIVITIES in the industry during the past week continued to keep things going at the usual fall pace. As we went to press with this issue a great batch of red-hot briefs sailed in, and you will find them in the regular news columns.

In addition to that Jack Pickford is transferring his wardrobe to the Goldwyn lot.

Then there were two blazing exhibitors' meetings — one in Ohio and the other in Virginia.

Cecil B. DeMille, of Famous Players-Lasky, has offered 50,000 francs to the Hungarian Government in Budapest for the crown of St. Stephen. The director wants it to place it with his large collection of trophies. Pete Smith looks upon it as a rare piece of theatrical property. So there you are.

DR. Hugo Reisenfeld, who a short time ago ceased wielding the baton at the Rialto theatre, save on special occasions, to become director of both the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, has found time in the midst of his numerous and various duties to sign a contract with Stewart & Morrison to write the score of a new musical comedy which they place in rehearsal shortly. The book of the said comedy is by Harry B. Smith.

This is the second musical play which Dr. Reisenfeld has written the music for,

Just as we send the week's issue to the press-room a 'phone jingle informs us that Argus Enterprises, Inc., has secured a lease on the Gaiety theatre, that well-known Broadway house, in which to run "The House Without Children." The opening is August 24 and the run for two weeks.

W. RAY JOHNSTON, treasurer of the Arrow Film Corporation, is putting in the summer to advantage. He has gone to the Adirondacks to supervise the finishing of the first two Blazed Trail productions produced by J. L. Russell. Incidentally, Mr. Johnston will endeavor to annex a vacation while in the mountains.

In the meantime, the publicity representative in New York is paving the way by circulating the news that the Royal Northwest Mounted Police figure prominently in the pictures, and that their bright red coats offer a "pleasing background for the scenes that are unusually vivid."

J. L. Johnston, advertising director of Finkelstein and Ruben theatres, at Minneapolis, is coming back to normal following the birth of a son to himself and wife. He writes "Personalities" that the offspring weighed in at 7 1/2 pounds at the ringside, but we are inclined to think that in the excitement the keys of the typewriter got tangled up and boosted the little chap's weight by several pounds. Congrat's, old top!

ANNOUNCEMENT

MOTION PICTURE NEWS announces that effective immediately, this publication will accept no advertising relative to motion pictures which aim to be sex hygiene propaganda.

This publication believes, in accord with the policy of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, that motion pictures of this type are not fit subject matter for exhibition in motion picture theatres under customary conditions and before mixed audiences.

Films As a Prohibition Aid

Claim Made That Grog Shops Were Already Becoming Groggy from Competition-Blows Both Right and Left

By William Fox

President of the Fox Film Corporation, New York

HOW will prohibition effect motion pictures?

Will the pictures be the one medium through which America will be brought to resign itself to total abstinence?

These two questions have been asked by persons in all walks of life before and since July 1, and the topic continues to occupy a heavy share of the day's conversations throughout the United States.

We are entitled to get straight on our facts before we answer any questions. Therefore, let us go back a little way into history.

We know definitely that rum was invented or concocted by man prior to the days of Noah and the ark, and we must reach back into the earlier periods of civilization, possibly into the days of barbarism, to find the reason for its having been called into existence as the good-little, bad-little brother of mankind.

It is my absolute opinion that rum was invented by man as a stimulant to help him over the rough or depressed places in his daily life.

You could call it an invention for entertainment or diversion if you wished to, but its use throughout the ages has been more as a relief from sorrow or care or worry than as a means of amusement. I do not refer to wine, but to strong liquors, for it was the heavy use of strong liquors that brought the prohibition movement into prominence.

The idea of prohibition began through the abuse rather than the use of liquors. There was a time when in all walks of life, religious and secular, military and civil, in the mansion and in the cottage, liquor was just as much a part of the daily life as any article of food. In America the use of strong liquors became widespread because Americans always go in heartily for anything they do.

Then there grew up the American saloon, an institution which became a political centre. It was different from the drinking places of other parts of the world, which in most instances had food attachments or were housed in the inns and small hotels. It was in these highly polished, well-mirrored, brass-railed places that the American man began to indulge more and more in heavy drinking. They were so conveniently located that in the big cities a man rarely had to walk more than half a block in any direction before reaching a sorrow service station.

It is not my purpose to discuss in detail the long fight that resulted in the Federal prohibition amendment; the facts are pretty well known already to the American public. But I do purpose to make certain observations which have to do with the future as well as with the past. They bear directly on the question of amusement on the one hand and relief from care and sorrow on the other.

I have noted that a man who sold liquor rarely drank it himself, and that the development of the drinking habit came to a man, when in time of trouble, he had need of his every faculty to overcome the obstacles that confronted him. At such time he would resort to a stimulant which stupified his brain and got him in new trouble, instead of keeping clear-headed so that he might solve his problems and see a way out of his difficulties.

A very interesting fact is the natural decline in the popularity of liquor for general use in this country. Slowly but surely the people themselves were realizing that they had a greater and safer friend than liquor, and that this friend was the motion pictures. They were discarding liquor for the screen, and it is my fixed opinion that, even without a prohibition law, liquor would have been obsolete ten years hence.

The greatest factor in the fight against liquor has been the motion picture. Men who had developed the habit of drinking for lack of something better to do discovered that, for less money than they would spend in one evening by themselves in the saloon, they could go to a motion-picture theatre and entertain themselves and their families at least twice a week. Ten years ago the most convenient and popular pastime for those who had nothing to do in the evening was liquor drinking, but since the establishment of motion-picture theatres in every city, town, village, and hamlet in the country, with the price of admission no greater than the price of a drink, it was only natural that the drinking public drifted away from the saloon to the newer, cleaner, more healthful entertainment, which did not deaden the brain, but, instead, amused and refreshed them. In the motion-picture theatre they forgot their troubles, they lost their worries, they were mentally comforted—and without any evil after effects.

Once the people began to go to motion pictures their thinking powers were stimulated, and when they began to think seriously and with clear heads they continued the amusements which were uplifting, educating and tremendously entertaining.

When Panic is Not Panic

Saving an Audience from Itself When Danger Threatens to Upset All Reason

PANIC in the Mars theatre, a neighborhood house of Cincinnati, Ohio, threatened when the lobby of that house recently caved in under the weight of several score of theatergoers who had assembled to see "Daddy Long Legs," Mary Pickford's initial First National Exhibitors' Circuit release, was cleverly averted by the presence of mind of Mrs. Louise Smith, ticket-taker.

Refusing to allow the horrifying thought that twenty-five persons were helpless in a mass of concrete, splintered wood, electric fixtures and other debris, Mrs. Smith made a bolt for the inside of the house as soon as she heard the crash and felt the accompanying clatter of crushed cement.

A news weekly was being shown when Mrs. Smith arrived inside the theatre. About two hundred of the audience had left their seats and were crowding each other in an effort to get to the door. Risking personal injury Mrs. Smith blocked the main exit and shouted in a loud voice:

"Keep your seats," she shouted. "There is no danger."

She then ordered the operator to quash the news weekly and immediately begin Mary Pickford's "Daddy Long Legs." Sensing the emergency of the occasion the operator speeded through with the introductory scenes knowing that once the picture was started the audience would become interested.

Mrs. Smith supervised the removal of about twenty-five injured persons to hospitals and drug stores, following her order that the orchestra and organ of the Mars should play the merriest music possible.

Mrs. Smith's conduct excited the admiration of various city editors of Cincinnati newspapers. She was termed a "heroic employee" by the Cincinnati post.

NAMES ITS DIRECTORS

Heaney, H. E. Newell, I. E. Berkson, Andrew Karzas, Louis Marks, Frank M. Teter, Ludwig Schindler, John Bobeng, Arthur Schoenstadt, J. Abrams.

An Unusual Yell From the Southland

When Do You Do an Exhibitor a Favor? Read the Story and Figure It Out Yourself

BY AN ATLANTA REPORTER

Who Happened to Be an Eye and Ear Witness to a New Kind of Complaint in the Industry

"YOU didn't charge me enough for that feature I played yesterday. You cost me at least $200 in profits because you booked it to me for $6 when it was worth every cent of $50. Yes, and more than that, it was worth $50 a day for two days, instead of a measly $6 for one day. When are you fellows going to wake up and discover that you've got productions, not footage, to sell to exhibitors?"

In type the foregoing may lack much of the fire and anger in the tones of the exhibitor who shouted it at an Atlanta exchangeman last week. He was a small town theatre owner, catering to the five cent class of patronage. His house seats four hundred and ten people. Ordinarily, according to those who know him well, he is a quiet peaceable sort of chap, content to take things pretty much as they come.

But on this occasion he was mad from the crown of his faded derby to the soles of a pair of new oxfords. His face was a choleric red; his eyes fairly popping in fury, and the chin, smooth shaven, shot out far enough to give it a deformed appearance.

"You charge me $15 and $20 for features that are not worth half of that. Still, when I came in here two weeks ago," he was yelling now, "to book up a dozen you suddenly become charitable and tell me that you'll throw in another one for $6. You didn't tell me a damned word about the story. And the title of it made me doubt then whether it was really worth $6. I had a hunch that perhaps I was getting stung, but it's happened so often before, the same way, that the callous is getting pretty thick now."

"BUT why raise the devil with me. You got your money's worth," retorted the exchange manager. It was a dizzy experience to have an exhibitor actually angry because he had not been compelled to pay enough for a feature. The manager was not at all certain that it wasn't a weird sort of dream and that he would wake up directly to find—well, he didn't know what.

"Why shouldn't I raise the devil with you. Your boneheadedness cost me that $200. Who will I blame for it—the druggist on the corner? You ought to be fired on the spot!"

"Just a moment," interrupted the exchange manager. "You're not running this office, nor are you my boss. I intended to do you a little favor. You were paying a little more than you usually offer for the twelve features you booked two weeks ago, and I figured that it might encourage you a bit if I gave you one picture at less than half of what you were paying for each of the others."

"Never mind the alibis," snapped the exhibitor, whose high pitched voice by now had attracted two more exhibitors who were out in the booker's office. "I'm here to tell you that you have cost me $200 and, on top of that, you've made a sucker out of me with my patrons. You know the class of people that come to my house. I've told you often enough. They like the melodramatic stuff, ala serial style, with lots of quick action, gun play and the like. What happens?

"I give you my date for the first of the twelve, and I boost the price to ten cents. It's fair film, but it wasn't worth ten cents to my crowd. I got several kicks after each show. Four days ago I played the second one on the list at ten cents, and they kicked again. The second one was about on a par with the first.

"I BEGAN to figure that I had to do something to satisfy them and make good, so I decided to run the $6 feature at five cents. You couldn't tell me a thing about the story of that picture, any more than you could one of the other twelve. The title didn't give me an inkling of what was in the film. You said your supply of press sheets was exhausted; the slides were very mysterious in keeping secret any facts, and the heralds and posters were not a bit more informative.

"And this is what happened: The first matinee audience, about half a house, went wild over that picture. It was a bearcat. Action, melodrama, several great thrills, a darned good looking leading woman—everything my folks get hopped up about. Why, darn your officious soul, that film was worth at least two days in my house at twenty-five cents a throw. I could have gotten it easy. There wouldn't have been a kick from any one.

"But what chance did you give me to figure out its value? None. I took it deaf, dumb and blindfolded. If you knew your own product you could have told me something about the story, and you would have known, from what I have said before, that it was ideally suited to my patrons. With this dope from you I wouldn't have argued long before agreeing to pay you $50 a day for two days. And that price would have made me go out and advertise my head off to put it over.

"BUT no! You lose $94 and I am out at least $200. And there's something even worse than that for me. Through your lack of interest and your failure to be interested enough in the proposition to tip me off to a live one, I've given my crowd a twenty-five cent show for a nickle. What happens? The next time I boost the price it has got to be an mighty exceptional picture to warrant it. They won't forget this one in a hurry. And unless it is a lot better they'll say I'm trying to sting them. Oh, what's the use? I'm just a hick exhibitor trying to make little more than a living with stone wall stupidity here and in other exchanges to help me succeed."

"Well, if you are through with your speech I'll say something," declared the branch manager. His voice had no note of authority or uppishness in it. He was obviously disgruntled. "I do not want to knock the home office, because they are a good crowd and mean well. The title of that particular picture puzzled me. It didn't indicate a jitney's worth about the story. So I dug out a press sheet from the first lot that came in. I read the synopsis. Still it didn't warm me up to any chances. So I'll have to admit that I missed a good bet for the office here and for you."

"Well, you may admit it but that doesn't help me any. Theatres are like people. They have an individuality created by their audiences. Some audiences like certain pictures, other audiences prefer still other varieties of entertainment. Why the dickens don't you fellows in the exchange find out from the exhibitors what kind of stuff they prefer. I'll bet you don't see half of the film that is shipped to you for booking.

"MAYBE I am only a small town exhibitor, but believe me, I know it now, if I didn't before, that one reason why we are not making more money than we do is because we never know more than half of what we should know about the pictures we book. making more money than we do is because we never know more than half of what we should know about the pictures we book. The big first run accounts get the press sheets and all of the so-called exhibitor helps. When the prints get down to sixty, ninety and one hundred and twenty days, we're lucky if the posters will give us more than two varieties.

"I'm going now, before I get mad all over again. But think about this until you see me again:

"If the small town fellows, like myself, had more cooperation and could learn more about productions than the rental prices lead us to suppose, we perhaps could make more money, build larger theatres, and become thirty day accounts instead of sixty and ninety day buyers."

And the exhibitor went his way.

Introducing More Live Exhibitors!

They Make the Wheels of the Industry Spin Round and Round

ANOTHER woman exhibitor, Mrs. A. M. Harris, manager of the Orpheum and Family theatres of Elkhart, Indiana, is with us this week. Mrs. Harris is one of the few women in that state having complete charge of motion picture theatres.

The Orpheum was originally built as a vaudeville house, went on the rocks through a small time policy and when Mrs. Harris took charge she had real things to accomplish. Thorough remodeling and installation of the best orchestra obtainable were her first moves. A strong and continued advertising campaign followed, and as a result the Orpheum is now among the most popular of picture houses.

One popular feature of the house is a miniature nursery where the youngsters are soothed while their elders enjoy the show.

J. W. HOUCK, until lately manager of the Liberty Theatre, [illegible] largest picture house, with a capacity of 1,800, has resigned to take charge of a Pathe exchange in Montana.

Mr. Houck opened the Liberty after it had been closed by the influenza epidemic last year and since that time the business has grown rapidly, all records having gone by the board during the past season. The highest class attractions that it is possible to obtain are run at the Liberty, the motto there being good pictures above all else.

He came to Spokane from Seattle where he was with F. P.-Lasky and is one of the youngest managers in the business. On leaving Spokane brother exhibitors wish him the best of luck in his new affiliation.

RAYMOND PEART is managing the Colonial theatre, at Gillespie, Illinois. The seating capacity of the house is about a thousand. Mr. Peart came from Gardner, Illinois, where he had experience managing two theatres, one in that city and one at South Wilmington, Ill.

When his parents purchased the Colonial, his first thought was to install good music, which he did by the purchase of a Reproduco pipe organ piano. The bigger special attractions play at the Colonial, while road shows and good vaudeville acts also find a place in the theatre.

"Of course I am a reader of the NEWS," he says, "and of course I find it useful in my work." Mr. Peart lays great stress on his advertising, and depends partly upon it for success.

WITH women now in business on an equal footing with men it is no surprise to find Mrs. J. W. Tanner prospering as proprietress of the Gem theatre of Filer, Idaho. Besides running her theatre, and running it well from all reports, Mrs. Tanner has followed the vocation of her late husband who was a newspaper man and politician, and delved into journalistic pursuits, but of late has closed out her newspaper interests and devotes her entire time to the management of the Gem, which she has conducted alone, and successfully, for the past five years.

MEET George Mowl, proprietor of the Popular Picture Palace of Skagway, Alaska, and who, having been a resident of the far Northern reaches for the past twenty years, is classified as a "sour-dough." We believe Mr. Mowl to date is the most "distant" member of the fraternity introduced.

Business was never better, he reports however, and as Mr. Mowl puts it, he used to find Nuggets, and now exhibits real live Nuggets on the screen.

Skagway, he says, is at present filled with tourists following the "See America First" maxim, thousands who had heretofore gone to Europe now giving Alaska the "once over" instead, searching for the Midnight Sun, that new theatre.

JACK DAGLE manages the Liberty in Murphysboro, Ill., and in addition has the reputation of being an excellent photographer. When three years ago he entered the show business he brought with him a motto "Show only the best pictures" and to the faithful fulfillment of this creed he attributes the standing the Liberty theatre has with the town folk.

Dagle declares he has no time to bother about his competitors, his own business keeping him occupied. He has plans ready for the construction of a new theatre.

B. H. MOONEY, familiarly known as "Kid" about Birmingham, Ala., where as manager of the Trianon, Rialto and Princess theatres he has a wide acquaintance, is a graduate of the newspaper school and therefore entitled to extra space.

Mr. Mooney is known as a live wire in a city which has "direct current," proof positive that his training in the newspaper field has stood him in good stead. He believes in advertising for the four theatres which are under his leadership and especially in newspaper advertising, and being alive to the value of printer's ink manages to lead the procession in exploitation for Birmingham.

It is needless to say that the Birmingham theatres under his control prosper and that Mr. Mooney has prospered with them.

J. S. GRIMES manages the Dream theatre at Corydon, Indiana, not the biggest city in the world, nor yet the best picture town according to a number of men who have tried to conquer it and failed. In fact that is the way Mr. Grimes happened to invade Corydon. The Dream was for sale because its manager needed the money to buy new trousers and Mr. Grimes purchased at a price and then just to show people "that Old Man Grimes isn't dead," he started out to let Corydon know that there was a picture house in town.

That he succeeded goes without saying. He has been on the job quite some time now and the sheriff hasn't been in to see him yet on a matter of official business.

COLD FACTS AND HOT SHOTS

Five Years Ago—

"Fewer and Better Pictures and No More Nickel Admissions" Slogan

DANIEL FROHMAN presents H. B. Warner in "The Lost Paradise," the world famous drama of capital and labor.

The Electric Film Company offers "War Is Hell" in four parts and natural colors.

Speculators have secured a large quantity of chemicals necessary to the manufacture of film. But the American producers declare that there are no secret processes in Germany in the manufacture of the necessary chemicals and that everything can be made right in the United States.

Many exhibitors are agitating for the existence of just one amalgamated state league of exhibitors in New York state instead of two warring factions.

The shortage of carbons in both the United States and Canada is giving grave cause for alarm among the exhibitors.

Fewer and better pictures is the unique slogan of producers. And the exhibitors are trying to popularize a ten cent admission charge instead of the customary nickel.

Los Angeles chief of police threatens segregation of sexes in motion picture theatres unless mashers' activities are quelled.

Isaac Silverman of Harrisburg, Pa. has defied the state censor board of Pennsylvania and declares that he will exhibit "The Drug Terror" in spite of them on the ground that this film feature teaches a great moral lesson.

Atlanta Georgia business men have formed the first motion picture producing company for motion pictures in that city. They announce that they will only make pictures costing ten thousand dollars.

Motion Picture Patents Company of New York has sued in Los Angeles the following concerns: Oz Film Company, Nash Motion Picture Company, Albuquerque Film Company, St. Louis Motion Picture Company and Bosworth, Inc. They allege infringement of patents by the use of a patented camera.

Considerable anxiety is felt for the safety of W. N. Selig of the Selig Polyscope Company who is in Europe making a tour of the Company's exchanges in London, Paris, Rome, Berlin and Moscow.

The Pennsylvania Censorship laws have just been declared valid and constitutional by Judge Martin of the Court of Common Pleas in Philadelphia. These laws were considered so drastic by exhibitors and producers that they had applied for injunctions against the State Board of Censors.

Immediately after the Court's decision in favor of the censor board in Pennsylvania, the chief censor declared that more stringent regulations would be enforced and that after September 1, all film entering that state must be seen and approved by the State Board.

The Charles L. Kiewert Company announces that exhibitors need have no fear but that they will have plenty of Bio carbons.

Pertinence and Poetry Pertly Put and Partly Pun

(As many representatives of the industry looked on life one year ago.)

There's a THING that shrieks over desolate fields, with a whistle shrill, intense;
O'er gaping holes in the sodden earth, thru crumbling
walls of carrion stench,
Careening far over the furrowed loam, to a resting place in blood and bone—
Another soul has gone home.

Home, where never bursting shell
Nor pat, pat, pat of machine-gun hell
May rouse the crimson stain.
Home, where never cannon's roar,
Nor deadly bayonet's thrust and score
Can ever matter again.

There were ships that sailed o'er the blue-green sea,
sheening with silvery strains,
Ships that faded in distant mist, bearing our hearts
while the clay remains,
A flutter of white from a distant swell, a last long glimpse over watery dell,
Then soft o'er the wind a murmur—Farewell.

Home, where all that is worth while
Is waiting twixt a tear and smile
For him across the sea.
Home, where love o'er shadows hate
Where joy awaits if so be Fate
Proclaims the world is Free.

GEORGE D. GOULD.

Not Playing the Game

Jesse L. Lasky Has Meaningful Message for Exhibitors Who Shorten Films

ON a previous occasion I was impelled by force of circumstances to inveigh against the pernicious habit on the part of some exhibitors of cutting certain parts of a motion picture feature so as to crowd a greater variety into their program. I pointed out at that time the evil of this procedure, and endeavored to show that there was no more fairness in this than there would be if a dealer in books cut out a number of the pages and sold the volumes to his customers as perfect copies.

But I have noticed another phase of the same thing which in a way is hardly less injurious or unfair.

Exhibitors who for one reason or another, generally for the purpose of shortening a feature so as to get in another reel of different character on their program, eliminate the main titles, the credit titles, etc., and start the picture with the first subtitle of the story, are not playing the game.

It may, at first thought, seem less detrimental to the photoplay if merely the introductory matter is removed, but one has only to reflect that by cutting these titles, the spectators are frequently left in the dark as to the names of characters, the very title of the play itself, the players, the director and others. They strive, through the first reel to get head or tail of the thing and lose much of the enjoyment. It is equivalent to seeing a stage drama without a program.

There is this, also, to be considered: The director of a picture in these days means much to the inveterate film patron. It would be surprising no doubt to know just how many people go to see a picture, not alone because of the star, the cast in general, or even the story—but because so-and-so has directed it. The author of the modern photoplay deserves the consideration of the exhibitor surely. To eliminate his name is to destroy one of the elements of appeal, particularly where the author is a noted one in literary, dramatic or photoplay circles. Indeed every name mentioned in the introductory titles is of importance, means something to somebody in the audience and sometimes a great deal to a great many.

Frequently there is an introductory title following the main title which gives a sort of argument or synopsis of the story, setting of the play, so to speak and in many cases this is indispensable to the proper understanding of the plot that follows.

Producers of pictures are in this day and age supposed to be capable of determining what is essential to a picture. They are not anxious to add unnecessary footage. In our own production for Paramount-Artcraft, we strive to eliminate everything that is not absolutely essential. Men and women who are experts devote their time and draw their salaries for the purpose of preparing accurate and succinct titles, etc.

Jack Pickford Is Signed by Goldwyn

Juvenile Player, Star in Own Right and Also Brother of Little Mary, Is Bound to Long Term Contract; Immediate Production

JACK PICKFORD, brother of Mary, and for a long time star in his own right, has signed a long term contract with Goldwyn Pictures. August 15, the player's birthday, marked the closing of the deal, linking his name with that of Geraldine Farrar, Madge Kennedy, Mable Normand, Will Rogers, Pauline Frederick, Tom Moore and other Goldwyn stars. He immediately left for the coast to begin production.

It is understood that various scripts are already under consideration for Pickford. Announcement of his first Goldwyn vehicle will shortly be forthcoming.

The terms of the contract and the exact length it will run were not contained in the announcement from Goldwyn.

Early Screen Start

Although only twenty-three, as stated, he has been a motion-picture actor for ten years while his complete histrionic experience dates almost from the time be began to lisp.

Ten years ago the then Jack Smith began to work for Biograph under the direction of D. W. Griffith, in the days when one-reelers were the sole productions of the industry. He was fortunate in his early associations, for Biograph at the time of his first connection was virtually a training-school which was to give to motion pictures many of their best-known lights in future days. Mabel Normand, also a Goldwyn star today; Owen Moore, Mack Sennett, Sister Mary and Mr. Griffith were some of the minor figures associated at the time in Biograph productions. Jack's first part was in an Indian mob scene, and he received five dollars for his work—good pay in those days.

His next adventure in his new field was when he went to Cuba to act in a production of which Tom Ince—then comparatively unknown—was director. He returned to the states to re-establish his connection with Biograph and from that time his progress was sure and steady. At the age of twenty-one he organized his own company and conducted it with success. But the business of being at once executive, director, and star was too much even for his energetic temperament.

Among the pictures which have helped to raise him to a popular and critical favorite "Seventeen," "Tom Sawyer," "Great Expectations," "The Dummy," "The Varmint" and "Freckles" stand out from a host. The material in all these pictures was peculiarly suitable to the gifts of their star. Mr. Pickford brings to the screen a juvenile presence seemingly unsophisticated. He has, however, a keen, intelligent perception of the characters he portrays and an understanding of the spontaneous, boyish spirit; and this quality united to his unusual juvenile presence makes him a valid interpreter of the heart of Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen" and Mark Twain's eternal boy.

State Right Buyers to Form Organization

Decision to hold a general meeting of state right buyers in New York in the near future, for the purpose of effecting a solid and substantial buying organization, was taken at an informal meeting held August 14 and attended by prominent state right men. Among those present were B. Amsterdam of Philadelphia, Harry Charnes of the Standard Film Service Co., Cleveland; Joe Friedman of Celebrated Players, Chicago; Nathan Hirsch, New York and Herman Rifkin, Boston.

Realart Establishes a Los Angeles Home

The Los Angeles home of the Realart program has been established in suite 839 of the Merchants National Bank Building, corner of Sixth and Spring streets, by General Sales Manager J. S. Woody, who has been in the city for the past week. This location is but a temporary one, and will serve this new program only until quarters can be secured on Film Row.

Fall River House Open

After having been closed for the summer, the Bijou, L. M. Boas, manager, in Fall River, has re-opened. The house was closed for extensive repairs.

HAMPTON CENTERS INTERESTS IN NEW COMPANY

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON has expanded his interests, forming a California corporation, "Federal Photoplays of California," as a producing organization for his various activities, including Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., and Great Authors Pictures, Inc. His entire producing organization has been moved to the West Coast.

Charles A. Weeks will remain in the East and conduct Mr. Hampton's Eastern office. In the West arrangements are going forward for added producing equipment, forces and more authors. Production will be continued at the Robert Brunton studios.

Associated with Mr. Hampton in his new organization are Eltinge F. Warner, publisher of Field and Stream, Smart Set, and other magazines, of New York; and Hewlings Mumper, Los Angeles attorney, who is a member of the Los Angeles firm of O'Melveny, Millikin, and Tuller.

Frohman Offices Prosperous

Annual Meeting Discloses Good Financial Condition; Policy Upheld

THE Annual Meeting of the stockholders of The Frohman Amusement Corporation was held at the office of the company on August thirteenth. Mr. William L. Sherrill was re-elected president and treasurer of the corporation, M. H. Scully of Chicago, vice-president, and Jesse J. Goldburg, secretary and general manager.

The report of operations for the year ending July 31st, was submitted by Mr. Sherrill to the stockholders. and revealed a most prosperous condition of affairs. The stockholders elected the following as members of the Board of Directors; William L. Sherrill, M. H. Scully of Chicago, Ill., William H. Burn of Chicago, C. S. Anderson of Hot Springs, Grover D. Edwards of Chicago, H. W. Davis of Wilmington, Del., and Jack Sherrill,.

Plans for enlarged operation were freely discussed, and Mr. Sherrill outlined in detail the scheme of the further activities of the corporation which includes for the year 1919-1920 the production and release of thirteen additional two reel Western productions, twenty-six comedies of either one or two reels, a serial of fifteen episodes and two special features of seven reels each. Mr. Sherrill at the conclusion of the meeting made the following statement for publication.

"Without in any sense attempting to detract from any other individual independent producing organization I feel that the statement will not be met with contradiction when I state that The Frohman Amusement Corporation is today the only consistent producer of independent or state right attractions, and I have been assured by numerous exchanges that they look to this organization for a steady supply of meritorious independent productions.

"Suffice it to say that so long as the hand of The Frohman Amusement Corporation is upheld by independent buyers, so long as the state right exchanges in the United States will through the acqusition of worth-while productions guarantee 100% distribution I shall, of course, ally myself with that medium of distribution."

Vivian M. Moses Leaves Select

Well-Known Publicist Joins Guy Empey; Favorably Known in Industry

VIVIAN M. MOSES, Publicity Director for Select Pictures Corporation since its organization, will leave that company shortly in order to associate himself with Guy Empey in the production of special pictures. Mr. Moses has handed his resignation to President Lewis J. Selznick, of Select, and, according to announcement just made will leave that company so as to join Empey by September 1st. He will immediately begin working upon a forthcoming production projected by Empey.

Moses started with Select on the day that new corporation opened its doors, in the summer of 1917. Taking under his charge publicity, advertising, and exhibitor's service, he built up a compact and efficient department which slowly expanded and grew. For the better part of two years Moses personally wrote and designed all the advertising put out by Select, wrote or inspired all the publicity, and directly handled the very large volume of correspondence and service to exhibitors and branch offices. He also took complete charge of the production of lithographs, selecting subjects and passing upon sketches.

Mr. Moses states that his association with Empey will be somewhat in the nature of a partnership, and will afford him the broadest scope for such abilities as he possesses. Not only will he takes managerial charge of the business and of the Empey productions, but he will also take part in the preparation and production of photoplays.

Virginians Decry the Increased Rentals

Convention at Ocean View See Suspension of Business as Result of Producers' Stand; Oppose N. A. M. P. I. Stand on Strike

THE spectre of increased prices on films loomed most important before the eyes of motion picture exhibitors of Virginia, North Carolina and Maryland, gathered in conference on the situation at Ocean View, Va., Aug. 13 and 14. This, together with discussion of the unrest created by the actors' strike, and its possible effect on the picture industry, occupied the exhibitors to the partial exclusion of other topics.

Resolutions against taxation and condemning the action of the N. A. M. P. I. in aligning themselves with the legitimate producers and managers' association in its fight against the Actors' Equity Association were passed unanimously.

High Prices a Bugaboo

"If the prices of films go up my theatre shuts up," declared one Virginia exhibitor, which consensus of opinion was expressed somewhat more elegantly but none the less emphatically in the following resolutions, unanimously passed :

"Resolved by the Virginia exhibitors, in assembly in convention at Ocean View, Virginia, August 13 and 14, 1919, said exhibitors representing practically ninety per cent of the theatres of the state of Virginia, and having received notices from various producers and distributors that prices in general are to be three or four times higher than at present, and preferring not to further increase our prices of admission,

"Resolved, that unless these demands are modified, we, the exhibitors of Virginia, will be forced in the near future either to close our theatres or deny the public those pictures on which prices may be advanced."

These resolutions were concurred in by exhibitors from North Carolina and from Maryland, who took occasion to gather at Ocean View with the Virginia exhibitors in response to an urgent invitation extended by Jake Wells, of Richmond, one of the directors of the Virginia association.

An unexpected development in the convention was a rumor to the effect that a movement is under way in the east and north to affiliate moving picture players with the Actors' Equity Association so that if the strike of players in the legitimate needed support the kings and queens of the movie world might come to their assistance by also striking in the studios.

Discussion of this possibility, caused the convention to adopt the following resolutions:

"We, the representatives of the motion picture theatres of North Carolina, Virginia, District of Columbia, Maryland and New Jersey, do hereby go on record as opposing the action of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which does not represent the motion picture theatres of this country in any manner or sense, in their aligning themselves with the producers and managers' association in their fight against the Actors' Equity Association."

The convention went on record as being opposed to the elimination of the C. O. D. privilege by film exchanges.

EXPRESS SERVICE FIGHT WON

AS a result of the conference held by members of the Transportation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with officials of the American Express Company in July, at which time certain questions were brought up for adjustment by the Express Company, a definite rectification has been made of one of the most important matters presented.

The case in point was the refusal of the Express Company in Atlanta to accept film shipments between 6 P. M. and midnight at the Terminal Warehouse. Agreement was reached through the efforts of a film committee whereby shipments of films would be accepted at any hour of the night and forwarded on first train available.

With this as a precedent it is expected prompt settlement will result in any future troubles.

CHEER FROM OHIO

REPORTS from Dayton, Ohio, announce that the convention of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, held last week, was the most largely attended ever held, and that many new members were added.

The New York organization was fully endorsed, and resolutions were passed opposing any organization controlled by the producers, distributors or "a trade paper." The Exhibitors' Creed, as published last week on Motion Picture News, was endorsed, as was also the co-operative booking plan.

Samuel I. Berman, executive secretary of the New York organization, made a worthy address on organization, which was roundly applauded.

Members of Congress from Ohio, West Virginia and Indiana were written by the exhibitors in regard to the repeal of the daylight savings law and of the war tax.

Finest Minneapolis Theatre

New House in Course of Construction by Ascher Bros. to Cost Over Million

BUILDING operations were begun last week upon the structure that promises for Minneapolis the most gorgeous motion picture theatre of the entire midwest section of the country. Ascher Brothers of Chicago will control the house.

Ground has been broken for the great million and a half dollar office structure planned for the 8th and Hennepin corner, that is to replace the familiar old T. R. Walker homestead and gallery for the famous Walker art collection that was recently given to the city of Minneapolis. In this building is to be housed the new theatre with 4,000 seating capacity, the cost of which, exclusive of its furnishings, will reach the half million dollar mark.

Aschers' Minneapolis theatre will be the city's beauty spot in architecture. It will follow the Spanish classic type. The building itself is to be of a warm tone Minneapolis granite, with a smooth polish, except at the theatre entrance. Here elaborate carved granite will be used to accentuate the theatre portion. This too will follow the classic style. Lobby and foyer will be finished in various colored marbles, covering in harmonious combinations the walls and floors.

Unique features, unique principally because of their ultra modernity, will mark the new house from foyer to stage. For most of them J. E. O. Pridmore, architect, is responsible.

Lighting is to be one of the most distinctive features of all. A new decorative lighting system, just perfected by Mr. Pridmore will be employed there for the first time. It is designed for the auditorium, and assures softer degrees and better distribution of light than has heretofore been accomplished. It makes possible a dissolvnig and blending of color on an increased elaborate scale.

Last Rites for J. E. MacBride

Journalist, Politician and Film Man Buried—Notables Attend the Funeral

THE funeral of James E. MacBride, Chairman of the Executive Committee of Fox Film Corporation, marked the passing of a man who numbered among his host of friends many of the most prominent men in New York.

The service, held at the Funeral Church, Broadway and Sixty-sixth Street, were attended by many city officials, representatives of New York newspapers, and other personal friends of the deceased.

Among those present who experienced a great loss with the death of Mr. MacBride were Mayor J. F. Hylan, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation; R. A. Walsh, the motion picture director, and his brother George Walsh, the Fox star; Arthur James, Director of Advertising for Fox; Justice Robert E. Wagner of the Supreme Court, John Tyrone Kelly, Justice Ewing, Martin Green, William Orr, George Henry Payne, Tax Commissioner; William Willis, Daniel Lyon, John J. Delaney of the Public Service Commission, Louis J. Lang, Maurice Deiches, Charles F. Hand, Axel Warn, James J. Montague, Frederick Norton, Patrick L. Francis, George Cook and Henry R. Heitman.

Mr. MacBride crowded many experiences into his thirty-eight years of life. He joined the Buffalo Courier when very young, came to New York when seventeen, and began his career as reporter on the American. Later he went back to Albany and was correspondent for many newspapers. He was brought back to New York by the American to act as City Hall and political reporter. He was active in many political campaigns, his last one being the management of John F. Hylan's campaign for the Mayoralty of New York. He resigned from the position of President of the Municipal Civil Service Commission to join Fox.

Last Warning on Cases

Chairman P. H. Stilson of the Transportation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry sends out a final warning to the trade that proper shipping cases must be secured and put in use by September 30th with absolutely no exceptions.

"This matter," said Mr. Stilson, "has been given all the publicity in my power. The specifications required for film cases by the Bureau of Explosives have been published and the trade informed that September 30th is the last date on which shipments under old rulings will be accepted. It is of the utmost importance that shippers bear this fact in mind and make preparations now to have on hand enough of the new cases for their needs."

Fine Outlook for West

J. C. Jossey, special representative of the Arrow Film Corporation, has returned to New York after an extended trip throughout the country lasting some eight weeks. Jossey visited St. Louis, Kansas City, Des Moines, Omaha, Chicago, Minneapolis, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit.

Educators Urge Teaching by Film Route

Campaign on to Replace Text-Books by Pictures and New Projection Machine Will Enable Showings Without Use of a Booth

REPLACEMENT of school text-books with motion pictures, long dreamed of by so-called "visionaries" of the industry, may become a reality as a result of a decision by noted educators of the East to inaugurate a detailed campaign toward this end. The decision followed a meeting last week with representatives of producers of educational films.

It was announced that arrangements have been made whereby this method of instruction will be installed in eighty per cent of the schools and universities of the country during the course of the campaign. The effort will be a sincere one and the facilities of a school textbook publishing house have been placed at the disposal of those in charge.

Lesson Visualization

Complete visualization of the contents of text-books heretofore absorbed by the student only after great mental effort and concentration, is part of the plan. Such "visature" will embrace geographical, scientific, economical and even mathematical subjects. There is not a branch of the average school or University work, it is declared, but that can be translated upon the screen in a more impressive manner than by means of the printed word.

Anatomical studies, historical themes and scientific subjects particularly lend themselves to the advantages of the screen. School executives are convinced that visualizing the relations of elements, rather than a digestion of them from the printed word, will leave them in the mind of the scholar with far more impressiveness and likelihood that they will be remembered, than by any other means.

One of the reasons for the inauguration of a school campaign is the recent development of a portable projection machine which meets all of the drastic requirements of fire underwriters in the various states. Motion pictures have long been considered as instructional media, but leaders in the film industry have held back until a suitable projector was developed.

Engineers and experts of a noted projection machine company after long conferences with A. Harry Levey, general manager of the educational department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, with whom supervision of the motion picture end of the campaign has been placed, have placed at the disposal of the schools a projection machine which can be used anywhere without the protection of a booth. The construction of booths, and the purchase of expensive apparatus proved hindrance that most schools found themselves unable to overcome.

The new projector, according to Mr Levey, is light, compact and fully as capable of projecting standard film as its larger brothers.

"Lack of a suitable projector has held back the progress of instructional motion pictures in the New York schools," declared William E. Grady, district superintendent of the New York Board of Education, when informed of the project. "Not more than thirty are now showing regular picture programs, and these follow no definite system."

Mr. Grady heartily approved the project, and promised his own support in the work among the New York schools. In outside cities, boards of education, educational committees of civic organizations, and other influences have been enlisted.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, is intensely interested in the project, and has given Mr. Levey and the others in charge of the campaign his heartiest support.

STRIKING WHEN HOT

POINTING to the response accorded him, George M. Fenburg manager of the Auditorium and Alhambra theatres, Newark, Ohio, urges exhibitors to write their Congressmen and Representatives at Washington.

William A. Ashbrook, chairman of the House Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures wrote Mr. Fenburg regarding repeal of sections 800, 906 and 1000 of the Revenue Bill as follows:

"I will be very glad to refer your letter to the Ways and Means Committee for its consideration. I assure you I will be very glad to give this measure my very best consideration and thank you for calling my attention to same."

"Broken Blossoms" Opens in 'Frisco

Plans are being made by D. W. Griffith and his staff for the Western premier of "Broken Blossoms" at San Francisco on Sunday, August 24th. Arrangements have been completed for use of "The Curran" theatre, formerly "The Court," one of the leading down-town houses of San Francisco. This premier will be the first of a series which will follow in several of the larger cities through the central West and East, all of which will be under the personal supervision of the producer himself.

NEW FOX BUILDING TO OPEN OCT. 1

THE new William Fox motion-picture plant at 10th Avenue, 55th and 56th Streets, is nearing completion. With the four walls finished and the roofing under way, the building should be opened as per schedule on the first of October. Twelve giant bowstring trusses, each one hundred feet long and weighing five tons, are ready to be set in position. The opening of this "film city" will be marked by formal ceremonies.

Plans for an aero landing platform are being made, and it is expected that they will be submitted to Mr. Fox for approval very soon. Several aeroplane manufacturers and individuals contemplating aero-passenger service to and from the metropolis, are endeavoring to make arrangements with Fox Film Corporation for leading privileges on this roof. Whether the platform will be used for the Fox organization exclusively has not been decided.

Cleveland Bars An Affiliation

Exchange Managers Board Can See No Benefit in Joining a National Body

THE Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce held a convention in Cleveland, on Friday, August 8th, which was attended by thirty-five members of neighboring exchange managers' associations. There were the presidents, secretaries and delegates for the Detroit, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and Buffalo organizations. These representatives met with the members of the Cleveland exchange manager's board, for the purpose of discussing several important points.

One of these was the necessity of co-operation among the exhcanges, in overlapping territories. It was agreed upon by those present, that all of the exchange managers' board of the district, should be governed by the same general rules of procedure. It is plainly to be seen that much confusion will be done away with, by a uniform method of procedure. There are many towns situated on a border line, which are tossed from pillar to post, accomodatnig themselves to conflicting rules of different centres from which they are served. This confusion results in a great loss of time to all parties and a fairly uniform plan of proceedure will mean a saving of time, a saving of money and a saving of unnecessary contention.

Another point under discussion at the meeting was the subject of transportation. This is a perrenial evil in the movie business. But, on the whole, Ohio exhibitors are getting pretty good service through the parcels' post department.

The matter of affiliation with a national organization, was also the subject of argument at the gathering of the clan of exchange managers. There was not much argument about it, however. Everyone was agreed that the local exchange managers' boards, should not affiliate themselves with any national organization whatsoever. In the first place, it was pointed out, a local organization, and only a local organization, knows what local evils it has to contend with. No one outside knows what is a chronic ailment, and what is a temporary eruption.

The members present at this meeting all expressed themselves as anxious to proceed along uniform lines, so as to establish a uniform line of proceedure in the distributing end of the business.

Sunday Show Victory Probable in N. J.

Interest among motion picture men is centering on the closing weeks of the campaign the Exhibitors' League of New Jersey is waging for passage of the enabling measure by which Sunday exhibitions of film plays may be voted in any community in the state.

Dr. H. Charles Hespe, president of the State League, is working overtime to bring home to legislators the fact that public opinion, wherever it has had a chance to be heard, is overwhelmingly in favor of the referendum law, and he is confident that this year the efforts of his organization, backed by the support of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, will result in a victory for the measure.

Local labor bodies have gone on record as in favor of Sunday motion pictures and it is understood that a number of prospective candidates for state offices will come out on the same side. Before the September primaries it is possible that one or both of the party platforms will contain a plank advocating the passage of a Sunday opening bill.

Quimby Coming East

General Sales' Manager Fred C. Quimby of Pathe has concluded his work in Los Angeles, and departed for the east August 11th. Quimby, while here, visited the producing plants engaged in making subjects for Pathe, and spent considerable time with the leading exhibitors and local representatives of Pathe.

Robert H. McLaughlin, author of "The House Without Children," an Argus Enterprises, Inc., picture, to be released through the Film Market, Inc.

Theodore Hays of Twin Cities Visits East

In his capacity as manager of the New Garrick and New Liberty theatres of St. Paul, leading down-town houses of the Hamm, Finkelstein and Ruben interests, Theodore Hays paid New York City producers a visit last week.

It was while manager of the Litt and Dingwall legitimate theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul about sixteen years ago that Mr. Hays saw far enough ahead to realize that motion pictures would soon become the big vital factor in the amusement business.

But his associates simply regarded the motion pictures as a fad like the roller skating or shimmie craze. They thought it would soon go into the discard. Then Mr. Hays secured some prints of split-reel subjects and opened a store show on Nicollet avenue as a sort of side issue. He can therefore be considered the pioneer motion picture exhibitor of that section.

At present he is a torturing thorn in the side of the music publishers' association and is leading an aggressive and successful fight against using copyrighted royalty music in any of the twin cities' leading theatres.

Exhibitors Asked to Fight and Aid

A straight up-and-down argument, tended to lead exhibitors to write their Congressmen and Senators for revision of film taxes, is put forward in a letter addressed to exhibitors from the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America.

The argument is advanced that pictures did their share and then some toward winning the war and still pays a number of taxes, while ice cream for instance, which could scarcely be credited with a similar amount of war aid, has the tax on it removed.

It is pointed out that the Executive Committee is to raise $100,000 in 1919-20 to work for revision of film tax, capacity tax, admission tax, music tax, daylight saving, Sunday opening and such questions, and all must do their share.

Cleo Madison, formerly connected with the Universal, has been engaged to appear in the new serial, "The Radium Mystery," now being produced by the Pacific Producing Company, at Hollywood, Calif.

WIRE BRIEFS FROM THE COAST

AN offer running into six figures was given and refused when "Confession," the next Henry Walthall subject, was shown before being edited, to George Davis of San Francisco and Jack Doheney of Missouri, by William Parsons and Isadore Bernstein of National Film Corporation. The picture as it stood was fourteen reels in length. When cut it will run five or six.

The Los Angeles street car strike cut in heavily on theatre patronage. One-quarter drop in attendance was reported in the city and suburbs.

At a meeting attended by ninety per cent of the leading actors and directors of the Los Angeles film colony, it was voted to collect weekly sums from professionals, to be forwarded to the Actors' Equity Association offices in New York and Chicago. George Fawcett, William Courtney, Bert Lytell, Milton Sills and Frank Keenan were prominent in the sympathy movement for the strikers. Of several thousand dollars donated, Keenan contributed a thousand and will give fifty dollars weekly.

The Al Jennings Photoplay Co. and Neal Hart Producing Company have merged with Capital Film Co. of which S. L. Barnhard is president. Additional units will be added to make two-reel Westerns.

The Rothapfel Unit Program opened at the Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, to good business considering the strike. The press criticisms were favorable.

A luncheon on Aug. 19 was the scene of announcement of the formation of the Catherine Curtis corporation, financed by New York capitalists, including George M. Taylor, Dorman T. Connett, Albert L. Judson, Reese Llewellyn, William D. Loucks, E. R. Oirtle, Malcolm McClellan, Robert N. Simpson, Arthur F. Spalding and George J. Whalen. The plan is to make "bigger than program" pictures for road show release.

"The Miracle Man," George Loane Tucker's production, opens at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, Aug. 30. "Broken Blossoms" opens in San Francisco Aug. 25.

Douglas Fairbanks is to go to San Francisco to make his third United Artists productions and plans leaving early in October.

The Gaiety Comedy Company has been organized to make one-reel independent release subject. George Ovey and beauty chorus to be featured.

Fleet Has Gay Entertainment

Motion Picture Folk of Coast Colony Turn Out to Welcome Our Bluejackets

OFFICERS and members of Affiliated Picture Interests, composed of producers, exchangemen, theatre managers, and people of the studios, were in charge of all public entertainments given in Los Angeles, August 9th to 12th, inclusive, for officers and men of the Pacific Fleet of 148 boats which arrived in Los Angeles Harbor after a trip through the Panama Canal. Douglas Fairbanks, aided by Fred Burns and one hundred cowboys and cow girls who are active in picture work took part in a rodeo of eighteen sensational western numbers.

The expenses of this were assured by prominent people of the industry subscribing for boxes in the grandstand at $100 each, and practically every one of prominence in the West Coast film colony was present. The attendance was estimated at 60,000 with paid admissions by all except the men of the Navy who numbered about 8,000. Mayor M. P. Snyder of Los Angeles, gave the address of welcome and Secretary Daniels of the Navy gave the responding address. Charles Murray acted as master of ceremonies, Douglas Fairbanks, Will Rogers, J. C. Jessen, Monte Blue and Fred Burns were judges; Harry Leonhard of the California theatre was chairman of grounds' committee and was assisted by all exchange managers and salesmen. Secretary W. J. Reynolds of M. P. Producers' Association was general manager.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings, dances were given to the sailors on the streets especially prepared for the occasion, on Film Row (Olive street between Sixth and Ninth streets) when five jazz bands furnished the music. This revived the carnival spirit of Los Angeles' people, and the event is spoken of as the most elaborate fete of its kind in the history of the city. During the stay of the Pacific Fleet in Los Angeles Harbor waters, managers of down-town theatres issued twenty thousand passes to their respective theatres to men of the Navy, through a booth conducted in Pershing Square.

First Episode "Lurking Peril" Completed

Films Asked for Ad Association Show

President Harry Levey of the Screen Advertisers' Association, which is planning a great program to offer several thousand of the biggest men in the advertising field at the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at New Orleans, September 21-28, has asked other members of the association to forward to him films they wish shown during the five days of the assemblage.

Corporations and motion picture producing companies who have made industrial and advertising films are eligible to have their pictures shown during this convention, according to Mr. Levey, who is determined to show representative advertisers of the country that the films compose an almost ideal medium for the exploitation of products, ideas and themes. Mr. Levey, as president of the association, has made complete arrangements for the showing of these films.

Rail Strike Affected Distribution

The managers of the moving picture theatres of western Vermont found themselves up against it when the railroad strike last week affected that section. As a result, Rutland was selected as the large distributing point of New England and New York. This city served as the central point between Bellows Falls and St. Albans, The agency was in charge of S. Y. Merchant of the Paramount Picture Company. The exchange handled the Paramounts, Goldwyns, Select and World Film companies' products, as well as practically every large film agency in the East.

The films were brought to Rutland from the different headquarters in the large cities by automobile truck every day. Managers of different theatres in the district went to Rutland to view the pictures and make their selections.

Opening Larger House

R. A. Kirby, one of the oldest exhibitors in the Middle West, sold his interests in the Gem, a house at Monroe city, Mo., to his partner. Mr. Kirby will open a larger house seating 500 and will play pictures, vaudeville, dramatic stock and musical comedy. Work is under way and opening will be Sept. 1st, with all new and modern equipment.

Paramount Week Looms Ahead

THERE is every indication that great as was the success of the first National Paramount-Artcraft Week last year from the standpoint of the exhibitor's box-office, it will be exceeded this year. The prestige of these pictures, the nation-wide advertising that has already announced the coming of a new season, and the great national advertising and publicity campaign that is being put directly behind the week's efforts will make National Paramount-Artcraft Week in 1919 set an entirely new record in the number of satisfied and delighted patrons and successful, profit-taking exhibitors.

This National Paramount-Artcraft week showing of "better pictures" will be advertised in such a broad and comprehensive way that no intelligent person can escape the message and the impulse to see these pictures. It is only natural that exhibitors should show these pictures, because the public has learned to expect them and to look for them. The public has learned that the exhibitors themselves consider these pictures the only ones that could possibly serve their purpose in this demonstration: a drive for better pictures.

Posters, slides magazines, newspaper advertising and other media will be employed in this great demonstration. such great results were attained from the advertisement placed with the Saturday Evening Post last year announcing the week, that the first formal announcement will be made to the public this year through the same magazine.

This year's schedule of newspaper advertising calls for a full-page in each of about ninety newspapers in as many cities in this country. A large blank space appears in this copy which will carry the names of the theatres co-operating in the drive for better pictures, as was done last year.

This year's campaign also calls for advertising in 375 other newspapers, covering every city in America of more than 10,000 population, in which there is a theatre to present properly Paramount-Artcraft Pictures.

State Right Sales

Harry Charnes of the Standard Film Service Co. of Cleveland announces he has bought the rights for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky to "The Carter Case" serial, "The Masked Rider," Gaumont's Pictorial Life, the two-reel "Hall Room Boys" comedies, "Depth of the Sea," a four-reel special and ten one-reel Napoleon and Solly comedies.

Discrimination Is Alleged

Regulations Passed by Ontario Province Put Up to the State Department

A MATTER of fundamental interest to the motion picture industry was discussed at the meeting of the distributors' division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held August 12th.

The film distributors denounced the new regulations adopted by the Province of Ontario in relation to the operation of theatres and projectors, brought to their attention through a letter from the Department of Commerce at Washington, in reference to the new law in Ontario, Canada, providing that only citizens of Great Britain could be licensed to show motion pictures or operate motion picture machines.

The American Consul at Toronto had sent to Washington the following excerpts from the rules and regulations of the "Theatres and Cinematograph Act":

"Every film exchange, and every owner, lessee or manager of a theatre, and every owner, lessee or manager of a public hall, every person or persons owning, managing or having control of a road show, every person or persons owning or managing or having control of a traveling cinematograph or moving picture show, and every apprentice and operator of a moving picture machine or similar apparatus, shall obtain a license and observe the following regulations:

"All licenses shall be issued by the Minister and shall expire on the thirty-first day of May in each year. Applicants for licenses under these regulations shall by affidavit furnish to the Minister evidence of British citizenship, either by birth or naturalization, and no license shall be granted to other than British subjects. The fees payable for licenses shall be as follows":

The Consul also enclosed a letter from the Provincial Treasurer of Ontario explaining that permits are now being issued to American operators of motion picture machines for the present year on the understanding that they must take out naturalization papers if they expect licenses to be continued.

Considerable indignation was expressed by the meeting of distributors and it was decided that the Provincial ruling was of sufficient importance to refer it to the State Department at Washington, so that complaint might be made of an obviously unfair discrimination against American film men. The subject was referred to the Chairman Charles C. Pettijohn of the Committee on Taxation who in turn, through the offices of the National Association presented the subject to the State Department.

Stanley Has Historic House

Jules Mastbaum Adds Noted Broad Street Theatre, Philadelphia, to His String

WHEN the announcement was recently made of the sale of the South Broad Street Theatre, Philadelphia, there was considerable speculation and secrecy attached to the transaction. It was generally believed that the property had been taken over for office building purposes and that the famous playhouse would soon be but a pleasant memory.

It transpired last week that such is not to be the case, and that the Broad will continue as a place of the highest quality of amusement. This came in the announcement that the Stanley Company of America had purchased the property, and, starting with the end of the coming season, the house will thereafter become a part of the formidable chain of theatres now in the control of this organization for the exploitation of the best there is in motion pictures.

The transaction was made with the Fox Estate and the price agreed upon was not made public, nor would either parties to the deal divulge any further information as to the sale. But it is understood the new owners contemplate making numerous improvements to the interior and exterior at the expiration of the current lease.

Mr. Mastbaum stated that the reported acquisition of the Broad was a fact and that his company had already formulated its plans for the future policy of the house. "We regard the Broad as one of the most important acquisitions to our chain of houses," he said, "for the reason that it represents the highest stage of the amusement field in Philadelphia, a house which has been the hobby, I might say, of the fashionable residents not only of this city but of all the surrounding suburbs for these many years. It will be our aim to keep it in its popularity by providing attractions that will appeal to the highest class of amusement seekers. We are convinced that the representatives of society as well as the masses, are now deeply interested in the better class of motion pictures."

Kelley Handling Wistaria Publicity

Joseph L. Kelley, newspaper and publicity man has been engaged by Lynn S. Card, president of the newly formed Wistaria Productions, Inc., to handle publicity and advertising of this company which is now at work under the direction of Burton King on the first serial production, co-starring Ann Luther and George Larkin. Mr. Kelley was formerly a newspaper man in Washington, D. C., doing special work for the Washington Post. He entered the editorial field of the motion picture industry, on the staff of Motion Picture News. Later he was appointed publicity director for the Kalem Company and was more recently publicity director for Independent Sales Corporation.

Films as a Prohibition Aid

The common man came to realize that when he drank liquor he was an enemy to himself, an enemy to his wife, and an enemy and improper guardian to his children; he was an incompetent employee, and, as his drinking became excessive, a disgrace to his family tree.

The motion picture theatre has made it possible for this man to reunite himself with his family. Proper recreation and amusement are as essential to the human body as are food and sleep. The motion picture provided for this need at a popular price of admission, and this made it possible with the family life centering around this theatre, for the man to be a just husband, a real father, and a worthy employe—a true friend to men and a credit to his family tree.

As an illustration, many of the theatres which I now operate and which were formerly used for other forms of amusement had adjoining them a store that was occupied for the sale of liquor, or a bar-room in conjunction with the theatre proper.

For example, there was the old Dewey Theatre in Fourteenth Street, which sold liquor to its patrons while used for burlesque; the Gotham theatre which had a bar-room in its theatre; the Star Theatre which had a gin-mill on the nearest corner, and, in addition, two gin-mills on opposite corners of the thoroughfare. Just as soon as these theatres were converted into moving picture theatres and the clientele was established, these bar-rooms were forced to close, for they were unable to take in sufficient money to pay for their licenses.

No man has much opportunity to think of his future during his hours of actual toil. His brain reverts to himself after his working hours, to work out his personal problems and his own future. If it is well to stay sober while you are under the eyes of your employer—if that is to your employer's benefit—it must be an advantage to remain sober when, on your own time, you proceed to figure out your individual problems; for you can surely do that in your sober senses than you could in your drunken senses.

One tremendous advantage to the public which has been demonstrated in the motion picture is that it really entertains and that this entertainment satisfies without the theatre management having to supply the added attraction of liquor. The so-called legitimate theatre or the burlesque theatre which had a bar-room in its building or adjoining its building admitted publicly, by this fact, that its entertainment was not sufficient, and that it could please better a drunken audience than a sober one.

In the early history of this country, in the dealings of the white men with the Indian, it was possible for the white man to make a better business deal if he first filled the red man with fire-water. Applied to modern life, the same condition exists. A man with a clear brain can protect his family, his employer and himself far better if his amusements do not cloud his faculties.

What will prohibition do to motion pictures?

It will crowd the picture houses.

It will call for the building of better and finer theatres.

It will increase the number of theatres because amusement and recreation, relief from sorrow, worry, and care are essential. With the exhilaration of liquor gone—and, I believe, gone forever—the general public must be provided for.

It is evident that the motion picture now has reached a point in development where it is fully able to satisfy this demand for entertainment. No man can accurately foresee the extent of its growth, but what I believe to be a conservative estimate is that motion-picture houses will be trebled in the United States, and that their numbers will be increased in every country in the world—because, whether there be prohibition or not, liquor as an amusement cannot hope to cope with the motion picture.

In Charge of Goldwyn's New Orleans Branch

Arthur S. Dickinson, erstwhile of Atlanta, Ga., went to New Orleans last week to take the post of resident manager of the Goldwyn Distributing corporation. "Colonel" Arthur Lucas, that Goldwyn division manager, has temporarily been in charge of the office since the resignation of Lee Crandall, Jr.

Playing one of the leading roles in Marguerite Clark's new Paramount-Artcraft starring vehicle, "A Girl Named Mary," is Kathlyn Williams, who will be remembered as one of the earliest screen favorites.

Exhibitors Service Bureau

Question of Importance to Every Exhibitor

By George B. Carpenter, Salt Lake City, Utah

IT is fitting and appropriate that from the West, where motion picture exhibitors as well as other professions and a populace at large have always led the procession in individual thinking, and where convention and custom and fear of being in the minority has less of a hold on people, should come the first well developed, full sized, emphatic "kick" against the practice of Government and semi-Government demands on exhibitors in the way of running advertising slides.

The man who puts his opinions into print is George B. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount Empress theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah. That he expresses the sentiments of a majority of the exhibitors is beyond doubt. The conditions which Mr. Carpenter tells us of as existing in Salt Lake are universal. Every theatre in the United States is being asked, and, we might say, ordered to do the very things the Paramount-Empress enumerates, but most of them have not had the courage that Mr. Carpenter displays in making even a verbal protest against these conditions.

If, as we believe, exhibitors like Mr. Carpenter have come to the point where, now that the war is over and patriotism no longer enters into the matter, believe that if Uncle Sam or anyone else wishes to advertise with motion picture slides the theatre manager should be paid for it, we hereby offer you the space in this department to express your views. Publicity on any matter is the first thing which has to be accomplished before a remedy can be expected.

Here is what Mr. Carpenter has to say on this subject:

"Now that the world war is over it behooves us to look back and take stock of what the exhibitor did in holding up his end of the log. But we all know what we did and would do so again should occasion warrant. It would seem, however, that the powers that be have arrived at the happy theory that Friend Exhibitor is legitimate meat.

"During the period of the war the three great advertising mediums, the newspapers, the billboards and the silver screen, nobly did their bit, with this difference, however—the newspapers and the billboards received financial remuneration for their endeavors to help put over the various drives ranging from Liberty bonds to collecting peach pits and old clothes. The exhibitors cheerfully shot all slides deliverel to them, at least the majority did, but now is it not time to call a halt? Take Salt Lake, for instance, which is an average western city; in one day last week the various exhibitors received applications, in some cases one might almost say a command, to run the following free advertising on their screens: War Savings Stamps, 5 slides; Local Recruiting Stations, 2; Salvation Army Drive, 2; Employment for Returned Soldiers, 2; Local Churches, 2; Fraternal Society Picnic, 1, and one reel on Recruiting—quite a little show in themselves, provided Friend Exhibitor was boob enough to run them.

"There seems to be a sentiment among some of the smaller exhibitors in this neck of the woods of fear that if they did not run all free advertising supplied by the versatile and energetic agents in the effete East that dire penalties and persecutions will be visited on their devoted shoulders by the powers responsible for burdensome taxes, penalties and other forms of legalized assessments. Politics aside, when enthusiastic paid agents of the administration shoot out a bunch of slides, exhorting the moving picture fans to vote their way, is it not about time to call a halt? If there are to be any political pointers thrown on the screen let all exhibitors get together and engineer their own campaign, devoid of any would-be assistance from publicity centers elsewhere.

"Every exhibitor knows that when the public pays its good money to see a picture it resents having to sit through a collection of advertising matter thrown on the screen, but during the war the motion picture exhibitor showed his patriotism by letting down the bars to four-minute men and the display of exhortations to come across financially like a true patriot. But the war is over and these gentry should sense the situation. If they pay for good advertising space in the newspapers, why, in the name of the pink-toed prophet, do they expect one of the greatest advertising mediums in existence to flaunt their requests on the screen—and not even receive a word of thanks for so doing. Personally, nobody can buy advertising space on our screen, and we are not afraid to talk right out in meeting and tell them why.

"But to reiterate, there seems to be many timid exhibitors who are afraid to resent the imposition. Heavily taxed as they already are, they have visions of being taxed out of the business if they do not cater to these free advertising 'special agents,' who come cavorting into town bearing credentials, rare raiment and I-represent-the-government line of patter.

"Will somebody of influence in the motion picture world allay the fears of the small town man and convince him that his screen is reserved for his own personal advertising, and, now that the war is over and won, it is about time that the exhibitors get together and stayed together?

"The screen is the finest advertising medium there is. Do not the manufacturers know it? They do. Just review the average picture and then dig out the advertising skilfully hidden in the film which the majority of us run without a kick and without recompense.

"Now is the time to advertise on the screen—for ourselves, and start a little war of our own.

"If a screen campaign, properly directed and opened simultaneously in every motion picture theatre throughout the United States, were started next week on the repeal of admission taxes, for instance, they would be repealed p.d.q. Talk about the 'power of the press'; the screen has the yellow journal discounted when it comes to reaching the masses. Censorship, Sunday closing and other thorns in the side, too, should not be overlooked, to say nothing of local issues.

"The politician, the manufacturer and several other wide awake aggregations long since realized the advertising power of the screen. If it is worth exploiting it is worth paying for, provided any exhibitor feels like turning his screen into a pictorial department store."

Your Idea and Ours

IF the ad man of the Colonial, Toledo, Ohio, had left the cut at the bottom of this three column, fifteen inch display out altogether and given his ad a "base" we would say that his was one of the best displays we have ever seen for a picture of this kind. The titles from the picture which we imagine are largely from Thomas' play will certainly be read if the eye is attracted to the ad and we believe that this is certain by the way the title is billed in the center, and once this desired result has been accomplished, curiosity to see the picture has been not mean anything than add to the discredit to the fact that they print

However the whole display is big enough and black enough so it stands out and therefore the selling talk will get attention, which is where the pulling power is placed.

A little better printing and this would have been bang up—and with the suggestion made above we would say a model for its kind. The fact that it is bold is to its credit. This sort of picture needs plenty of ink.

A month from today you may need heat in the show shop. Is there coal in the bin and are the steam pipes all in good order?

HERE is a display on "The Red Lantern," in which the New Casino, Jacksonville, Florida, has given this feature the largest newspaper billing we have seen. This was two pages on the inside of the theatre section of the Jacksonville Times Union and was printed in two colors, blue and black.

Naturally when reduced to the size of our columns this display is going to lose most of it's impressiveness and you will have to use your imagination to picture the "flash" which these two pages made.

Of course there isn't anything so very artistic and in a big display like this but we can certainly commend the way the cuts have been utilized. Centered as they are in the two pages, they serve to break up the "auction bill" effect usually found in so large a display and give people an idea of the character of the production. There is an absence of selling talk concerning the story itself but we are of the opinion that in this particular style, that fact will not be felt. The Casino has chosen to center its appeal on the star and the title and a display as big as this is going to overshadow selling talk anyway.

There has been a tendency to repeat words unnecesscarily, notably "New Casino," the title and the stars name and if we were going to make changes in this display we would have used a box on the left the same as on the right, dispensed with the two "Red Lantern" sentences on both sides of the cut using in their place something smaller perhaps pertaining to the musical program, substituted a smaller type for the top "New Casino" as it crowds a bit to the "Nazimova" line.

However this is so big that it is size that speaks rather than quality, we should say that if it didn't cost too much this was a business puller, which accomplished all that could be expected of it.

Cleanliness is next to Godliness. Keep your theatre clean.

HERE is what to our eye passes as one of the most artistic newspaper displays we have ever seen. The new theatre is located at Baltimore, and this ad was seven and a half by four columns, centered in a page of other displays and movie news, yet it looked out and bid for attention as did no other display on the page.

If you will study this display a few moments you will discover that the principal thing which gives the ad its appearance of class is the border used. Aside from that the ordinary materials, a good face cut of the star, ordinary type, and the usual method of framing have been utilized.

As for the selling talk used in this it is very good. The star's name has been billed above the title of the production, with Lois Weber coming in for more than passing mention and Jack Holt given space. All this is as it should be. In describing what will be seen, the selling talk covers as much of this subject as is necessary, and excites as much interest as a more extended paragraph would.

This display is worth clipping as a model. Incidentally if this border is part of the newspaper's stock, it must be complimented on having secured a beauty.

A progressive showman is one who has ideas and puts them into practise.

THIS display of the Colonial's, Birmingham, Ala., needs just one thing—let people in on the kind of a picture this is and then it will pass for a good display built along orthodox lines."

As it stands, the ad suggests that "Nugget Nell" is a melodrama, while the film is the broadest kind of comedy-burlesque. It is absolutely fatal to let your audience come into the theatre, thinking that this picture is to be taken seriously because the action is such that unless you get the idea, it might pass by those whose sense of humor isn't too good anyway, as the real thing in heroics, very badly overacted.

In fact, this whole production isn't so very much different than the average Western drama of a few years ago, and we know of a reviewer (no, not on NEWS), who failed to get the idea of this and treated it just as we have said some of the people who see it may if they are not told to expect comedy.

The ad was two columns by ten inches, and is to be commended in the amount of white space it has if for nothing else.

The actors' strike hasn't effected the press agents stories.

HERE is a nice little ad taken from the Des Moines Register. It was two columns wide and six inches deep, and comes in for commendation only. We are strong for these small face cuts, and this one of Miss Bara prints very well. The Palace has rightly billed the star's name, and base the appeal of the ad largely on her reputation. This has balance, and says as much as can rightfully be placed in space of this size.

This was printed among a lot of larger displays, but it attracted attention because of its white space and well framed appearance. This is worth saving, if you are going to book this picture. The cut is available from your exchange, and the type can be had at any printers.

The next holiday is Labor Day, but that doesn't mean that you should put off todays job.

WE offer this four-column eleven-inch display of the Strand's, Tacoma, Wash., as what to my mind is not only a poor use of space big enough to have been utilized to better advantage, but also of poor judgment in billing unless the conditions are different in Tacoma than we think they.

Fay Tincher, an actress, whose reputation is largely in broad comedy, and the title of her production, "Rowdy Ann," is given preference over "Her Code of Honor," and both these titles and names of stars have been crowded in a space large enough, so they might have been displayed to much better advantage.

We would have eliminated the second cut, that at the bottom and used the space for a better layout of the type matter.

Some day someone may make a picture which will please everyone.

THIS three-column thirteen-inch display of the Strand's, Louisville, Ky., for the most part, is good advertising for "The Knickerbocker Buckeroo."

Beginning with the cut of Doug, which is good stuff, because this star always commands first attention, the Strand has something which attracts the eye instantly. Then comes the name of Fairbanks confirming the impression that the cut is a picture of this actor, with the title of the feature coming in for third place. This is correct. To tie the display lines together the Strand ad man has used "arithmetic," which is a change from the conventional "so and so presents," at least.

Great stuff, isn't it? The whole picture fairly throbs with thrilling moments, mixed with stirring dramatic scenes and the matchless charm of Douglas Fairbanks.

B·F·KEITH'S STRAND
4 Days of Big Crowds Start To-morrow

We will now make a small criticism. We don't believe people are interestd in how much a picture costs, and we don't believe that many people believe that this production debited any such amount of money as is stated, regardless of what the real truth in the matter may be. Therefore, in using this mention of what patrons are wont to view as "film production extravagance," nothing has been accomplished. This sort of thing also smacks of the old circus advertising, which always featured the money end of their attractions in head lines and which also no one ever took seriously.

Next we have four adjectives that do mean something when referring to a Fairbanks' picture, because these are the things which have typified his productions.

The first paragraph of selling talk covers the field of the picture, and the talk should have stopped there. The description of the melodramatic action following does not add to the advertising at all. In fact, it sounds rather commonplace. We would have eliminated the paragraph down to "the whole picture," etc., and used this space for a little larger type in which to set what remains.

However, this is a good ad, and is in keeping with the picture to be shown something, which is always to be commended. The Strand doesn't say anything about the rest of its program, but, if one is to leave this out, it can be done with a Fairbanks film with less harm than with almost any production.

The early bird catches the worm; book far enough ahead so your competitor won't buy the film you wanted before you got around to it.

THERE is just one thing wrong with this hand down draw display of the Regent theatre, Pittsburgh and that is a psychological one. In this quarter page designed by Samuel Sivitz, the artist, has chosen to picture a type of man who is to do the choosing which the feminine residents will not like as the hero of a photoplay.

This may seem like a joke to you, but if you will do a little inquiring you will find that women, as a rule, are suspicious of a baldheaded man of the age this chap appears to be who is still a bachelor. To them it suggests the roue who has come to the time of life where he selects a wife not with the desire of getting a fifty-fifty bargain, but rather because he would have a home for his old age, after having lived a life which will not bear inspection. Otherwise this is a great display. The selling talk is of the best, for this type of picture and the artistic manner in which it has been used in connection with the four types of womanhood pictured from which the man may choose could not be improved upon. If only the man had been of the type that women like to think have waited until middle age before selecting a wife, or in this country we might better say, wooing a wife, because he could not find his ideal, we would give this a class A rating. The type we mean is the big, brawny fellow who looks as if he had made his own way in the world, rising from the streets to affluence through his own efforts.

REGENT
HIGHLAND

Of course, this is an English film, with the English gentleman viewpoint to be considered, but in as much as the Regent ad very wisely avoids mentioning this fact, it would seem that it could have gone a step farther and carried out the suggestion we have made. Unconsciously every woman is going to decide that this chap doesn't deserve a wife, even a bad one. The Regent has chosen to state the releasing corporation, which we believe is bad policy unless there is a personal axe to grind. If this figure of the man was originally a producer's cut the words mentioned could have been easily obliterated and was really worth while. Why advertise some one else when you own business needs it?

The man who doesn't believe in advertising is out of place managing a theatre.

IN this department one may contradict one's self every five minutes and still be right. We have admonished against mentioning money matters in advertising in discussing one display to be used in these columns.

Now we come to a display where this subject is mentioned and rightly so. Kitty Gordon, advertised in this three-column ten-inch display of the Rialto's, Birmingham, Ala., is famous for her gowns, and women are eternally interested in clothes and what they cost. Therefore, Miss Gordon's wardrobe and the amount of money it is alleged to have set her back is good stuff.

As to the ad itself, we should say that it is another very good display.

Two cuts have been used to advantage, the title and star's name have been given the right billing, and the selling talk is the kind for a picture of this sort.

The Rialto has put all its eggs in one basket by not making mention of the other numbers on the bill, which to our mind is not taking advantage of all the opportunities, but at least it has framed a nice-looking ad and one that should have proven a business getter.

No one knows everything about his business and many could still learn if they gave it proper thought.

THIS double column three and a half of the Liberty, St. Louis is an example of the hand drawn ad which bears all the ear marks of quality and serves for small space to bring the display into prominence equal to that of larger type made displays.

The Liberty has utilized Farnum's figure and that of the "villian" to suggest that this is a melodramatic picture of South American or Mexican type very well. Billing the star above the title of the picture we believe is also good judgment in this case, and the absence of any selling talk is excused because of the small space, and the fact that the star has been asked to carry the burden so far as the pulling power is concerned.

Some managers act interested in their theatres once a day; when they count the receipts.

THIS display of Hulsey's, Dallas, Texas, was a full-quarter page, and will pass as rather unusual if not extraordinarily artistic.

Black and white has been used to make the display stand out on the page, and about all that can be said to advantage about this production without giving the story away is printed here, therefore we would say that this passes muster.

From 100% to Zero

The Hippodrome might have bragged a bit that it was playing a pre-release picture, for so far as we know this is the first exhibitor's showing in the United States for this production (if they knew it themselves), and thereby gotten some publicity for the house and the picture which would have been a bit unusual. As a matter of fact, this production is not supposed to be available until the last of this month.

This is another display where no mention is made of the other numbers on the bill, and this time there is no excuse as the space purchased has plenty of room for some small type. In fact, we think that if some reading matter, not too much had been placed in the box at the bottom between the two "13's" it would have given the display a sort of a base, which would help to balance it.

The film which makes the most isn't necessarily the one you ought to run.

THIS display of the Trianon theatre, Birmingham, Ala., will attract attention, but we don't care so much for the plan of advertising. This would have been better if the cut had printed so the features could be distinguished, and is somewhat excused because the offering is frankly melodrama, and this sort of production does need lots of ballyhoo to get over the melodramatic atmosphere.

Therefore too much cannot be said against this display. We like the selling talk used. It excites interest and tells the reader that a mystery story may be expected.

The display was three columns wide ten inches deep. Evidently only the cut of the star is exchange material, and that is not up to standard.

What are you doing to improve your programs? Just keeping even won't do in this business.

HERE is a little ad taken from the San Francisco Times, which will serve to let you see what kind of advertising is done in the Golden Gate City. This was just the size you see it here, and is about as much as can be said in such small space, especially when a house is trying to advertise two features of a double bill.

"The Thirteenth Chair" ad illustrates how this picture is going to be viewed in exploitation. As you will note stress is being laid on the fact that this was a tremendous stage success, with the author, Bayard Veiller, coming in for more than passing motion, and his greatest stage play, "Within the Law," given space. We believe that this is the way exploitation on this picture should be handled.

An attractive lobby display often is the deciding factor in inducing a patron to select his show.

THE use of distinctive type and a mighty good cut of the star serves to bring this seven inch, three column display of the Alhambra's, Indianapolis up out of the ordinary class.

We are of the opinion that the black rule used at the top and bottom of the display does not add to its appearance and that if a border had been placed around the four sides a bit on the order of the type used in the title, it would have improved the appearance of the ad somewhat.

The selling talk used here is excellent for a small space and with a feature which dosen't contain a great amount of action as is the case with this production. All in all this is better than average and entitled to praise especially in the amount of white space reserved.

Does your ticket girl act as if she was doing a patron a favor when she takes his money, or is she human?

AS a display to be used once in the while as a novelty or say when for some reason you didn't want to announce your feature picture, we would say that this eight inch double column display of the Pickwick theatre, San Diego, Cal., was decidedly good. It is novel and contains some good reading matter of the general "boost" type.

However if you have a picture which you want people to know about, you certainly should use your newspaper space to tell them concerning this fact.

Remember that people do not go to photoplay entertainment anymore without first knowing what they are going to see, who plays in the production etc. In fact they are liable to know more about the show than you do if you are one of those office managers who never see your own pictures unless compelled to do so. Consequently an ad like this is only good because all advertising is good and nothing that you do which keeps your theatre before the public eye is entirely bad. This sort of stuff however is not so effective as it is probable the Picwick ad man imagined it would be for the reason that only those who happen to read the ad are going to pay much attention to it, in as much as there is nothing especial but white space to attract the eye and it doesn't specialize on any one subjct.

inch double column ad from the Union.

Just what the idea is in using up so much space with this black rule arranged in rather meaningless ways, we fail to see. If the designer of this ad had used his rule around the to-day as he has here and discarded the four pieces which serve no purpose that we can see, carried out the same idea in boxing his line "Superba," he would have saved about three inches of space which might have been utilized to mentioning his musical program or something equally as important and still had a rather unique effect. Better still he might have used two small cuts one for the right and upper corner and the other for the left hand lower corner. Using rule like this without any reason, referring to that we suggested discarding, only makes work in make up that is useless without any attendant results.

larger space would be a good example of an all-type ad, but too much matter has been provided as it is here, and in consequence the selling talk was necessarily set in 8 point, a too small a size for ad work.

No fault can be found with the way this display has been framed, nor with the display as a whole. It is plain straightforward statement of what the American is doing for the date billed, unless it is the black rule boxes at the four corners. We imagine that if these had been eliminated that the display would look less crowded.

THIS four-column display of Moore's Rialto, Tacoma, Wash., was a full page in depth, and as it appeared in the Tacoma Ledger commanded attention from its size, the excellent cut used and the fact that it has plenty of white space.

While the display is one where no great amount of effort has been used in adding to a producer's cut, the result is quite satisfactory.

In the selling talk a great deal of sentiment which is not apparent in the picture has been expressed, but as the idea contained therein is what should have been told in the production, and and, if it had been, there would have been an excuse for Katherine Bush's disregard of the moral code, we should say that this selling talk not only serves to arouse interest in the story, but also may help patrons to view the picture with more charity for its leading character. The Rialto is giving its musical program space, which is a practice that deserves commendation. As a whole, while it is not exceptional, the display passes for good common sense advertising.

Read what other exhibitors are doing and apply what you learn to your theater, so far as you can.

THE Rialto, Des Moines, would have had a very attractive ad in this three column by seven, if it had been a little larger. It isn't exactly crowded the thing which is wrong being too small type used in the selling talk. The use of the Ray cut is effective, although it might have printed a bit better, and the catch line, "They've shot men for less than this," while having nothing to do with the story excites some interest to read further. Then the treatment of the subject in the selling talk tells people that this is a "rube" picture by its style, as well as in words. Yes, this passes for good, but if you are going to copy it buy about an inch more space across three columns.

It isn't the longest show but the best show which pleases the patron.

THIS one of the Colonial's, Toledo, Ohio, was four columns by ten inches, and while it is pretty black and bold, this is the style of story, and Priscilla Dean is an actress which will admit of this sort of billing.

This certainly suggests melodrama, and the selling talk carries this idea further.

The selling talk we will reproduce for you, as it will be too small to be read when reduced to our columns.

"A smashing daring melodrama written by the celebrated playwright, Bayard Veiller, author of 'Within the Law' and 'The Thirteenth Chair.' Miss Dean has the role of a beautiful adventuress, and no one can play this kind of a role like her." (This isn't very smooth English.) You will remember her in the "Wild Cat of Paris." Here is one packed with the same swift action and sensations with scenes in San Francisco and New York. Tremendously exciting. Enormously human.

Keep eternally thinking about making your theater a better place for people to go to and put your thoughts into actions.

ORDINARILY we would object to so wide rule as is used on this three-column four-inch display of the Isis theatre's, Grand Rapids, Mich., but since this ad concerns Theda Bara, famous for her melodramatic pictures, we are inclined to think this is rather good for just day after day sort of publicity.

By using the cut of the star which prints up rather bold and selecting the black caps for the title of the production and star's name, the Isis has made the black rule fit in without jarring, and the whole display becomes aggressively conspicuous. This is what a Theda Bara picture wants, consequently this ad must be O. K.'d as good work for this particular bill. The Isis chooses to advertise three bills at one time, which we question as the best policy. One bill in advance is quite enough where the papers are used daily.

Music soothes the savage breast and is a matter of first importance in the conduct of your theatre.

THIS display of the Strand's, Birmingham, Ala., a full quarter page is a nice mixture of good and bad. First the good is the "flame" idea, which is carried out mighty well, and the announcement of the star and title. The bad begins with the action cut of the two women in the center, and is entirely too suggestive of the "10, 20 30" stuff. If in place of this descriptive cut a good likeness of O'Brien had been used this would have looked a lot better.

The selling talk lines have been stuck about in odd places where they do little good. It would have been much better to have moved the "Why didn't she write home?" line, also the sentence at the right of the descriptive cut, to the space occupied by the "apple pie Lizzie" wording if there had been room. As a matter of fact, the cut mentioned as bad is also too large. A smaller cut there would have left room for the selling talk we mention, and some more which a picture like this needs. Here is a good idea gone wrong because the details were not carried out with care. No mention of anything but the feature picture again.

Smile when you feel like cussing.

HERE is a double-column ten-inch display of the New Garrick, Minneapolis, which advertising a light comedy as it does, strikes us as being a decided novelty and certainly an eye attracter.

We hardly think the cut used originated with the producer and therefore will give the New Garrick ad man full credit for a very attractive display that is very much out of the ordinary. It also is a fine example of when and how to use a "kidding" ad. Of course, this display doesn't say a word concerning what this picture is about, but that isn't necessary or desirable when you resort to this kind of display on the right sort of feature.

We would hardly recommend this style as a steady diet, for the reason that too much joking gets to be an old story, and that, as a rule, the advertising which goes at its selling problem in a straightforward, dignified way wears best and suits more people, but as a change this is great stuff.

The bathing girls who appeared for Manager Cohn of the Sunset theatre, Portland, in conjunction with his showing of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin"

Sennett's Beauties Had Nothing on Manager Cohn's Bathing Girls

ANY theatre manager who books "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" first run and has the Sennett Bathing Girls making personal appearances during the engagement is bound to do business, even if he is located in the heart of a desert, but when it comes to putting the show over second run and without the "beauties," that is another matter. Any manager who accomplishes it can lay claim to the title of a showman.

Sam W. B. Cohn, manager of the Sunset theatre, Portland, Oregon, is one of the few who have done the trick. How he did it in the midst of a hot weather week is described in the following story.

Mr. Cohn, being a showman, as we have stated, knew that the one big thing which drew the crowds to the first presentation of the Sennett comedy was the bathing girls. Therefore if he was to make the engagement a success he, too, must have some-thing on how his patrons in the way of bathing suits and that which is not usually covered by this kind appeared on the beaches.

With the assistance of a local film company he secured a bevy of girls who were employed about Seattle and spent several hours teaching them to trip the "light fantastic" adorned in stunning bathing suits and led by a diminutive chorus girl seven years of age. The bathing girls put on a show of their own and the child actress sang a solo in a bathing costume. Then he had an Oriental dancer who worked "within the law." This was followed by a reel showing the real Sennett bathing girls in action, and then the feature itself. The idea was a success. Sennett's bathing girls had nothing on (figuratively speaking and not to be taken literally) Cohn's ladies, and the fact that the girls employed were all Seattle residents gave the whole engagement a local interest which the original showing did not have. The Sunset did a great business on the attraction, due largely, Mr. Cohn believes, to his "bathing girl" stunt. Here is a stunt which may be copied by nearly every exhibitor, and, if we are any judge, it will never fail to get results. Try it.

A Novelty Lobby Display for "The Avalanche"

THEO. L. HAYES, managing director of the New Garrick theatre, St. Paul, Minn., among a number of other houses controlled by Finkelstein and Ruben, who recently made such an excellent showing in his lobby on "Come Out of the Kitchen," came to the bat again with a good stunt when he showed "The Avalanche," starring Elsie Ferguson.

The story, dealing as it does in a large measure with gambling, offered Mr. Hayes his cue for individual expression in the theatre lobby advertising. A lot of imitation poker chips were stamped out of various colored cardboards and these, together with checks, I. O. U.'s, and pawn checks, signed by the character name, Helene Ruyler, were used in festoons in the lobby and also for decorating the box-office.

The idea was simplicity itself and only goes to show how a unique showing such as this can be made at small expense. Mr. Hayes is one showman who manages to bring up something distinctly different with which to exploit each feature.

Cincinnati Makes Aurora Mardiganian's Visit an Event

THE Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, reaped a golden harvest on "Auction of Souls," last week, when it was lucky enough or wise enough to secure personal appearances of Aurora Mardiganian, the star of the production, each day of the engagement.

Never in the history of theatres in Cincinnati did such crowds, especially of the gentler sex rush to the special matinees which were given and never did the Lyric do such a tremendous business.

Miss Mardiganian was in Cincinnati a week and during that time became the center of attraction for the entire city.

Society met her as the guest of Mrs. Casper Henry Burton, one of the social leaders. Newspaper men besieged her for interviews and inquisitive people attempted to talk with her at every turn. She became godmother for an infant which was found abandoned in the Union Central Station and is to adopt the child and provide a home for it. She was the featured speaker at a garden party at which social leaders and the Committee for Devastated France attended and other functions had her attention daily.

In addition to giving attention to what has been described Miss Mardiganian found time to make her personal appearances at the Lyric where she gave a special talk on the crimes committed in the Turkish Harems, that met with a wonderful reception.

So great was the jam at the box office that fights took place between people who desired to get into the theatre and were not willing to wait their turn.

Oscar A. Doeb, publicity man for the Lyric, left no stone unturned to add still further to the publicity that Miss Mardiganian and Auction of Souls was getting in Cincinnati and made his lobby displays and his advertising equal to the prestige the star of his bill had established for herself.

The Lobby display was especially effective in attracting attention. The lurid, gruesome scenes of the picture were emphasized and the "flashy" paper used to advantage.

H. M. Gates, author of the book, "Ravished Armenia," upon which is based "Auction of Souls," was present part of the week's engagement. During his several appearances he spoke on the enterprise which Aurora was undertaking and upon the picture in general. Mrs. Gates, Aurora's guardian, was also present at the show, introducing Miss Mardiganian and explaining the nature of her appeal. Both Mr. and Mrs. Gates had hoped and planned for Aurora's meeting with President Wilson, who was to speak in Cincinnati on the League of Nations; but, owing to the President's recent illness, his engagement in the Queen City had to be cancelled.

Other factors in the great advertising and publicity campaign were the book "Auction of Souls" and the song "Armenian Maiden." The former publication was advertised in all the down town book stores, the window displays heralding both the book and picture. The song, too, was put across in the Five and Ten Cent Stores. Patrons bought the song even before seeing the picture itself.

The Book of "Auction of Souls" was sold during the performances and the percentage usually given the management, was donated to the Salvation Army by Manager Libson of the Lyric.

It is needless to say that with such publicity both through Miss Mardiganian's personal appearance and from the usual sources, gave the Lyric a handsome profit for its booking.

Advertising Big Expense and No Expense

Says, J. Von Herberg of Jensen and Von Herberg Operating Seven Theatres with Home Offices in Seattle

Various angles of advertising and picture exploitation written by leading exhibitors are being published from time to time in the NEWS.

Coming from men who speak with an authority emanating from experience they are deserving of careful reading. It is a noteworthy fact that not a single contributor to this series has advocated restriction in the purchasing of newspaper space. A difference of opinion exists on some matters, but on this subject, all agree. This article is from the pen of Mr. J. Von Herberg of Seattle, Washington, junior member of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg operating, the Strand and Mission theatres, Seattle, the Liberty and Columbia theatres, Portland, the Rialto theatre, Butte, and the Victory theatre, Tacoma.

THAT advertising pays is hardly a strong enough term in connection with the operation of motion picture theatres. It is better to say that without advertising a modern big city photoplay theatre would have to put up the shutters in a fortnight.

Our advertising is at once a big expense and no expense—that is, you can feel the results rolling back from a well-written, well-placed advertisement with almost the vividness of an answering shout from a friend to whom you have called "Hello." Every dollar spent in good advertising brings back more than a dollar in business in less than twenty-four hours.

I have always believed in adequate advertising; in fact out here we went strong in the papers in the early days when our advertising appropriation was a substantial portion of our entire capital. Ten years ago, when on a venture we left the little National theatre, virtually a store show, and leased one of the leading legitimate theatres of that day, the Alhambra. We hired J. Willis Sayre, a practical newspaper man, and set him to writing full-page advertisements for the Sunday papers whenever the attraction warranted.

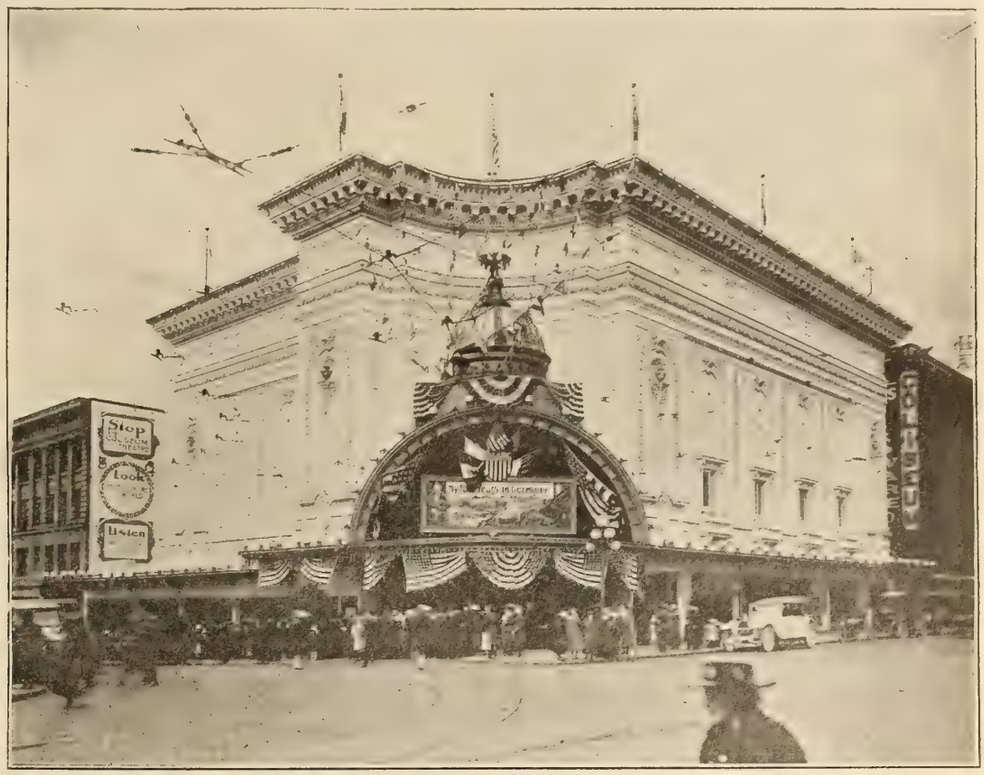
The "upside down" ad which in this case did more than to make the reader think the compositor had made a mistake



One of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses at Seattle engagement of Irene Castle in "The Firing Line" is visible for blocks

Ads of that size at that time were unheard of; possibly we set the pace for the whole country. I know at that time we were credited with so doing. And it was beautiful to see how it worked out. Every Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, after a full-page advertisement on some real picture of that day, like "Gettysburg," there would be a line before the box office that, you might say, would not break until 9 o'clock that night.

Our advertising has progressed; Mr. Sayre is still with us, now our advertising manager for the circuit, and recently, as an example of my belief in letting the public know when you have something worth while, he designed a solid sixteen and a half column ad on "The Unpardonable Sin," possibly the largest single motion picture advertisement ever printed, twenty-two inches deep, or 363 column inches in size. The MOTION PICTURE NEWS reproduced this ad, unfortunately crediting it at the time to another man who had nothing to do with its inception or publication.

With the advance of advertising rates and a necessary increase from time to time in the number of mediums used, our Sunday display advertisements have attained an average size of from sixty-eight inches to four or five columns each. Our week-day advertisements run from ten to sixty inches. We believe in persistent and continuous advertising. Twenty inches on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays is not so good as ten inches daily. We have a representation in the leading papers always.

We use two or three only of the leading weeklies. I might say that I believe it pays any theatre manager to concentrate on advertising. In every large city there are a score of weekly, monthly and other occasional publications, and hundreds of programs and special editions, some of them with substantial circulations. I do not argue that they would not be good mediums or possibly bring results, but if an exhibitor tries to advertise in everything he will go broke quickly.

We regard billboard advertising as both desirable and essential and we go into it heavily, using about forty twenty-eight sheet locations for each of our leading houses. Many of these boards are "specials," illuminated at night in central locations. We use exchange paper when it is good, otherwise either type the whole stand or use a combination of type and three or six-sheets photos of the stars.

I regard a good lobby display as of the utmost importance. We spend plenty of money on the front of a house whenever a characteristic display seems warranted. Also we are careful to have the lobby display, dressing and pictures accurately mirror the attraction inside. Lots of motion picture fans know more about the business than many exhibitors. Thousands of them check you up mentally, every turn you take, and anything misleading is going to be drawn to your attention, or that of your employes, a dozen times a night.

The appearance of an ad is of more importance than any expense involved in getting it up. Hence we use exchange mats or cuts only when they are up to the highest standard, that is, of as good appearance as a cut we could have made on the same subject. They are not up to this standard, in our opinion, when the studio advertisements on them are so numerous as to dwarf the advertising of the picture itself. In the case of one big "special" photoplay which we are about to show, on every exchange cut and mat the name of the producer is in appreciably larger type than the name of the picture itself. As we are advertising and selling photoplays, and not producers, we will use not one of those cuts or mats, but will have our own made at the photo-engravers.

The G. A. R. marching up Euclid avenue, Cleveland, to a special reservation of seats at the Stillman, when "Secret Service" was shown

"Bluecoats" Aid Loew's Cleveland Theatre Exploiting "Secret Service"

AMERICA, and for that most of the world's countries, are used to men marching in uniform, but there is one coat of brass buttons which will still stop busy people even in a big city, and that is the blue clad figure of the G. A. R.

A little group of these gray haired, bent formed, feeble old men, with their blue uniforms and bronze buttons, the battle scarred, tattered and faded old flags waving, marching along is a signal for "attention" from even a pro-German.

M. A. Mullaney, advertising director for Loew's Cleveland theaters, knew this and he also knew that the old "Vets" like to get out in that faded blue uniform, especially when it promised an opportunity to live over again the stirring days of '61, such as are depicted in "Secret Service," Robert Warwick's latest screen vehicle.

So it was that the invitation went out from the Loew theater offices for the G. A. R. of Cleveland to become the guests of the theater.

The invitation was gladly accepted and through the enterprising Mullaney a parade was arranged.

H. C. Martindale, head of the Ohio G. A. R., and Andrew Dillon, the Cleveland leader, sent out the call for the veterans to assemble in the Cleveland Public Square at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, prepared to march to the theater, headed by the Boy Scouts' Fife and Drum Corps.

Seventy-eight of the veterans assembled and the march to the theater was witnessed by large crowds that closed in and trailed on behind the old soldiers. When the men entered the theater there was a great deal of applause from those already assembled there. That the parade attracted attention goes without saying, and the newspapers seized on the publicity angle, with the result that both pictures of the parade and stories regarding the stunt were circulated in all the Cleveland papers.

Another item of interest in connection with the stunt was the fact that a cameraman was stationed to take moving pictures of the parade and these were subsequently shown as part of the Stillman news weekly and also were circulated in the Cleveland territory through the Famous Players-Lasky Exchange to foster interest in the picture when it was shown in other houses.

Certainly the whole scheme stands as an example of real showmanship. Even the newspaper advertising of the Stillman theatre took on a different appearance that week. The advertising space was increased, in some cases half pages being appropriated to advertise "Secret Service" alone, while in the regular weekly announcements a different still from the picture was made the center of each day's advertisement.

The high regard in which the G. A. R. organization is held, together with the fact that its members publicly endorsed the picture by parading to the theatre, worked to the direct advantage of the box office, and unusual business resulted throughout the week that "Secret Service" held the screen at the Stillman.

"Advertising a Big Expense"

This is expensive, but we think it worth while. Our four-column Sunday ad cuts combine the half tones and drawn suggestions which we think bring out most attractively the real points in the photoplay. These cost us from $45 to $60 for each four-column cut. They come high but we must have them. That they are attractive seems to be indicated by the number of them reproduced in the News and other trade papers in the last six or eight months.

In connection with our unusual overhead expenses in the designing and printing of artistic ads and window cards we have adopted a sales system, or plan of supplying scores of exhibitors in the smaller cities in the Pacific Northwest, California, Montana, Colorado and other Western states, that might profitably be adopted by big city exhibitors such as ourselves in the East or South, since the plan is of profit to us, to the other exhibitors, tends to larger and more artistic ads for all pictures and therefore is of benefit to the producers and the industry generally. We undertake the supplying of reproductions of our ads to all outside exhibitors at a fraction of the original cost to us, and have been gratified to find this regarded as a real service that could be extended to these exhibitors from no other source.

We are not strong for bizarre or outlandish "stunts" or ballyhoo in connection with the showing of our pictures. The value of having a comedy character parade the streets, or dressing the ushers as Hottentots because you have a jungle picture on, is questionable, especially in a large city. The motion picture is now THE amusement of the world; a first-class motion picture house has the same dignity to preserve as Daly's theatre had twenty years ago.

Things out of the ordinary, if of the proper sort, of course appeal to us. Just now we had the idea, in connection with our showing of Irene Castle in "The Firing Line," of offering $50 to the woman patron who wrote the best twenty-word description of the gowns worn by Mrs. Castle in this picture. Now the basic idea was not to obtain the descriptions, nor to appeal to the financial instincts of our women patrons. The idea was—and it succeeded—to call sharply to the attention of the women of Seattle the fact that Mrs. Castle's gowns in this picture were exraordinary—worth seeing for themselves alone.

The result was that while we received written answers by the score, women by the hundreds came just to see the gowns, with no idea of competing for the $50. The matinees were jammed, the women outnumbering the men twenty to one, an unheard of proportion at this particular theatre. The $50, and a modest amount of special advertising of the offer, brought in from $500 to $750 on the week, in the opinion of the house manager.

We have several times shelved expensive pictures, bought and paid for, because they were below our standard. When a picture is not high-grade we don't say it is in our ads. When we have a knockout we go the limit on it and our patrons trust us and respond. In conclusion, therefore, plenty of advertising, and all of it truthful advertising, intelligently placed in a field in which there is business capable of development, will make a millionaire out of any exhibitor.

The Best Exploitation Stunt of the Week

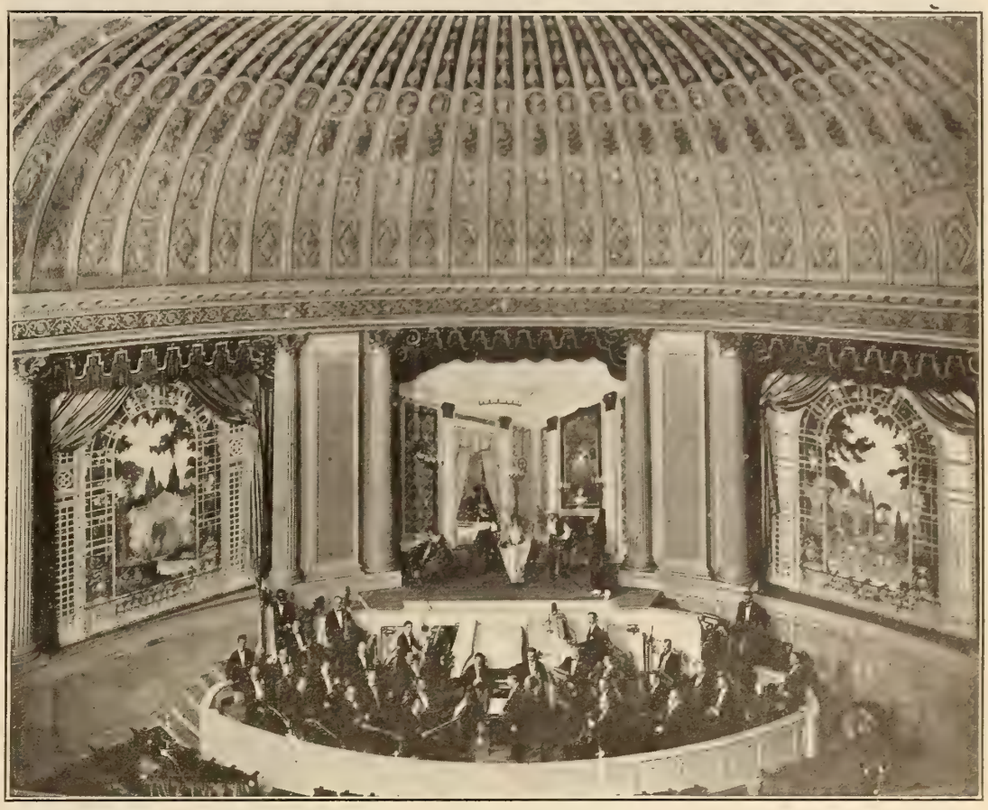
Feld, the Ladies' Home Journal Man, and a Ladies' "Ready-to-Wear" Store, Co-operate in Advertising "The Firing Line"

TAKING advantage of an idea at the psychological moment is explified in the story of how Milton H. Feld, manager of the Newman theatre, Kansas City, exploited "The Firing Line," starring Irene Castle.

Mr. Feld may not read the "Ladies' Home Journal," but his wife does, and when the July number came into the Feld domicile the three-page layout concerning Mrs. Castle which the paper carried, soon was the subject of conversation. It is to be imagined that the Newman's manager wasn't especially interested in the clothes which Mrs. Castle was alleged to be wearing, according to the Journal story, or of any of the other reading matter that went to make up a part of the three-page layout, but he was interested in the fact that here was a chance to make some money out of the incident of the periodical devoting so much space to a star who was going to be the attraction at his theatre in the near future.

For Feld to have an idea is to mean action with a big A. His first move was to get in touch with the local representative of the Curtis Publishing Company, which edits the "Ladies' Home Journal," and between the two live wires they enlisted a Kansas City ladies' ready-to-wear store, for a co-operative advertising and fashion show display. Then came the "Midsummer Style Review." Beautiful gowns and frocks similar to those described in the Journal as being worn by Mrs. Castle in the picture were selected from the store mentioned and displayed on live maniquins at each of the de luxe performances given at the Newman while "The Firing Line" was being run.

Mr. Feld staged his fashion show with care. An appropriate stage setting, beautifully furnished, was prepared, and the maniquins paraded about in the handsome gowns to enthusiastic "Oh's" from the crowds of the feminine sex which crowded the theatre during the engagement.. Mr. Feld, of course, had to let Kansas City know about his "Midsummer Style Review," and in this he again enlisted the Curtis Publishing Company's representative. Because the Newman was giving the "Ladies' Home Journal" publicity, the Curtis man was willing to give the theatre some extra exploitation.



Fashion Show at the Newman, Kansas City, during the engagement of Irene Castle in "The Firing Line"

A special half sheet poster Manager Feld printed for his Irene Castle engagement

In the drug stores of the city 300 window displays were arranged with co-operative advertising on the Newman's attraction, "The Firing Line,', and the "Ladies' Home Journal.

Small posters calling attention to the fact that the Castle gowns were featured in the Journal issue were used, and then Mr. Feld had some posters printed in which "The Firing Line," featuring Mrs. Castle was announced.

Next came the newspapers. Mr. Feld bought liberal space much more than he ordinarily uses and framed his ads with care.

The result of all this publicity was splendid business all through the engagement. It was during one of the hottest weeks in the summer, and Kansas City certainly knows what hot weather means.

Besides boosting his receipts, Mr. Feld figures that he attracted a lot of his best people, those who usually do not attend the theatre in hot weather, and who probably would not have been regulars again until Fall, back into the picture habit again and therefore the effects of his exploitation will be felt for many weeks to come.

As we said in the beginning, it pays to take advantage of such incidents as the one we have described concerning the story about Mrs. Castle. Mr. Feld might have drifted along without doing anything extra on this picture and played to regular business. Instead he was awake, had an idea and used it, the result being many extra dollars profit. This is showmanship. The kind which lifts the motion picture from the plane on which it has existed too long and places it among the professions.

New Theater Planned for Shreveport, La.

SHREVEPORT, LA., is to have a new motion picture palace which will cost upwards of two hundred thousand dollars and seat well over a thousand people, according to the Shreveport Times of August 9th.

The new house will be constructed largely by local capital and will be devoted entirely to screen productions.

Producers are said to be interested in the project to some extent.

An Extra Bit of Courtesy Which Pays

MANAGER LEO LANDAU, manager of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee is giving his patrons a bit of extra service this summer which is being greatly appreciated and which is helping swell the box office receipts of the Butterfly.

Attendants whose sole duty it is to pass cool spring water (Imagine this in the town which made Schlitz famous) in paper cups to all patrons during Butterfly performances. The amount of water the people who patronize the Butterfly consumes is surprising and Mr. Landau is authority for the statement that it is one of the best little stunts he has ever inauguarated.

Another innovation at the Butterfly is the insertion of snow and ice scenes in the current weeklies. He asserts that the psychological effect of these arctic scenes has a pronounced tendency toward making his summer patrons more comfortable.

Burlesque Taboo in Grand Rapids So Bathing Girls Made a Hit

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., hasn't had a burlesque show since the first fur trader came down Grand River and bartered a tin whistle with the Indians for the carp fishing rights in that good old stream. Maybe that's why Mack Sennett's "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" and the Mack Sennett bathing girls who accompanied it made such a big hit in the town where furniture comes from. Maybe it was because Manager Harvey Arlington of the Orpheum theater, where the production appeared, everlastingly lined the whole sidewalk in front of his place of business with large frames containing pictures of the bathing girls, and maybe it was because the Strand theater, which is conducted by the Consolidated Theaters, Inc., the same company which conducts the Orpheum, has been running Sennett two reelers two days a week, thus giving the people of the Michigan town a chance to see what the Sennett girls look like. But, anyway, the film and the rest of the show opened up at the Orpheum on a Sunday, and when Manager Arlington came out with the statement that all records had been broken it was no press agent stuff, for there was S. R. O. in the theater that day and enough of a mob outside, waiting for a chance to get in to lead the casual observer into the idea that somebody was giving away money in the vicinity of the theater lobby. Monday night, which everybody in the theatrical business knows, is a bad night for patronage, the same thing was repeated, and during the rest of the week the attendance records went way above any records previously recorded. The bathing girl pictures were used lavishly in display advertisements in the newspapers previous to and during the run of the film. And then, too, the little telegraph story carried by one of the news services to the effect that the girls had been arrested over in the east for not having enough material in their bathing suits helped a little bit. But the big fact is that because Grand Rapids hadn't had any—um!—er!—"limb" shows in a long time helped a whole lot. The only musical comedies the Furniture City now gets show at the Powers theater, a standard price house, and these are rather few. The Majestic Gardens, which formerly was a big musical comedy house, now is a picture theater, and the old Smith's Opera house, formerly the town's only burlesque theater, now is the City Rescue mission, the mission people having purchased the place and remodelled it after a fight by ministers and others on the continuance of burlesque in the city. Since then one or two attempts to introduce burlesque have been made, but all have met with failure, due to the powerful opposition. So, really, Grand Rapids has had very little chance to see—"limb" shows. Of course, the Sennett picture wasn't burlesque, neither were the stunts pulled off by the bathing girls, but Grand Rapids certainly did enjoy the show—and paid the bill.

During their stay the girls taxied to one of the local newspaper offices, and as they were clad in their bathing suits the paper nearly suspended publication.

Special Effort on "The White Heather" Which Was Productive of Results

THE Princess theatre, of Denver, Col., one of the two houses owned by Greaves and Ellison, prominent western theatrical men, is sponsor for one of the cleverest lobby displays which has come to the attention of this department in some time.

The feature which this display exploited is "The White Heather," a "water" subject in which sailing vessels and deep sea diving are prominently identified with the action.

By the use of a miniature schooner, fully equipped with masts, sails, etc., on a scenic sea the Princess had an object which attracted a lot of attention, while the sails were utilized for reading matter advertising the picture.

The diving suit shown in the accompanying photograph is the real thing, having been obtained from a local concern which uses the articles in its work.

Credit for the idea goes to Thomas Sullivan, the Princess manager, assisted, of course, by a competent scenic artist.

In connection with the lobby display, lithographs were used liberally and the picture had a good campaign of newspaper advertising.

Co-operative Advertising Captures Fans of Rockford, Ill.

THE Orpheum theatre, Rockford, Ill., has recently accomplished gratifying results on "Upstairs and Down," through a tie-up in co-operative advertising with Rockford merchants and newspapers.

First of all, arrangements were made with the Simon Drug Company, the largest drug store in Rockford, situated at the most important car transfer point in the town, to devote two of its windows to Olive Thomas and her picture, especial stress being placed on the Upstairs and Down Sundae, which is also featured in this concern's advertisements.

Second on the list is Leath's, the largest furniture store in Rockford. Despite the earlier decision of this company to allow nothing to conflict with its annual August furniture sale, it was finally induced to call this sale an "Upstairs and Down" Sale, which meant that all the windows and all their advertisements on this important event carried the name of the Thomas picture throughout the town and the surrounding territory.

The third item is the two largest confectionery and ice cream stores in Rockford which also featured the Upstairs and Down Sundae.

The fourth piece of co-operation which was effected was with George Kraft's 5 and 10 cent store, the largest of its kind in Rockford. Kraft's windows were literally plastered with photographs of Olive Thomas, and also with stills from "Upstairs and Down," as well as copies of the song of the same title which was inspired by the photoplay and dedicated to the star.

The fifth and perhaps the biggest "scoop" of all was arranged when Ashton's, Rockford's largest department store, consented to devote its various windows and department sales for ten days to Olive Thomas and "Upstairs and Down."

Sixth is the "Upstairs and Down" week arranged for Harlem Park, Rockford's amusement center, which was held August 4th to 11th. "Upstairs and Down" Fox Trot contests and the other amusement park co-operative stunts which have already been put over in various cities were featured there.

In addition to this extensive exploitation program, the widest which has ever been put into effect in any but the very largest cities, Mr. Grampp, the proprietor of the Orpheum, made a thorough tie-up with the local newspapers both in their news and advertising columns.

How New York Stages the Show

THE men who control the destinies of the three large motion picture theatres on Broadway, the Rialto, the Strand and the Rivoli are not novices in the amusement field. They have had a long experience and during this period of catering to public wants in the matter of entertainment, they have developed an intuition which anticipates the ever changing desires of the theatre going populace.

It is therefore safe to assert that the constantly increasing attention which is being given to the scenic settings and the scenic films, is not the mere whim of these men, nor yet the only method of providing an artistic touch to their presentations.

This week, all three theatres have provided canvasses of real beauty which set off some special number and on each program is offered a scenic film gem of rare excellence.

It is not so long since that scenic reels were patiently endured by the average person who attended the picture theatre. They were "fillers" reluctantly booked because a program must contain some variety and added some fifteen minutes to the period for which film numbers must be provided. Now all this prejudice against the scenic is a thing of the past. People who go to the theatre, want them and enjoy them. No part of the program is received with greater enthusiasm. All of which rather proves that we move in circles.

The first motion pictures were largely scenics and when the inanimate objects shown failed to amuse longer, drama, that never old subject, began to demand attention relegating the scenic to the rear. Now it would seem that we have come again to the beginning of our circle of motion picture events, having become tired for the time being of the "Pearls of Pearline" or the "Manuevers of Maud."

Rivoli Theatre

THE Rivoli theatre is again to the front in artistic presentation of its program in at least one item, that of blending the scenic offering, an especially effective stage setting and song number and the feature picture so nicely that to the audience it would seem that the three numbers had been produced for this method of showing.

The overture at the Rivoli this week is selections from the works of Moritz Moskowski, consisting of what is termed a "potpurri" of this popular composer's numbers in which are introduced a Spanish dance, Malaguenna, the popular serenade number and a tarantelle.

The overture is played without stage settings, and with the house dark and the orchestra flooded in amber.

There is much that lends itself to orchestrations for popular consumption in the works that have been utilized for this week's opening bill, and the music rendered holds the attention throughout its full length.

The Rivoli Pictorial opens with Pathe's views of U. S. Soldiers in review at Vincennes, France, with a strip from Kinograms showing snow to the depth of several inches, being shoveled at Ranier National Park, in mid-July.

International's first contribution is a desert of white sand, which in the picture looks much like snow, with Pathe again contributioning with a drill of boy naval recruits at Grays, England.

International furnishes the next portion with views of children at play in the public play grounds at Nyack, with yachting scenes next, by Pathe, at the recent races at Marblehead, Mass.

Gaumont presents views of the first California aerial mail line at San Francisco, with International's views of the Knights of Columbus celebration at Buffalo following this bit.

The first authentic picture of the actual signing of the Peace Treaty is presented by Pathe, which precedes International's views of the Pacific Fleet at home, closing the number.

Manhattan Beach March till (T) Shovel snow from roads.
Dream Kisses till Gray's England.
The B'hoys of Tipperary till (T) Poor children of tenements.
See Saw (segue).
Jack and Jill till (T) Marblehead, Mass.
Old Cremonne (when airplane is in motion orchestra dim down) till (T) Knights of Columbus head gets decoration.
When the Boys Come Home till (T) San Francisco greets big Pacific fleet.
Pomp and circumstance to finish.

The third offering on the program is violin solos played by Alberto Bachman, entitled (a) Melody in F Sharp-Minor, (b) Rondo Des Lutins, and rendered with a stage setting of rare beauty.

With the house dark, the musician appears as the proscenium curtains are parted in what appears to be a studio room on the top floor of a building, with a glass roof, slanting down toward the rear of the stage. At the right of the singer the room ends with a wall of plush, or what might be construed to be a dividing curtain. On the right is a student lamp, and at the back a potted palm. The stage and singer is flooded in green, lending the effect of a moonlight night outside, and the violinist is centered in an amber spot.

The numbers rendered impress the layman that great technique is required in the playing, and are pleasing especially the bird effects of the second offering.

The Bruce scenic is "Venice, Queen of the Adriatic," and in its projection begins a very novel and artistic presentation of three numbers so synchronized that they appear as one.

Venetienne Barcarolle (segue).
Boating Song (Mendelssohn) til (T) Here it is very easy to forget the world.
Barcarolle from Tales of Heaven.
Barcarolle (segue into duet).

Near the close of the Bruce Educational De Luxe, wonderfully tinted, and showing Venice and its waterways to great advantage, the picture screen is covered gradually from the flys with nets which give the image projected a "depth," and also serves to dim the projection. Gradually the image dims out to complete darkness with the auditorium inky black. Then without perceptible wait the dim star is seen on the horizon of a canvas Venice sky, which is gradually lighted until a scene from one of the cities water streets is dimly seen. From off stage the first notes of "The Tales of Hoffman," sung by Mary Ball, soprano, and Mary Newton, contralto, are heard. Soon the prow of a gondola comes in sight with the singers and an oarsman seated within it.

The craft moves slowly across the stage, disappearing just at the finish of the number, when the scene is again darkened gradually, and what would seem to be the end of the scenic film again coming into view, dimly at first, and then to full light. However, the film projected is a special strip which precedes the feature picture, which has Venice as its locale in early sequences, and which show its first action on the balconies of two adjoining residences of that city.

The effect is one of the most artistic ever conceived in the presentation of pictures and reflects great credit on the ingenuity of Artist Wenger, who designed the stage settings which blends with the film offerings so exceptionally well.

The feature picture is "A Society Exile," from the pen of Henry Arthur Jones, master English dramatist, with Elsie Ferguson in the star's role.

As may be expected, a story from this source will have a logical well developed plot, and in this

Another reproduction of famous paintings used as stage settings by Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo case not so typically English as are many of Mr. Jones' plays, that much of the interest is of foreign flavor.

The cast a rather large one, has many distinguished names, beside that of Miss Ferguson, including Julia Dean, William P. Carlton and War[illegible]

The offering is wholly satisfying, especially well suited to a Metropolitan audience. It was directed by George Fitzmaurice, and the scenario is by Ouida Bergere.

The comedy is "Close to Nature," with Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven, and marks the return of this musical comedy couple to the screen in their first Capitol offering, released under the Goldwyn banner. It will be remembered that Mr. and Mrs. De Haven appeared some few years ago in several screen productions, and therefore are not strangers to this form of acting.

Their first presentation of two reelers under the Capitol Brand promises rather well, and presents the pair as newly marrieds, or least not so long marrieds on the annual vacation. Resort has been made to trick camera work at times, but the picture cannot be termed "slapstick," and carries a semblance of a story which if not exactly new has been treated in a novel way. We believe the new comedians will be welcomed by the picture-going public.

Rialto Theatre

THERE is a general air of happiness at the Rialto this week, in that the whole bill is the variety that tends to cheer which is a God's blessing in these times of rainy dreary weather, transportation difficulties and other small matters like the actors' strike. At the Rialto you may forget your troubles for there is nothing but which is joyous exhibited for your entertainment.

The overture selected is a symphonic poem, "The Spinning Wheel of Omphale," composed by Camille Saint-Saens, one of four similar subjects written by [illegible] mythology. This one represents the hero Herakles in bondage to Queen Omphale. He is compelled to wear women's clothes and spin while the Queen assumed his lions skin and club. The composer is authority for the statement that the subject of this poem is feminine seductiveness and the triumph of feebleness over force. Translated from the language of the musician, this means perhaps the fact that women rule the world, which leads us to remark that they rule the amusement world and that the program this week is decidedly one to please the feminine mind albeit that mere man may find himself entertained in its seven numbers of refined comedy and music, each as we have said thrice, with no trace of gloom.

The overture begins with the house dark and the orchestra flooded in purple, stage settings being withheld to later numbers. In the music of this attractive poem, there is a hint of that which the composer spoke, relative to the power of women, but more fully suggested in the number is an appeal which seems to rest the mind with its soothing softness, for this is not an overture of brass domination and blatant blare. The strings and reeds carry the burden.

Near the end of the offering the lights gradually dim and with the orchestra still playing so softly that the music drifts back to you as if from a distance. A special scenic hand-colored film, one of the subjects which can never be duplicated because its original which the camera transferred to the sensitized film has been ground and torn by the four years of war until nothing remains of this beauty spot but the bare earth.

Yes, the scenic is or rather was from Brueges, Belgium, as it existed before that fateful day in August, 1914. This subject projecting probably seven or eight minutes, is the most beautiful scenic ever caught before the lens and is a laboratory triumph in the coloring, all hand work, but very delicately tinted, with no hint of the gaudiness and unnatural shades usually identifying the hand-colored picture. Blending as it does into the orchestration without title, one feels as if a magic wand had transported him from the theatre into this land of beauty, and when the blare of a stirring march ushers in the first strip of the Rialto Magazine, one experiences a shock as if he had been awakened from a dream in which he were journeying in fairyland.

The first showing in the Rialto Magazine is a strip from Gaumont of the Pacific Fleet in review on the West Coast, with views of girls boxing by International, following to be succeeded by another Kinogram's strip of the recent society event, a dog show at Santa Barbara, Cal.

The "Happy Hooligan" cartoon comedy is next, this week entitled "The Great Handicap," in which the redoubtable "Happy" tells of a great automobile race in which he was a victor.

Pathe again contributes to the Magazine by an educational strip showing the sugar industry in Cuba, with another educational subject, "Tuna Fishing at Santa Barbara, Cal.," by Gaumont next.

Pathe follows these with another cartoon comedy, "Blot 'Em Out," a timely subject on the high cost of living. This portion is followed by International's showing "Doughboy" visiting the battlefield of Chateau Thierry, with Pathe's views of the defenders of Chateau Thierry, the "Devil Dogs" on review at Washington.

Paramount-Artcraft March to finish.

The first vocal number is "The Elixir of Love," sung by Martin Brefel, the Rialto tenor. The number was lighted in a scarlet floor, with the singer within a spot.

The feature photoplay offered this week, is "Bill Henry" with Charles Ray starred, and strongly supported by an excellent cast, including Edith Roberts and Bert Woodruff. The feature is one evidently carefully prepared for the Ince star, but that rather adds to the offering, as much characterization of the Ray variety makes the rather slender story entertaining. The feature is comedy throughout and one of the especially strong "happy" numbers of the bill. The picture was directed by Jerome Strong, from the scenario prepared by Julien Josephson. The story is from the pen of Lois Zellner.

The plot concerns Charles Ray as "Bill Henry Jenkins" during his regime as clerk in his uncle's hotel. "Bill Henry" is a "yokel," but he wins at poker, defeats the nefarious villain and finds a wife, all within a few weeks.

177 (D) Uncle accuses Ray.
In St. Malo (T) Do you believe what Rogers says.
II (D) Ray rides wheel to return to hotel.
Theme—1 chorus fast (D) Villain is taken away.

The fifth number is a double one combining the instrumental and the vocal. The number opens with the orchestra playing excerpts from the ever popular light opera, "Madame Sherry." As the song hit of the production is reached, that tuneful waltz song, "Every Little Movement Has a Meaning All Its Own," Miss Vera Myers appears from the left of the stage singing the number. Slowly and in time to the waltz music, she sings her way across the stage and disappears on the right at the finish. Prettily attired and with changing spot lights following her, the number is a novelty very pleasing to both the eye and ear.

The comedy is a Mack Sennett, "The Dentist," a broad farce using the dentist's office, that ever productive source of slap stick comedy, for some new stunts in mirth making. The offering may be considered vulgar by some, but will probably pass as good entertainment by the majority. The story value is largely absent, but that does not detract from a picture of this kind.

The Curse of an Aching Tooth (T)—Screening.

Ask Dad (repeat chorus (T) An eccentric patient.
Fluffy Ruffles.

The organ solo is "Largo," played by Arthur Depew.

The feature photoplay for next week will be Tom Moore in "Heart's Ease."

Strand Theatre

THE Strand too has prepared a stage setting, which at this theatre serves to provide atmosphere for the romantic numbers of the favorite opera that is being played as the overture.

The canvas masks the proscenium opening, taking the place for the time being of the velvet curtains. At first glance it would appear that columns, several in number, had been erected across the arch, ending at the top in a lattice work, and providing the appearance of a porch; out from which you look into a sky tinted and beautiful on which is miraged the immortal Joan D'Arc riding her prancing steed as the larger figure, while higher in the sky faintly outlined are the angels waiting to receive her spirit. Nearer the horizon are the blue clad figures of the French soldiers who were led to victory by their faith in this girl of bygone days. As the overture proceeds the lights are dimmed with floods in blue on the canvas, giving it realism which it lacked in the glare of the stronger white of natural electrics.

The overture being rendered is selections from "Cavalleria Rusticana," a subject dear to the hearts of every music lover and which never grows old with playing. The Strand orchestra is giving it a splendid color.

The Topical Review opens with Pathe offerings showing the parade of U. S. Troops in France, and the first official pictures of the signing of the Peace Treaty, with Kinogram views of the cross country aeroplane contest at Hazlehurst following.

Pathe again contributes with views of the yacht races at Marblehead, Mass., snow scenes in midsummer at Ranier National Park, and views of the Prince of Wales landing in Canada next, both by Kinograms. The Topics of the Day follow these strips, with a Pathe color subject following to be succeeded by Kinograms views of the recent dog show at Santa Barbara, Cal., and Pathe's "Kiddie Navy" views.

International's first contribution is the Pacific fleet on the West Coast with Pathe again contributing the closing strip, with scenes from the review of the "Devil Dogs" at Washington.

"Tumble In" selection.

The third number is the vocal solo by Carlo Ferretti rendering "Lolita," a Spanish serenade with the singer in a spot and the stage flooded in amber.

This number is followed by the feature, "Upstairs," a semi-farcial offering with Mabel Normand starred. In support of Miss Normand is a rather large cast which includes Cullen Landis as the hero.

Novelett in No. 4 till (S) After detective throws badge away, Normand and bellboy on steps.
Love's Fancies

The second vocal offering is by Eldora Stanford, the Strand soprano, who renders two numbers (a) "Lullaby," by Kreisler, and (b) "Annie Laurie." Both numbers are rendered without special lightings, except a spot for the singer.

The Outing-Chester is "Fiddlers and Acrobats," a subject dealing with unusual types of animal life. It is interesting and unusual.

The orchestration selection number, seven on the program, is "Jewels of Madonna," an effective score rendered with much genius by the Strand orchestra under the conductorship of Carl Edouarde.

The comedy selected this week is "Be My Wife," with Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels in the leading roles. This offering is of the usual Lloyd type, with much action and classed as broad comedy. It amuses and again demonstrates the distinctive personality of the star.

The organ solo is a selection from "A Royal Vagabond."

The feature for next week will be Jack Pickford in "Burglary By Proxy."

Academy of Music

THERE is variety in good entertainment at the Academy of Music this week in the big double feature program which has been provided at the 14th street house. The first half of the overture is selections from Victor Herbert's tuneful composition "The Fortune Teller," one of the most popular of this prolific composer's works. The (B) number by the strings is an intermezzo "For-Get-Me-Not." Both numbers are pleasing.

The stage setting provided this week, while not especially elaborate lends an atmosphere well suited for a summer showing. The permanent architecture of the stage at the Academy is of porch-like construction, huge pillars extending up each side of the proscenium opening and capped with a cornice which hides the flys. The canvases used at this theatre are hung back of the picture screen which is removed for the overture. This week the canvas represents a starless night, with storm clouds dimply showing on the horizon. At intervals lightning flashes just a glow on the canvas add to the impression that you are looking out from a porch into a mid-summer night sky, with a thunder shower a possibility. At each side of the stage canvases of trees and bushes mask the main canvas and add to the porch idea.

The International News Pictorial contains the following events: Views of U. S. soldiers getting a vacation amid scenic beauties at Cloudcraft, N. M., the Pacific fleet on the West Coast, the discharged soldiers arranging for new positions at the Government office established for this purpose in New York, the Mutt and Jeff cartoon, showing these characters operating a saloon and dance hall in Alaska, "Kiddies Heaven" at Nyack, Knights of Columbus ceremonies at Buffalo, Red Cross workers showing the methods by which drowning persons may be rescued by the swimmer, and an explosion of ammunition at Le Brudget, France.

The first feature is "A Rough Riding Romance" starring Tom Mix, a Western subject of much clean comedy and clever horseback riding which ranks with not only the best of this star's productions but with any subject of its kind produced in some time.

The sixth number on the bill is an orchestration rendition of excerpts from the opera "Phedre" by Massenett by all instruments and a serenade by Biernne on the strings.

This is followed by the second feature, an Anita Stewart subject, "Shadows of Her Path," released by Vitagraph with Harry Morey and E. K. Lincoln in support.

The comedy is "Chop Suey and Co."

Live News from the Producers

Chaplin Direct to the Exhibitors

A DISTINCT innovation which is calculated to deal a body blow to Mister High-Cost-Of-Living, is announced by W. H. Productions.

It is pronounced most timely as it is a direct-from-producer-to-consumer plan of distributing and, in this one instance at least, dispenses with the much maligned middleman.

Every alert theatre-owner in the United States is now enabled to buy and own outright a one-reel Chaplin comedy with three other stars; Mabel Normand, Chester Conklin and Mack Swain.

W. H. Productions has secured the negative of "A Gentleman of Nerve" with these four comedy stars, and offers brand new positive prints on the subject direct to exhibitors without any reservations except that no duplication is permitted.

The title of this subject has been changed to "Some Nerve," and the sponsors declare that with four such high priced and well known stars this is the strongest big-little feature on the market today. They call attention to the possibilities of the initial run and that the additional business brought in will more than repay the exhibitor the price he pays for the print. And then he can store the print and plume himself upon owning a Chaplin outright.

Fifteen years ago the majority of the pioneer exhibitors were compelled to buy all their film outright instead of renting it. They played it several times and then would send it around their immediate adjoining territory and make it more than pay for itself.

W. H. Productions to Sell Charlie Chaplin Print Outright

Of course, with the rapid increase of theatres which came later and evoluted from the innumerable "store-shows" into the great amusement structures of today, the great variety of subjects necessary to meet the demand, and the dependable distributing system needed to take care of the ever increasing volume of releases, automatically created the exchange centers and established the rental system.

H. J. Shepard, of W. H. Productions, declares that while the idea of selling direct to the exhibitors instead of renting the film temporarily through some exchange is not a new and original idea, his company in reverting to the vogue of distributing methods used fifteen and more years ago, introduces a distinct innovation, and one which he enthusiastically anticipates will prove a popular hit with the exhibitors.

"Although the method is an old one the film is not an old subject," said Mr. Shepard. "It is one of the most popular of the ever popular Keystone single reel comedies and one of those strong single reelers that will never die. This comedy will be just as popular today as it was several years ago and it will be just as much appreciated five years from now as well."

The new selling method announced by the W. H. Productions on "Some Nerve" will enable the exhibitors who acquire this comedy feature to enjoy the proceeds of the first run and then store it upstairs in the garret for awhile. There will be no advance-deposits money to ever quarrel about. It is also pointed out that there will be no express charges every time an exhibitor wants to show it on his screen.

He simply orders the operator to skip up into the garret and dust off "Some Nerve." Then he announces that four big stars will appear in a composite return date at his theatre the following week. By request. Charlie Chaplin, Mabel Normand, Chester Conklin and Mack Swain.

Then he proceeds to collect, and every cent he takes in is one-hundred per cent net. This is all according to Mr. Shepard and the experiment of W. H. Productions is expected to be watched with keen interest.

Brand new titles, etc., have been inserted and they claim that "Some Nerve" was selected and reserved by them, out of the entire line of Keystone Comedies they purchased, as the one big strong feature to introduce this unique line of exploitation.

Klutho Disposes of Sunshine Comedies

H. J. Klutho, president of the Feature Film Co., who is producing Sunbeam Comedies under the shades of palm trees in Florida is an enthusiastic visitor here.

He is enthusiastic because the Sunbeam Comedies are going big. After a two months' campaign all of the territory east of the Mississippi has been sold except New York City and state. He says he hasn't tried hard to sell these as they will be glad to come in line later.

"When you give to the public eighteen hundred to five thousand feet of comedy made up of a possible story, funny situations interwoven with slap-stick and beautiful scenery for a reasonable price you can sell all you can make," he says.

"The trouble I see with most short-reel comedy is that the stories are impossible and the situations in most cases so manufactured that it becomes apparent long before the thing happens that is supposed to bring a laugh."

It may be that Mr. Klutho will turn over all unsold rights to the Arrow Film Corporation.

Country Covered for First Runs

WITH the opening of the new season and the Selective Booking form of distribution by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the week commencing August 31, the company announces that arrangements have been completed for the first run of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures in practically all of the major cities in the United States.

"Taking into account," said Walter E. Greene, vice-president, in charge of distribution, "many of the statements recently published and attributed to theatre managers that they did not approve of the Selective Booking form of distribution, our experience in dealings with hundreds of accounts during the last six weeks, and particularly the major first run accounts in the leading cities, has convinced us that the Selective Booking method is not only the best and most progressive that can be devised, but because of its flexibility it is adaptable to local conditions in any city anywhere in the country. Selective Booking, as we interpret it, means the selection of one of several ways for the exhibitor to arrange for his season's product. The Selective Booking combines all the best that any other methods of distribution contain, with the additional benefit that it permits the exhibitor and ourselves to come to an understanding of service under whatever plans seem best suited for each individual theatre."

Big Centers Close for F. P.-Lasky Films First Runs

Mr. Al. Lichtman, general manager of distribution, who returned recently from a visit to some of the leading cities in the East and Middle West, declares that everywhere the exhibitors are pleased with the Selective Booking form of distribution.

"First-runs of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures in New York City," said Mr. Lichtman, "have been arranged for the Rialto and Rivoli theatres and B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre, which will be devoted to extended engagements of the super-productions. The Broadway will enter on its new policy on August 31st with the premieres of George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man." In addition to the Rialto and Rivoli, which will be full week's stands, three other theatres will be devoted exclusively to motion picture entertainment, with the feature as an entire week's attraction. These are the Hamilton, Jefferson and Regent theatres.

"In Philadelphia Paramount-Artcraft Pictures will be shown, as they have in the last five years, in the Stanley Circuit of theatres and in the principal Nirdlinger houses.

"Arrangments for the exhibition of the entire year's output have been completed in Pittsburgh, where the New Grand theatre will devote practically all of its time to Paramount-Artcraft features, as well as the Liberty and Regent theatres in East Liberty, The Strand, Plaza and other Rowland and Clark Houses.

"Paramount-Artcraft Pictures will be shown during the coming year in the four principal Boston motion picture theatres, including the Park theatre, which will give extended runs to the super-production; the Beacon and Modern, and the Fenway theatres. The Strand theatre in Providence, as well as the Modern theatre in the same city, will exhibit them.

E. J. Flynn Joins Fox Directorial Staff

The most recent addition to the staff of Fox Film Corporation directors is Emmett J. Flynn.

Mr. Flynn is a director of reputation in every branch of motion picture production from two-reel comedies to special features and lengthy serials, and he has guided many popular screen stars through some of their most successful starring vehicles.

The first picture which Mr. Flynn will direct for William Fox is a William Russell production of the Victory series, and it will follow, according to present plans, the first of the Russell pictures, "Sacred Silence," now nearing completion under the direction of Harry Millarde.

At the upper left is a moment in a Paramount-Briggs comedy, and adjoining it on the right is William S. Hart, presented by Thomas H. Ince in "Wagon Tracks." The young lady silhouetted alone is Jane Novak, and the indignant Miss getting her hand kissed is Dorothy Gish, in "Nobody Home," a new Paramount

Pathe Salesmen Have Big Time in "City"

The five salesmen winners of the Pathe Honor Month Contest, who spent last week in New York City as guests of the Pathe Home Office, returned to their respective territories on Sunday after six of the busiest days of their lives.

They were shown New York as most New Yorkers have seen it, and on leaving for their home towns expressed themselves as willing to enter another sales contest whenever the officials of Pathe see fit to launch one.

The out of town guests were Jack Auslet, New Orleans; Harry Taylor, Kansas City; H. R. Calloway, Cincinnati; March Wood, Oklahoma City, and D. C. Stearns, Cleveland.

"Better Times" Has Long Run on Coast

"Better Times," the second release of the Brentwood Film Corporation, released through the Exhibitors' Mutual and produced by King Vidor, is destined to have almost as good a run in Los Angeles as this company's first release, "The Turn in the Road." "Better Times" opened at the Symphony Theatre three weeks ago, and will probably be kept on for one or more weeks, acording to statements of Messrs. Breckweeder and Lazarus.

Novelist Indicts Bolshevism

H. C. Witwer Novelizes "Everybody's Business;" Wide Distribution Plan

A REMARKABLE innovation for the publicising of a motion picture is being inaugurated by W. H. Productions Company in the exploitation of "Everybody's Business" which is described as the bible of Americanism. A prominent author has novelized a story from the photo play. H. C. Witwer, who is the author of the novels entitled "Baseball to Riches," "A Smile a Minute" and "Alec the Great," and who is a contributor to the "American" magazine, "Collier's Weekly," "Cosmopolitan" magazine, and the New York Mail Syndicate, has written a 30,000 word novelization of "Everybody's Business."

A number of critics who have read this story consider it the best thing that Mr. Witwer has done to date. His foreword for the novel is as follows:

"Written with the fervent hope that this novel will arouse a latent Americanism of every human who calls America 'Home'!"

A few extracts from the story showing its versatility and the Americanism it breathes are as follows:

"Bolshevism has attacked America and we have got to fight that as hard as if it was Germany and fight it to a finish—or else turn our country over to those filthy, long-haired degenerate murderers whose creed is to stab in the back, dynamite homes, parcel their women among them as if they were cattle, and attack any institution, government or religion that stands for sanity, morality and civilization!"

"If one of those Reds approaches you with those contemptible lying attacks against your Government, don't argue with him, knock him down! It's up to us to run those Reds out of the United States and show our country why and how the American has won the respect and admiration of all the world. Don't let the Reds take the white and blue out of our flag!"

Arrangements are now being made for the widest possible distribution of Mr. Witwer's story in connection with the release of the photodrama.

"Red Viper" at Rialto for Trade Showing

The Tyrad Pictures announces that they will present "The Red Viper" at the Rialto Theatre, New York City, Tuesday, August 26th, at 10 a. m. sharp. The trade is cordially invited and no admission cards are necessary.

Special music has been arranged for the occasion and prominent officials of the Government, city and state will be present.

The cast includes Gareth Hughes, Ruth Stonehouse, Jack Gilbert, Irma Harrison, Alberta Lee, Alfred Hollingsworth. The story is written by Winifred Dunn and directed by Jacques Tyrol. It was announced at the office of the Tyrad Pictures that as many as one hundred inquiries have been received from different state right buyers. The Tyrad Pictures will keep New York and northern New Jersey for themselves. It is announced that the production will be released the first week in September.

Jackie Saunders in a World Picture

World Pictures announces the engagement of Jackie Saunders for the star role in its forthcoming production of "Dad's Girl," a well known play that is now being scenarioized for pictures.

Miss Saunders is no new comer in the picture industry. She began her career wth the Biograph Company, which has offtimes been referred to as the mother of stars. Her first picture engagement was shortly after she graduated from St. Joseph's Convent in Philadelphia, in which city she was born in 1892.

Successive engagements followed with Pathe Universal and Balboa. Her most prominent successes were made in "Shrine of Happiness," "Flirting Bride," "A Bit of Kindling," "Betty Be Good," "The Wildcat," and "Grip of Evil."

New Mark to Be Set by Pearl White Serial

Pearl White's latest Pathe serial, "The Black Secret," which will be released on November 9th, accentuates the already existing tendency to bring to the serial writing the greatest literary geniuses of the age, in the opinion of Paul Brunt, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Robert W. Chambers, the author of the "In Secret" stories on which "The Black Secret" is based, is acknowledged to be one of America's leading authors.

"The Black Secret" sets a new mark in serial production, and is, I believe, the forerunner of the serial of the future. The serial picture has always been popular, but never so popular as it is at present.

ANOTHER SCORE FOR MARY PICKFORD

FIRST National Exhibitors Circuit is preparing to give Exhibitors a surprise of their momentous lives—a pleasant surprise.

We know, because we spent two hours Saturday watching Mary Pickford surpass herself as a screen artiste. She did it in "The Hoodlum," and that's where the surprise will come in. It has been said that little Mary had reached her art's topmost rung. But in "The Hoodlum" she has run the extension ladder up and is climbing with renewed vigor.

Curious exhibitors who may seek the answer to this may find it in the fact that America's Sweetheart is working for herself—making her own pictures for First National. She knows her limits—and we venture they have not yet been reached—and she has gathered around her directors and experts who know pictures and how to make them, and who put their knowledge into practice.

We have not looked upon better photography in motion pictures than that in the footage of "The Hoodlum." We were never more impressed with the talent that belongs to this inimitable star. It is not going too far to say that she wields her "business" and "situations" better in this film than in any she has yet made. The appeal is irresistible and the humor so closely allied with Mary's name is accelerated to high speed and runs like a twin six.

We are unusually glad we are in the trade paper field, so we can see such unusual pictures before the rest of the world does. But for once we wish we were an exhibitor so we could run this production and "clean up."—LELAND S. FERGUSON.

Film Version of Popular Play

Monopol Believes It Has Sought for Comedy in "Alma, Where Do You Live?"

IT is believed by the sponsors for "Alma, Where Do You Live?" the Monopol Pictures Company production, that in this state rights attraction they will provide the market with the much sought after "comedy special" which buyers of territorial rights have been demanding for some time. Picturized from the Broadway play success of the same title, this feature unfolds a story containing a strong comedy element which has been interpreted by George Larkin and Ruth McTammany.

"Alma, Where Do You Live?" was written for the stage by Adolf Phillip in musical operetta form. It was originally played by the producer in a small hall in New York City on a stage twelve feet wide. It sprang into instant favor and in two hundred performances cleared for its owner fifty-six thousand dollars. Four weeks after its opening performance in its humble surroundings, "Alma, Where Do You Live?" was purchased by Joe Weber, the famous comedian. He immediately placed it in Weber's Broadway theatre, where it ran successfully for more than one year.

The Monopol film version of the stage success has retained all of the charm and delightful humor interpreted by Kitty Gordon and Joe Weber, and the situations which abound throughout the film are of the type which will keep motion picture audiences in a pleasant frame of mind from start to finish. The chorus of the famous song has been cleverly interwoven into the picture in such a manner as to cause spectators of the film to automatically hum and whistle the tune. Magnificent settings, views of Broadway night and stage life and society atmosphere permitting of beautiful gowns and pretty girls have been added to the Monopol film version of the play.

Basil King Speaks on Films

Author Starts for Western Goldwyn Studios; Pictures the Great Medium

COMING down from New Hampshire, Basil King, the eminent author, stopped in New York for a day on his way to the Goldwyn studios in California.

He has in mind a great story he wants to contribute directly to the screen, and goes west to consult about that as well as to okeh the scenario for "The Street Called Straight." He was ready to write his own scenario when the call came to go at once to Culver City, where Samuel Goldwyn and Rex Beach now are.

"When I tackled the scenario form, I realized at once my limitations," said Mr. King. "It was like trying to write a story in a language you didn't know. I didn't know the grammar or the idiom, so to speak. I am the more delighted to make the journey to see just how the continuity is developed. I shall require assistance, I see that, but I should like to have the last word on the script.

"I have had several of my novels done in pictures, the best work was the Goldwyn picture of 'The City of Comrades,' in which Tom Moore appeared. Jane Cowl and Ethel Barrymore have each been featured in a photoplay taken from two novels of mine. I am not a movie fan because my eyesight is bad and I do not see much of what is shown on the screen. But I believe the motion picture is the great medium for the expression of ideas and ideals in the future."

August 12th Basil King completed his latest novel and two days later arrived in New York. Besides the motion picture he will do in California, he will "hatch" another novel on the four-day jopurney to the coast. He feels that he is at the top of his creative power and qualified to handle subjects he has long had in mind.

Topical Receives Film from Expedition

Herbert Miles, as director, with Jack R. Young as cameraman, who left some time ago on the "Yacht Carman" for a trip to Rigolette, Labrador, for the purpose of surprising the industry with the best scenic and educational motion pictures, have just sent 15,000 feet of film which was received by the Topical Films Company.

Joseph R. Miles, of 220 West Forty-second Street, will soon have a trade showing in his private projection room of Hamilton River and Muskkrat Falls never yet caught by the camera.

Herbert Miles will not return until September 1, and has been out of communication since July 15.

"Weekly Indigestion" Fits Any Program

Being a news weekly pure and simple the newest Bulls-Eye novelty, "The Weakly Indigestion," can be booked in conjunction with any program without violating any existing contracts which the exhibitor has with his distributors, according to the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation's president, Milton L. Cohen. The only difference between "The Weakly Indigestion" and the current form of news weekly is the subjects.

The Bulls-Eye "weakly," which will be released in one reel, will film only subjects with a humorous element, or subjects that can be burlesqued, or satirized, without injuring any patron's feelings, says the Bulls-Eye publicity man. It is not a cartoon comedy, but another step in the motion picture progress.

Alter Studio to Make King Cole Comedies

Necessary changes in the studio leased by the newly formed Motion Picture Producing Company of America at Dongan Hills, Staten Island, will be completed within two or three weeks, when the company plans beginning work on the first of the forthcoming King Cole Comedies, in which Sammy Burns, the comedian, will be featured.

Later the company plans erecting a new studio on property in Brooklyn, which it has purchased.

A New Factor in Foreign Market

Guy Groswell Smith, Ltd., Starts Operations on Big Scale

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Guy Groswell Smith Ltd. of New York of the first plans of his new organization for enlargement of interest in American feature film productions in the foreign market.

Guy Groswell Smith, the president and general manager of the corporation has just returned from a three years' trip to the principal countries of the world outside of America. Associated in the new enterprise are J. J. McCarthy and Theodore Mitchell who have been prominently identified with the big productions of D. W. Griffith ever since the American director began his larger operations.

The first purchase made by the company and one which is a patent of what they intend to do in the matter of handling American subjects for foreign distribution is the world rights, outside of the United States and Canada, to D. W. Griffith's remarkably successful production of "Broken Blossoms" taken from the original stories of the Limehouse district of London by Thomas Burke.

It is further announced that Guy Groswell Smith Ltd. will present this work in the European and Asiatic field upon the same elaborate plan that has marked the handling of the Griffith pictures in this country by the men who are now closely identified with the Smith company. It is in reality a special service corporation formed to do big things in the foreign market based upon an expert study of varying conditions in the different sections of the new field with an idea of enlarging the scope of American productions and establishing closer and more satisfactory relations with the distributors of the old world.

During the three years that Mr. Smith spent in the foreign markets he had the opportunity of studying first hand existing conditions in that field and is prepared to make selections of features which are especially designed for foreign consumption. Heretofore this outlet has been neglected and often foreign buyers have been loaded up with American material that is essentially local to this country and possessed of no particular value in Europe or Asia and in part this likewise applies to South America.

"A careful consideration of conditions we found in Europe and the Far East together with South America" said Mr. Smith "prompted us to create this present organization."

"Our aim will be to satisfy the market" continued Mr. Smith "and at the same time make a fuller outlet for the American producer of the big things that have a cosmopolitan appeal. In the past the foreign buyers have too often been forced into the position of buying "a pig in a poke."

"The war has unquestionably opened up a greater interest in the right kind of American subjects. The success of our undertaking depends entirely upon the matter of judicious selection of film features. As the American producer grows more cosmopolitan in his viewpoint there is sure to be a finer variety from which to choose subjects for the foreign trade. Also the matter of necessary financial adjustments to meet prevailing conditions abroad will be a decided factor in the future success of this enterprise.

"We propose to select the feature films which our experience has taught us will make the strongest appeal to foreign film patrons and to demonstrate to the distributors that we can supply them with material that lends itself to special promotion and is going to make new patrons of the cinema houses abroad by increasing favor with the patrons of the picture houses in the different countries outside of Canada and the United States of America.

Pioneer Exchange Heads to Hold Meeting

Within the next week a general pow wow will be held in New York between the heads of the independent exchanges which are handling the Pioneer product throughout the country and the producers who are to make the pictures for and under the supervision of the Pioneer General Staff.

M. H. Hoffman as General Manager will preside at the meetings. Among those who are expected to be present are Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Co., of Boston; Floyd Brockell or Clyde Elliott of the Greater Stars of Chicago, and Charles D. Rosenthal and E. B. Mayer of the M. & R. exchanges in Frisco and Los Angeles.

The plans announced last week of the Pioneer's purpose to create a chain of co-operative exchanges extending across the continent are progressing, and it is expecteed that several other prominent film men, representing independent interests will take their places at the council table as members of the Pioneer's body of co-operative exchangemen.

Blackton Releases Through Pathe

Minimum of Six and a Maximum of Ten Films Yearly

COMMODORE J. STUART BLACKTON has just signed a contract whereby he will release his works, made in the studio of the Blackton Productions, Inc., through the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Under the arrangements, Mr. Blackton will produce a minimum of six special features, and a maximum of ten during the ensuing year. Each picture will be a "special" in every sense of that much abused expression, and will be produced from the finest type of stories with a present-day appeal.

In announcing the contract between Pathe and Mr. Blackton, Mr. Paul [illegible] vice-president and general manager of Pathe, said: "The acquisition of the J. Stuart Blackton productions is in line with the Pathe policy of giving the exhibitor the finest type of feature productions available. The reputation of Mr. Blackton and his noteworthy success in the past insures the highest class of pictures under the Pathe arrangement with [illegible]

"Mr. Blackton will confine himself to the production of photo-dramas based upon stories that have a strong appeal for audiences of today. The artists he has engaged for his productions are well and favorably known, and I can assure the thousands of exhibitors booking through Pathe that the series will maintain the high standard established by Mr. Blackton, with the added merit that his constant endeavor is ever to attain newer and higher achievement."

It has long been the ambition of Mr. Blackton to release his product through Pathe. Before making his final choice, however, he made a thorough investigation of the distribution field—a real not fancied investigation. Pathe eventually was selected because, in his opinion, it is absolutely essential that a releasing organization be in no way associated with the actual production of motion pictures. In other words, that the manufacture and distribution of motion pictures should be entirely disassociated. The manufacturer who also distributes his own pictures cannot offer the fullest advantage to the independent producer, because Mr. Blackton says it is the first law of business principles that the manufacturer obtain for his own product the choicest distribution.

Mr. Blackton, in outlining his plans for the ensuing year, made the following statement: "The series of productions I have planned for release through Pathe, will be the best examples of the screen craft it is possible for me to make. It will be my first task to obtain the best available literary material on the market suitable for screen production. I have already purchased 'Dawn,' the great story by Eleanor H. Porter, author of 'Polyanna,' which she has just sold for $50,000. I consider 'Dawn' even better picture material than 'Polyanna.'

"'Dawn' is one of the best sellers of the year. More than 1,000,000 copies have been disposed of already and it is still selling. It is a human heart story—a story of New England without a villain.

"Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon will be featured in this production, as well as in several of other pictures I will make during the year.

"Fanny Rice, for several years a popular favorite in musical comedies, will also have a prominent part. There are suitable characterizations for Eddie Dunn and Gus Alexander, whom I consider the best comedians of their type in motion pictures. Every picture I will produce will have a popular appeal, for it is my intention to produce plays that have heart interest, strong love appeal, and above all will be human and true to life."

Journal Urges Reformers to See Pathe Film

The reform element now engaged in a campaign against vice in Connecticut, is urged in an editorial in the Manchester "Herald" to see "The Cry of the Weak," a Pathe feature starring Fannie Ward, which this newspaper considers a "great missionary production." It announced in a recent issue:

"Our reformers would do well to drop in at the Park Theatre tonight. John F. Sullivan is presenting Miss Fannie Ward's latest emotional vehicle, 'The Cry of the Weak,' one of Pathe's famous Extra Selected Star Photoplays. Without any 'preaching' or 'propaganda,' this splendid motion picture will do an enormous amount of missionary work."

Story by a Baroness

An original story, not published, entitled "Clothes of Treachery," which was written by Baroness Mahrah de Meyer, a noted Continental author, has been purchased by Universal. Mary MacLaren will probably be starred in it.

Nine Texas Guinan Westerns Completed

The Frohman Amusement Corporation have completed the first nine Texas Guinan two reel Western productions.

The creation of a new producing organization for the making of short length subjects was of itself a new departure for the Frohman Amusement Corporation, and the fact that every story acquired had to be especially written for Miss Guinan, requiring originality of theme, rendered the enterprise in the first instance a difficult one.

"The Girl of Hells Agony" was the first release and the entire market both professional and non-professional writers was canvassed for material, and it was some task to gather out of the mass of manuscripts submitted thirteen distinctive stories. Succeeding "The Girl of Hells Agony" came "The She Wolf," and in their order "South of Santa Fe," "Some Gal," "Little Miss Deputy," "The Dangerous Little Devil," "The Dead Mans Hand," "The Sacrifice," and "The Call of Bob White."

Bull's-Eye's Expansion in One Year

Furnishing further proof that "great oaks from little acorns grow," the Bull's-Eye Film Corporation enters its second year as a producing and distributing organization of short subject attractions with the announcement that it now controls the sole rights for six of the most popular one and two-reel features on the market. Four of these are comedy pictures, as Bull's-Eye specializes in comedies, the high standard of which has won that concern great favor among exhibitors.

The "big six" on the Bull's-Eye list are as follows: Gale Henry comedies, the Bull's-Eye master-comedies, A. Lincoln Miller's "Weakly Indigestion" (comic news weekly), the Legends of the Wilderness (Burrud Scenics), the Napoleon and Sally monkeyshines, and Tid-bits, a prose novelty.

According to Milton L. Cohen, Bull's-Eye president, at least eight more attractions will come under the Bull's-Eye distributing system the coming year, one of which will be a "scoop" of nation-wide importance.

"Turn in Road" Called One of Year's Best

"The Turn in the Road" the Robertson-Cole feature distributed by Exhibitors Mutual has been ranked as the second best production of the year by Frederick James Smith in "The Celluloid Critic's" screen review of the year.

Reviewing it he states, "The Turn in the Road" is not a human document, but it comes nearer being one than any photoplay we have glimpsed. In one, singles picture, King W. Vidor steps into the front rank of directors.

"The Turn in the Road" has no individual star but all prejudice against this fact was overcome as soon as the exhibitors saw it, and realized the excellence of its well-balanced cast. It is also an original story, written by King W. Vidor. It is interesting to note that Mr. Smith in his year's review states that ten of the best twenty productions were based on original stories and that eight were photoplays in which there were no star.

Rotarians Approve "The World Aflame"

The position of influence being assumed by the motion picture in the affairs of the United States, is borne out by the remarkable reception accorded Frank Keenan's great picture, "The World Aflame," being distributed by Pathe, which carries with it a solution of the tremendous problems confronting capital and labor. Two weeks ago the production was shown before members of the Cabinet, Congress and the Senate and prominent Labor leaders, receiving their unqualified endorsement.

Now comes word that the Rotary Club, through its Oklahoma City branch, is heartily in accord with the lesson taught by "The World Aflame."

The Rotary Club extends its activities from one end of the continent to the other. It is comprised of the leading merchants and business men in each territory—men who are most vitally interested in the labor problems of the day.

State Right and Foreign Sales

H. A. SPANUTH, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has just completed deals whereby he has disposed of the rights of Spanuth's Original Vod-A-Vil Movies in the states of Pennsylvania, District of Columbia, Louisiana, Maryland, and West Virginia.

H. J. Reynolds of the Renco Film Co., Chicago, who achieved such success with "The Birth of a Race," has taken the entire world's rights to "Mother-Love and the Law" featuring Dolly Ledgerwood Matters. State rights and foreign sales campaigns will be begun immediately. This play was produced by the Crystal Photoplays Corp.

On "The Birth of a Race" Mr. Reynolds has already secured over $25,000 worth of bookings in Chicago alone.

Bech, Van Siclen & Co., Inc., announces the sale of "A House Divided," "Wild Honey," "Calibre 38," "Twilight," "Street of Seven Stars," "Romance of the Underworld," "Marriage," and "Out of the Night" for Chile.

The rights to Sunbeam Comedies, produced by Florida Film Corporation for Texas and Oklahoma, have been sold to The Producers & Exhibitors Pictures Company of Dallas.

Sol Lesser has sold the rights to eight states to Linnick and Jacoby Enterprises for $75,000 cash. The territory includes Louisiana, Mississippi, Kansas, Missouri, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Branch Exceeds Print Quota

Pathe New York Branch Has in Advance Passed Maximum on "The 13th Chair"

THE sweeping success in store for the screen version of "The Thirteenth Chair" is forecasted in a statement issued by Pathe to the effect that the New York exchange has already exceeded its maximum quota of playing dates on this production. This record was made two weeks before the picture was scheduled to have its premier showing in the metropolitan distsict on August 31.

On top of the announcement that "The Thirteenth Chair," which was produced by the Acme Pictures Corporation under the supervision of Leonce Porret, had been booked by the U. B. O. and Fox circuits, comes word that Poli's had booked it for all their theatres. Included in this list are the Palace, Hartford; Garden, Waterbury; Palace, New Haven; Life, Meridan; Palace, Springfield; Plaxe, Worcester, and the Palace, Bridgeport.

The New York exchange acted for the Boston office in booking the Poli theatres in Hartford, Worcester and Springfield. In addition to this the entire David V. Picker circuit in the Bronx was closed on "The Thirteenth Chair."

Altogether in New York suburban territory the mystery play has been placed in seventy-three theatres, a record that will be a shining mark for other Pathe salesmen to shoot at.

In Chicago Salesmen Peters and Rogers, in the opening week of their campaign on "The Thirteenth Chair," booked the production in forty-four suburban theatres and are now out for Dacey's great figures.

From other territories the reports are just beginning to arrive in the Home Office, and everywhere indications are that the New York and Chicago records will be duplicated.

Before "The Thirteenth Chair" has run its course in New York City it is predicted by the local exchanges that its previous records will have been exceeded by over 100 per cent.

Book Metro's "Sight Unseen"

New California Theatre Manager Takes Four Pictures Without Viewing First

BREAKING precedent, Fred H. Miller, president of the new California theatre in Los Angeles, has booked without previous screen examination the first four of Metro's famous thirty-six productions made by Nazimova and by Screen Classics, Inc.

The exacting requirements for pictures to be shown to audiences whose daily life is so intertwined with the manufacture of films that only the exceptional elicits enthusiasm, has heretofore caused Mr. Miller to insist upon first seeing pictures before booking them for his theatre.

His contracting for "The Brat," the latest Nazimova picture; for "Please Get Married," the first of the new Viola Dana Screen Classics, Inc., productions; for "Lombardi, Ltd.," in which Bert Lytell is starred; and for the screen version of Avery Hopwood's farce, "Fair and Warmer," with the dainty May Allison in the stellar role, is regarded as more than evidence of the confidence Mr. Miller places in Metro's "fewer and better" pictures.

The bookings for these pictures have not been for one or two days, but for from one to two weeks apiece.

This action of the part of the president of the California theatre came shortly before the showing of "The Brat" to a large audience of highly critical exhibitors in Los Angeles in the Metro branch office in that city. These showmen, like Mr. Miller, have to please audiences who are blase and unusually hard to satisfy; but after seeing this screen version of the Oliver Morosco stage success, by Maude Fulton, with Nazimova in the stellar role they agreed unanimously that it was the biggest box office attraction the Russian star has as yet given to the screen.

World Feature to Star Creighton Hale

If consistent good work covering several years entitles one to promotion, then Creighton Hale should be accorded the distinction of being billed as a star in pictures. World Pictures has for some time been looking for a lively young actor who has a following among the patrons of the picture theaters to star in a story that has long been one of the pets of the scenario department. By process of elimination the number of candidates for this position narrowed down to Mr. Hale. He was the type that the scenario department had visualized to create the principal role in this story of Raymond C. Hill, and which bears the title of "The Black Circle." The continuity was the work of Giles R. Warren.

"The Black Circle" will be directed by Frank Reicher, late with the Lasky Company, but now associated with World Pictures. This feature will be released by World Pictures some time during the month of October.

Supporting Mr. Hale, the following actors have been engaged: Virginia Valli, Jack Drumier, Walter Horton, Clarette Clare, Edwin Denison, John Davidson, Carl Sauerman, and Eva Gordon.

Fast Work Completes "The White Rook"

Energy and the keep-at-it spirit displayed by Miss Dalton while working on her second picture, "The White Rook," to be made in the East, resulted in completing the picture in record time. The organization which Mr. Ince sent to the East felt duty bound to make up for the time spent in traveling across the country, and encouraged by Miss Dalton's example, worked hard to this end. Joseph de Grasse, who directed the picture under Mr. Ince's supervision, is quite pleased with the result and adds that Miss Dalton has done some of the best acting of her career.

Grace Davison Seeks Story Material

The Grace Davison Pioneer Production Staff have for the past month been carrying on an exhaustive search for story material.

With the first Grace Davison picture finished and going the early process of exploitation, the necessity of securing an adequate supply of material adapted from big plays or novels for the completion of the Davison contract is most urgent.

Along with the efforts to secure story subjects arrangements have been made to lease a fully equipped studio in New Jersey or Long Island for the use of the Davison company.

Robertson-Cole's Fall Productions

Five Big Productions Are on Schedule for Release

FIVE features of exceptional class will mark the initial release on the fall program, according to an announcement made by Robertson-Cole. The production will be the September Robertson-Cole offering, distributed by Exhibitors Mutual.

Two of them are adaptations of noted books and three from original stories. The casts will include stars of the highest box office value. "In fact," declared one of the Robertson-Cole officials, "it is the finest series of pictures from every viewpoint that we have ever released in any month. The Robertson-Cole organization is thoroughly alive to the fall situation and the keen competition that will face the exhibitors. These pictures were produced with an especial view to the fall demands and exhibitors will find in them, productions of the highest consistent class and box office value. They are answers to both the star and the story questions. Robertson-Cole features released throughout the summer through Exhibitors Mutual were probably consistently the best productions placed on the market.

"It has not been the Robertson-Cole policy to withhold the better productions and release them when there is the greatest demand. Instead, it is our endeavor to make the best pictures possible and release them according to schedule.

"Exhibitors Mutual reports that the Robertson-Cole stars have an acknowledgedly high box office value and that their pictures are therefore in great demand. On the September program are four of the best stars: H. B. Warner, Bessie Barriscale, Sussue Hayakawa and William Desmond. This insures a wide range in the variety of the productions, as each of these artists is a specialist in the delineation of especial types.

"The stories also vary greatly both as to type and locale. There are two dramas laid in foreign countries, a racial mystery story, a sociological drama, and what is declared to be the best straight mystery story of the year, "The House of Intrigue," by Arthur Stringer.

"'The House of Intrigue' is one of the most thrilling tales Arthur Stringer ever wrote. It is full of romance, mystery and dramatic suspense, elements which go to make an ideal motion picture story.

"The Bessie Barriscale picture will be "Her Purchase Price," a picturization of an original story written especially for Miss Barriscale by M. B. Havey. It is a story of that picturesque land where the East and West meet, Egypt.

"The Hayakawa picture is a Haworth production, produced under the direction of William Worthington, who has been having such remarkable success in handling the famous Nipponese actor. The story is one of the few world-famous novels especially adaptable to Hayakawa's use.

"Jesse D. Hampton will present William Desmond in "Dangerous Waters," based on the original story by George Elwood Jenks. It is a society drama based on the facts of an Olympian revel held by New York society a few years ago.

"H. B. Warner will also be presented by Jesse D. Hampton in another one of those colorful dramas laid in a foreign country. It is the story of an English army officer stationed in India who risks his all, position, comfort and even honor for the woman he loves."

Announcement of the complete schedule and policy of the Robertson-Cole organization for 1919-1920 season, is expected within the next few days.

Sessue Hayakawa in the Robertson-Cole feature, "The Gray Horizon"

Rivalry for New Ivan Abramson Release

A scene that repeats itself as often as the Graphic Film Corporation announces the completion of an Ivan Abramson release took place a few days ago at the Graphic Film Exchange immediately after the appearance of a notice in the Motion Picture News to the effect that Director Abramson was engaged in cutting the negative of "Someone Must Pay."

The exchange booking offices took on the semblance of an auction room and not a few heated words are said to have passed between the contestants for first and second runs.

Fortunately, at this juncture, Mr. Abramson made his appearance and in a few terse phrases made his wishes known. "I have instructed my manager," said Mr. Abramson, "to accept no bookings on "Someone Must Pay" until this feature has been given its initial press and trade screening.

The exact date of the trade showing was reserved for future publication.

The cast includes Gail Kane, Edmund Breese, Jackie Saunders, Hugh Thompson, Jere Austin and Baby Dorothy Arnold.

Fox Features in Legitimate House

Two Big Pictures Pre-Released Please Audiences

BY special arrangement with Messrs. J. J. and Lee Shubert, Fox Film Corporation opened Shubert's 44th Street Theatre, on Tuesday evening, August 19, with the two impressive dramas "Evangeline" and "Kathleen Mavourneen" in advance of scheduled release dates, and from this theatre for some time to come. Arrangements with the lessees provide for an indefinite run.

Public opinion plainly endorses the verdict of the newspaper critics and trade-paper reviews in enthusiastic support of these two high-class offerings—which are a new type of screen entertainment dramatically and artistically, appealing equally to the thinker and the seeker after pleasant diversion.

"Evangeline" is a screen adaptation of Longfellow's immortal poem of the same name, probably the best known of all the great poet's writings and familiar to school children throughout America. This feature of the programme has effected the wide appeal predicted for it by Mr. Fox, who has declared that both productions are the result for a new type of motion picture which should present the work of the masters of literature and have an educational as well as an entertainment aim.

Reviewers of "Evangeline" are unanimous in their praise and the National Board of Review has laid special stress in its report on the fact that it is "an undoubtably faithful and sincere screening of Longfellow's poem."

"Evangeline," with an all-star cast, features Miriam Cooper under the expert direction of R. A. Walsh.

Supporting Miss Cooper are such screen players as Albert Roscoe, Spottiswoode Aitken, James Marcus and Paul Weigel. J. D. Jennings, one of the most capable of Fox photographers, was the cameraman with Mr. Walsh.

The other half of the programme introduces Theda Bara, in "Kathleen Mavourneen" a combined adaptation of Tom Moore's gem of poetry and the successful stage play by Dion Boucicault.

In "Kathleen Mavourneen" Miss Bara, as the star, is seen in a role which is the antithesis of the vampire part with which she so long has been identified. Her part is that of the sweet Irish colleen, Kathleen, and around it has been woven a love story.

In support of Theda Bara are Edward O'Connor, Jennie Dickerson, Raymond McKee, Marc McDermott, Marcia Harris, Henry Hallam, Harry Gripp and Morgan Thorpe. In addition to these principals are hundreds of Irish folk types most carefully selected.

The release dates for both of these super-pictures are still far off, and it is expected that by the time the regular releases are issued both will have aroused widespread interest and enthusiasm throughout the country by the success of their New York runs, thereby adding greatly to their drawing power for the exhibitors.

In commenting upon these two creations William Fox said:

"For more than four years I have received repeated requests from thinking men and women in all parts of the world for a new type of motion picture production which would faithfully present the work of the masters of literature, to the end that their educational and entertainment values should be made available to the masses.

"With this purpose in view I set about the making of these two subjects. I leave the result of my work to the judgment of the public. I will say, however, that these creations have been brought into being without reference to expenditure and solely with the idea of faithfully interpreting the spirit of the two master works."

Tucker's Unusual Care on "Miracle Man"

Thomas Meighan, one of the leading players in George Loane Tucker's production to be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, "The Miracle Man," arrived in New York last week and expressed great enthusiasm over the merits of this film.

Mr. Meighan stated that the care taken by Mr. Tucker in personally staging this film was truly unusual. "It is a story with a great big idea behind it," said Mr. Meighan, "and Mr. Tucker supervised every detail of it. In fact nothing went into the making of this great picture that did not pass Mr. Tucker's personal supervision even to the finest detail in costuming. He worked night and day toward the last.

"When everything was complete and the picture was finished," said Tom Meighan, "it took nine weeks for the cutting alone and George Loane Tucker gave to it every moment of his time and attention."

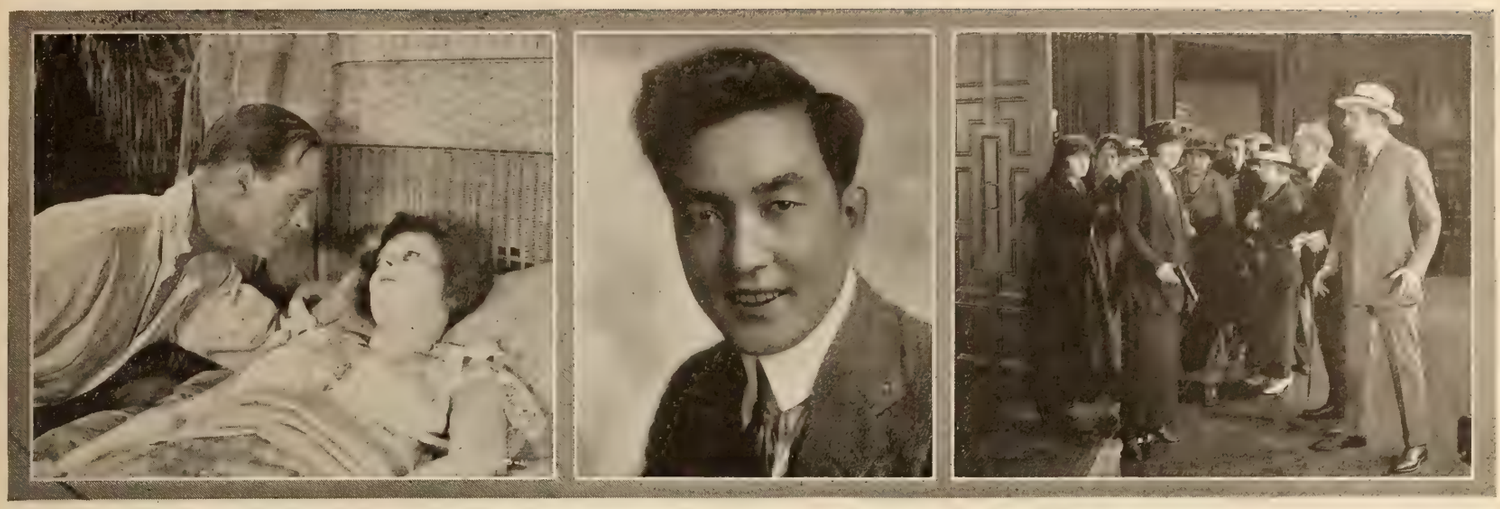
United Theatres Contest Waxes Warm

With the half way post passed in its exhibitors' and salesmen's watch contest United Pictures Theatres reports lively participation by both classes of contestants. With seven weeks of the competition still to run exhibitors reported as at present leading in the race are B. W. Bickert, Boise, Idaho; J. Q. Clemmer, Seattle, and P. Gusdanovic, Cleveland. The sales force contestants are headed thus far by O. P. Hall, Atlanta; Jack Levy, Eastern division manager; C. F. Parr, Denver, and S. Rosenthal, Cleveland, with two of these tied for third place.

Six platinum watches of the value of $250 each are to be awarded, three to exhibitors and three to managerial and sales force, for best results in the furtherance of United's interests among exhibitors and for sales success, with the contest closing October 12th.

Lustig on Coast Tour

Harry Lustig, West Coast representative of Metro Pictures Corporation, has left his offices in Los Angeles for a tour of the Pacific Coast exchanges. He will be gone five weeks.



At the left is H. B. Warner appearing in a scene from "For a Woman's Honor," in the center is Sessue Hayakawa, whose latest production is "The Illustrious Prince," and at the right is a tense moment from "The House of Intrigue." All three features are Robertson-Cole productions released through Exhibitors Mutual

Pacific Producing Co. Making a Serial

"The Radium Mystery," the new serial now being made by the Pacific Producing Company, is finishing its first episode under the direction of Robert Broadwell. Although they are working at the headquarters of the new company, 6100 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles, several of the early episodes will be shot at Universal City.

The opening of the story is laid in northern Montana and written by Frederick Bennett. After the three episodes it will be taken in the Barbary Coast of San Francisco and then to tropical climes.

The theme of the serial is the impending loss of one of the greatest fortunes on earth and the mysterious disappearance of the heirs to the fortune. It has an all-star cast, including Cleo Madison, Eileen Sedgwick, Ed Brady, Bob Reeves and some of the big stunts are done by Bob Kortman, who for years played opposite Wm. S. Hart. The first three episodes are expected to be finished by September 1.

Russian Drama Made by Universal

"Common Porperty" a six-reel drama by Elliott J. Clawson dealing with the recent nationalization of woman in Russia, has just been completed by Director Paul Powell at Universal City, and is now being cut and titled.

The story deals with the Russia of today, with particular emphasis laid on the barbaric Bolshevistic doctrine of regarding all women as common property.

Robert Anderson, Colleen Moore, Arthur Maude, Frank Leigh, Johnnie Cooke, Richard Cummings, Arthur Jasmine and Robert Lawler are in the cast.

Coming Into Limelight

Marguerite De La Motte is rapidly becoming known to Robertson-Cole patrons. This California beauty has already appeared in two Robertson-Cole features distributed by Exhibitors Mutual; "The Sage Brush Hamlet" and "The Papan God." She is now playing in support of William Desmond in a production now being completed at the Jesse D. Hampton Studios.

Mayer Secures Curwood Stories

Buys Rights to Twelve of Author's Best Known Works

ONE of the most important acts of Louis B. Mayer, the producer of Anita Stewart, Mildred Harris, Chaplin and Mayer Productions, since he came East from the Coast, was the purchasing of the world motion picture rights of twelve of the best known stories of the noted author, James Oliver Curwood. The deal is said to be the largest ever consummated for the works of any individual author, and its magnitude may be judged by the fact that Curwood himself has just closed with William Randolph Hearst for a full novel length serial to run in Housekeeping Magazine, called "Valley of Silent Men."

The amount of money involved in the Mayer-Curwood transaction is not made public, but it is understood to be close on to six figures. Curwood's rise in the literary profession has been nothing short of phenomenal, and there is an ever increasing demand for every product of his pen. In virility and versatility he reminds one of the late Jack London, and many critics even consider him the superior of that mental giant.

At the present time his works are in far greater demand for motion picture material than those of any other author, and it is understood that fabulous sums are being offered for his future stories. His first story to be picturized created a sensation. It was "God's Country and the Woman," which was produced by Vitagraph a known and most widely read stories are "Yellow Back," "Nomads of the North," "Golden Snare," "Back to God's Country" and the "River's End."

In speaking of the Curwood deal, Mr. Mayer said: "I consider myself extremely fortunate in securing these stories of such an eminent author as James Oliver Curwood, and I believe it will mean much to the exhibitor who will some day show the picturized versions to his patrons. They will be released at the rate of about four a year.

"I shall engage the very best possible director, and I shall in all other ways, spare neither expense nor energy in making the picturized product entirely worthy of the author and the stories. I wish to emphasize, however, that the making of these specials will in no way interfere with the elaborate plans I have made for the productions in which Miss Stewart and Mrs. Chaplin will be starred. I have already purchased for them several of the best selling books of the year, in addition to some widely circulated magazine stories. Some of them are "The Fighting Sheperdess," by Caroline Lockhart; "Old Dad," by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott; "Who Am I," by Max Brand; "Pollyop of the Storm Country," by Grace Miller White, author of "Tess of the Storm Country," and "The Secret of the Storm Country"; "Danger," by H. H. Van Loan; "Watch Your Wife," by E. Mason Hopper; "They'll All Bear Watching," by Alice Roberts; "The Judgment of Men," by Mabel Keightley and Leigh Gordon Giltner; "Foolish Youth," by Louise Winter; "The Bitter Cup," by Edith Sessions Tupper; "The Yellow Typhoon," by Harold Magrath.

Finish Three Universal Features

Four Companies Also Are Working on Westerns

THREE six-reel feature photodramas which are expected to be among Universal's best productions were put into production this week at the West Coast Studio.

Elmo Lincoln, the star of the "Elmo the Mighty" has commenced work under Director Rex Ingram on "The Beach Comber" from the story by J. G. Hawks. Mabel Ballin, seen as the feminine lead in "The White Heather," the most recent Maurice Tourneur production, will play opposite Lincoln. Others in the cast are: Harry Van Meter, Ethlyn Irving, Dick La Reno and Frank Brownlee.

Frank Mayo, who recently completed "A Little Brother of the Rich" and "The Brute Breaker," under Lynn Reynold's direction, has started on "Lasca," a screen adaptation of the well-known poem of the Rio Grande, Norman Dwan is directing the feature, and Edith Roberts is playing opposite Mayo. The supporting cast includes Arthur Jasmine, Lloyd Whitlock and Viola Harry.

"Betty Reforms" is the title of a story by Mildred Considine, which William C. Dowlan has started producing with Ora Carew, Forrest Stanley and Charles Clary as the triumvirate of stars.

Other activities of Universal City include the start next week of the feature, "Ambition," which is to be Dorothy Phillips' next cinedramatic vehicle. Allen Holubar will again direct Miss Phillips.

"Ambition" will show the star as a small town girl with ambitions to become a great opera singer. She is to be surrounded with the same notable type of supporting players as were seen with her in "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Right to Happiness."

Director Jacques Jaccard is taking the finishing scenes for "The Winged Trail," the first big melodrama of the skies, in which Lieutenant O. L. Locklear, the only man changing planes in mid-air, is starred.

The lieutenant has returned to Chicago for Eastern flying engagements, and Jaccard is now shooting the sequences in which the intrepid aviator does not appear. Francelia Billington and Carmen Phillips have the principal feminine roles in the production.

Four companies are at work on two-reel Western dramas. George Holt is making "Tempest Cody's Expose," starring Marie Walcamp, in which she has a new leading man—namely, Frank Braidwood, of "The Heart of Humanity" fame.

"Dynamite" is the title of the newest Western in which Pete Morrison is starring with Josephine Hill.

"Westerners" on U. B. O. Circuit

Hodkinson Release Is Taken in Many Big Houses

BASED upon its success at the New York Strand during the first week in August, Benjamin B. Hampton's first production for Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., "The Westerners" by Stewart Edward White, has been booked for the new 4,000 seat Brooklyn Strand as one of the opening attractions in that new house.

The contract for "The Westerners" was signed by Walter Hays, treasurer of the Mark Strand interests in eight New York state and three New England cities, just as it was booked for the full week of August 24th at the big Newark Strand owned and operated by the same interests and Max Spiegel.

The United Booking Office, B. F. Keith and Keith & Proctor interests, which recently swung J. Parker Read, Jr.'s., Louise Glaum production "Sahara" across the entire breadth of their chain of theatres, likewise during the past week signed contracts for "The Westerners" for September and October playing dates covering in excess of seventy days across their New York and New Jersey chain of theatres.

The U. B. O. contracts were signed by Dr. E. G. Lauder who declares "The Westerners" to be one of the markedly new type of productions which are working a complete change in the standards of motion picture production.

Announcement of the signing of other important circuits in New York are to be made within the next few days. The United Booking Office playing time for a big picture that receives the full circuit booking is longer in point of days and importance of theatres than any other motion picture circuit in the United States.

In conjunction with the presentation of "The Westerners" as one of the first attractions of the Brooklyn Strand Grosset & Dunlap, publishers of Stewart Edward White's novels, will give that theatre the full benefit of a city-wide window display in department book and drug stores similar to the successful campaign which powerfully linked up the public in Manhattan recently with the initial eastern presentation of the picture at the New York Strand.

The Grosset & Dunlap book link-up with the pictured portrayal of the novel involves the direct newspaper advertising of the book with mention of the theatre name where the presentation is made in the department store advertising of its book department and the use in Brooklyn, in store windows in conjunction with the book, of one thousand sheets of the production and more than 500 sets of the eleven by fourteen lobby displays. The entire metropolitan campaign is personally handled by S. A. Jenkins of the Grosset & Dunlap organization, the ablest book promotion executive in the publishing industry.

More than a score of the important first run theatres of the country that have signed contracts for "The Westerners" have held back its playing dates for the first or second week in September, rating this unusual production as powerful enough to offset or match whatever production their competitors may be witholding as the opening attractions for the new season.

Wm. Farnum Starts "If I Were King"

Second of His Big Fox Productions for New Season

HAVING completed the William Fox screen version of Zane Grey's great novel, "The Last of the Duanes," and Louis Tracy's book of adventure, "Wings of the Morning," and having also enjoyed a brief vacation at his Sag Harbor, L. I., summer home, William Farnum, the Fox star, has returned to the New York studios and begun work in J. Huntly McGowan's story, "If I Were King." In this, of course, he has the role of the poet dreamer, a delightful part, suiting admirably the versatile talents of this powerful actor.

On Monday morning, August 18, Mr. Farnum stepped before the cameras in the first scenes of this story under the expert personal direction of J. Gordon Edwards, and work is now swinging along with fine progress and with every indication that "If I Were King" in motion picture form will be a kingly production, with the combination of such a star and such a director.

Meanwhile, with Mr. Farnum in his newest picture, the Fox technical staff is concentrating all effort toward surpassing itself in the artistry and faithfulness of the scenic backgrounds for the production, which promises many fine settings.

The cutting and titling departments have nearly completed their part of the work on "The Last of the Duanes," in which, it is said, will be a revelation in artistic titles the tone of which will be in perfect harmony with the action of this colorful tale of the West—a subject on which no other writer has a greater knowledge of values than Zane Grey.

The cutting and joining departments also are busy on "Wings of the Morning," which was filmed at extraordinary expense, it is understood. J. Gordon Edwards is director of both "The Last of the Duanes" and "Wings of the Morning."

It was the aim of William Fox to get into "Wings of the Morning" the most startling shipwreck scenes ever attempted for the screen, and Mr. Edwards, having satisfied himself on this score, is interesting himself personally in the cutting and joining of these particular scenes, which will carry into motion picture theatres one of the greatest punches ever witnessed in a Farnum vehicle.

The entire cast to support Mr. Farnum in "If I Were King" has not yet been selected. Mr. Farnum's part, that of Villon, the humble poet aspirant to the kingly throne, will enable the star again to display his great talent in make-up, an art in which he is acknowledged to occupy a peculiarly distinctive position among stars of the screen.

Realart Electric Sign Biggest in Industry

The O. J. Gude Company is authority for the statement that the electric sign to be erected for Realart Pictures Corporation on the Hermitage Hotel, New York, will be the largest in the world for the exploitation of photoplays. Construction of the sign is now in progress in the Gude laboratories, and it is expected the work of wiring and setting up will begin within the next week.

The skeleton of the sign now towers twelve stories above one of the busiest corners of the world, Broadway and Forty-second Street. This skeleton is one hundred and four feet wide and seventy-two feet high, and when completed will have close to six thousand lamps.

"Of course, the amount we had to pay for the rental of this sign, $108,000, is enormous," said Arthur S. Kane, president of Realart, "particularly when compared with the sums heretofore spent on such advertising by producing companies. But the photoplay has made such tremendous strides within the past few years and competition is so keen that most unusual exploitation is essential.

"One might argue that a picture-producing corporation should not have to spend any more money for advertising than any other business concern. That angle is all wrong. It is one thing to get a product or commodity before the public and keep it there and quite another to do the same thing with amusements. The reason for this is that our offerings are constantly changing, whereas most merchandise is more or less standard."

Screen Classics Drama Breaks Record

All previous attendance records were smashed at the Lyric theatre, in Asbury Park, last week, with the new Screen Classics, Inc., mystery drama, "The Man Who Stayed at Home." Stephen Pawley, owner and manager of the Lyric theatre, reports that for the three days the picture played he did capacity business at every performance.

The run was Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. On Tuesday, according to Mr. Pawley, the Lyric did the greatest volume of business ever recorded by the house.

Four Books Bought to Make One Photoplay

For the first time, it is said, in the history of the motion picture business, a producing company has obtained the rights to several books in order to make one picture. Realart Pictures Corporation recently bought the four "Anne" books by L. M. Montgomery in order to provide Mary Miles Minter with a siutable story.

This deal, according to Arthur S. Kane, president of Realart, is especially interesting in view of the prices publishers are demanding—and getting—for photoplay rights to popular books. It is well known that one good book costs a small fortune—to multiply that by four is at least unusual.

"Anne of Green Gables," one of the group, will be the title of the photoplay and the stories told in the series have been condensed into one continuity by Frances Marion.

"This is to be our first Minter picture," Mr. Kane explains, "and, of course, we have been very careful to make a selection that would surpass the established standard of our star.

Famous-Lasky Men Are Promoted

Al. Lichtman, General Manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's distribution department, has made several promotions whereby Louis L. Dent, Oscar A. Morgan and Allan S. Glenn move up to more important positions in the organization. R. E. Bradford, well known exchange manager in Chicago and other districts, has been engaged to take charge of the Atlanta office.

Louis L. Dent, who has been in charge of the Atlanta office, has been appointed special representative at the District Manager's office, succeeding Dan Michalove, resigned.

Oscar A. Morgan, until recently manager of the Washington office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has assumed the duties of assistant sales manager, replacing L. F. Guimond, who has been transferred to the Advertising and Publicity Department.

Allan S. Glenn assumes charge of the Accessory Sales and Promotion Department under the supervision of S. R. Kent, General Sales Manager.

Clara K. Young Guest of Fleet Officers

Clara Kimball Young, who for the past two years has enjoyed the title of "Pride of the Navy," because of her efforts in behalf of recruiting for this branch of the service, was tendered a luncheon on board the dreadnought Wyoming, at Los Angeles Harbor, during the visit of the newly created Pacific Fleet to that port. Admiral Hugh Rodman in command of the fleet, and Admiral R. E. Coontz, a divisional commander, whose flagship is the Wyoming, acted as hosts on this occasion.

At a ball given in Los Angeles in honor of the admirals and their officers shortly after the arrival of the fleet on the Pacific coast, Miss Young, who was a member of the reception committee, again met Admiral Coontz, who forthwith asked her to be the executive guest of the fleet at a luncheon.

Hodkinson Picture Relied On

Organization Backs Statement "Desert Gold" Is Better Than Any Film of Day

WHEN Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner, the producers, made "Desert Gold," the first of their Zane Grey Pictures, with the detailed assistance of the author himself, they unwittingly or deliberately threw down the gauge to producers in general. In any event, their finished production of "Desert Gold" is being so made use of by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, its distributors, who this week openly announce "Desert Gold" to exhibitors with the competitive declaration that "'Desert Gold' will whip any other big picture that any other producer has or thinks he has."

Shipment of prints of "Desert Gold" to all Hodkinson managers is now being made and during the forthcoming ten days this production will be shown to exhibitors in all the first-run cities of the country. To date no contract for this production has been signed outside of New York City with any of the country's first runs. Contracts have been signed for certain local cities in the United States because the owners of the leading theatres in those cities came to New York, and there asked for screenings of this unusual production.

The six months of attention and effort that Benjamin B. Hampton and Zane Grey in person gave to the making of "Desert Gold" have resulted, it is claimed, in a picture of remarkable power and beauty; have given definite leadership to the new organization, and entitled it to top recognition as one of the big new factors in the industry.

Like Benjamin B. Hampton's recently released first Great Authors' Picture, "The Westerners," this Zane Grey production has an all-star cast. Every player in an important role of "Desert Gold" has been starred, featured or co-starred by other companies and gained a national following. This all-star cast comprises E. K. Lincoln, Margery Wilson, Eileen Percy, Russell Simpson, Walter Long, W. Larson Butt, Edward Coxen, Arthur Morrison, Frank Lanning, Frank Brownlee, and William Bainbridge.

War Relief Series Bookings

Instant Demand Felt for Stage Women's Efforts; Large Houses Booked

EIGHTY-SIX of the largest and best attended theatres in the United States have booked the Stage Women's War Relief series of two-reel masterpieces which are being released by the Universal Company. H. M. Bermann, general manager of the Universal Exchanges, reports that the increase is astounding. "Shortly after we sent the prints of the first six of these productions to the exchanges the booking records started," Mr. Bermann said. "There never has been, in my opinion, such a record in the booking of two-reel dramas. Little or no effort was made to urge the exhibitor to buy this series. They sold themselves. I have received many letters from exhibitors stating that they are more than pleased with the productions and that they expect to break all records with them.

That the largest and best theatres in the country have booked the productions is evident from the records, which show bookings for the Capitol, on Broadway, New York; the Circle theatre, Indianapolis; the Walnut, Cincinnati; the Stillman of Cleveland; the Strand, at Louisville; the Adams, De Luxe, and Ferry Field, at Detroit; the Rivoli, at Denver; the New Franklin, at Minneapolis; the Stanley circuit in New Jersey and Pennsylvania; the Mammoth and seven other Philadelphia houses; the Palace and Ervers, at St. Louis; the Parkway, at Baltimore, and the Strand, Olympia, Camerophone and Arcade of Pittsburg. These are only a few of the group of eighty-six of the first run houses that have been booked for this series.

Hart Productions Co. Out of Existence

With the completion of the former Hart contract with Artcraft, the Wm. S. Hart Productions, Inc. passed out of existence, and this week a new sign was placed on the studio which reads:

"The William S. Hart Company; E. H. Allen, General Manager. Artcraft Program."

Mr. Hart has had the studio dismantled throughout, and it has now been thoroughly re-equipped with all new pictures, properties, etc. and plans are rapidly being completed for beginning work on the first subject under the new Artcraft contract. Mr. Hart had retained practically every member of his staff besides Mr. Allen, the entire organization being composed of Paul H. Conlon, director of publicity; H. J. Howard, auditor; Tom Brierly, art director; Joe August and Dwight Warren, camera-men; LeRoy Stone, film editor; J. Cal Hoffner, electrician, and Miss Frances Ellington, secretary.

Lambert Hillyer, who has been associated with Hart for some time, and directed a number of the best releases, is to continue in this capacity, and is now at work on the scenario for Hart's first release. Plans of the company provide that the work of filming the first of the nine plays stipulated in the new Artcraft contract, will begin not later than September 1st.

Robert McLaughlin Is Producer and Writer

Robert McLaughlin is an American boy who has written himself into fame, prestige and popularity within a comparatively short period of time. His latest creation, "The House Without Children," is conceded to be one of the strongest works of fiction of the day. As a motion picture entertainment this romance occupies a high position.

Mr. McLaughlin has several new pieces under contract with his managers ready for production this fall. The first of these is entitled "The Pearl of Great Price," for which the production has already been built by Al. H. Woods.

Pathe Review Will Be Issued Weekly

Complying with the requests of hundreds of exhibitors, Pathe announces, that beginning October 19th, the Pathe Review will be issued every week, instead of semi-monthly. This is welcome news to exhibitors who, just now, owing to the shortage of high-class material of this nature, are finding difficulty rounding out their program with short features.

Contracts under the new arrangements are now being circulated, and Pathe is looking forward to a tremendous business with the weekly issue. The Pathe Review is recognized as a leader in its field.

Some of the established features are the Novograph slow motion pictures —an offering unlike anything ever seen upon the screen; the Ditmars animal studies, which never lose their novelty and attraction; the beautiful scenics made more beautiful by the Pathecolor process, and other industrial and educational features.

Fleet Shown Passing Through the Canal

The Panama Canal, a monument to American engineering genius and the most interesting man-made waterway in the world, has passed its supreme test during the past week in the passage from ocean to ocean of the great Pacific fleet on its way to the Far East.

Remarkable views of the mighty armada on its trip through the canal are appearing in the International News No. 33, the news reel put out by the International through the Universal exchanges. The Arkansas and Texas are seen entering the Gatun locks. In Panama Harbor President Porros, of Panama, is shown visiting Admiral Rodman. From here the big ships steam into the Pacific, headed for the Golden Gate.

Popular Universal Is in Keith Houses

Sam Zierler, sales manager of the New York Universal Exchange, reports the booking of "A Little Brother of the Rich" in the entire Keith Circuit in the metropolitan territory. "A Little Brother of the Rich" is the first of the "Big Twelve" series of Universal Special Attractions.

"Eyes of Youth" Ready Oct. 1

Gareth Hughes Supporting Clara K. Young Considered Find of Season

MOTION picture critics are united in believing that the day is not far off when Gareth Hughes, juvenile leading man and one of the finds of the season in motion pictures, is due to take his place in the front ranks with Charlie Ray and other stars who make a living in keeping alive the art of youth on the screen.

The career of Gareth Hughes has been as successful upon the stage as it has been on the screen. Like many another successful man of his race, he rode the rough seas that lead from the Emerald Isle to the Statute of Liberty. Hughes was born in Ireland and not so many years ago at that, of rare old Irish stock and up to his fourteenth year spoke nothing but his native Gaelic.

His selection by Clara Kimball Young to play the role of Kenneth Ashling, the brother, in the production of "Eyes of Youth," has placed him in line for the really big things of the motion picture industry and it is believed that his work in "Eyes of Youth" will add fresh laurels to his already heavy wreath. Hughes expects to remain in Los Angeles in pictures for at least a year, following his present work in "Eyes of Youth."

He began his career in England and played in the big productions from the very first. Some of his big New York stage successes have been: Ariel in "Caliban"; The Page in "Salome"; The Lieutenant in "Moloch"; Everyman in "Everyman"; Benjamin in "Easter"; Gaston in "The Guilty Man"; Roger in "The New Word"; Otto in "Margaret Schiller"; Juan in "The Judge of Zalamea"; Gwilym in "Change"; Corny in "Dark Rosaleen" and Michael Flannigan in "Red Turf."

Hughes has numerous attractive offers to follow his appearance with Clara Kimball Young in "Eyes of Youth."

At the Equity Offices it was stated that the production, the first to be released by this organization, will be ready by October 1.

"Judge Picture in General"

King Vidor Believes Opinion Should Not Be on Star, Story and Director

A SUGGESTION has been advanced by King W. Vidor, the producer-author, with respect to better pictures, which has been subjected to so much space in magazines and publications recently. His belief is that a picture should be judged on its all-round fairness and fitness, rather than on the question of the star, story and director. According to Mr. Vidor it requires all three of these important elements as well as the backing of a sufficient organization of several departments, to produce a successful picture.

"There is justice in the argument of those who claim first place for the star," Mr. Vidor said, "but there is also justice in the counter argument that the strength of the story too frequently suffers when the star is put at the head of the list. It is the same thing that every other part which goes to make up the completed whole of a screen production. Since success is measured by the degree of popularity with the public, in other words, by the box office receipts over the world at large, the first consideration of a producer should be to have each picture 'go one better than the last,' and so to benefit by the reputation previous features had established and to build it still higher for the benefit of those features which are to follow. If the sole guide of the producer is to reach as near to perfection as his judgment and powers make possible, it seems to me that the safest of all rules is 'be thorough in every detail.'"

The two pictures which King Vidor wrote are said to be a success.

Monopol President on Tour of Country

Max Cohen, president of Monopol Pictures Company, will leave New York next week for a swing around the country in the interests of his two state right pictures, "Crimson Shoals" and "Alma, Where Do You Live?" Mr. Cohen has been working for several weeks in the preparation of the advertising and publicity accessories designed to assist buyer and exhibitor in exploiting these two features, and announces this week that all this material is now ready to show in conjunction with the screening of the Monopol attractions.

His trip is the result of many inquiries received from leading buyers whose interest has been aroused in the possibility of buying "Crimson Shoals" and "Alma, Where Do You Live?" as a double attraction for their program. Cohen commented as follows on the qualities of the offerings:

"I believe that in the present two Monopol productions we have embodied the requirements necessary for the success of a state right attraction."

Pearl White Out of Political Race

Pearl White, Fox star, who recently announced herself as a candidate for the Assembly from Queens County, New York City, has withdrawn from the race. In a letter to the Republican leader of Queens Miss White states that she will be unable to run on the Republican ticket at the primaries because of the great obligations imposed by her motion picture work.

Miss White's first picture with Fox Film Corporation will be "Tiger's Cub," a super-story of the great northwest, written by George Potter, which deals with life in Alaska just after the gold rush of '98.

Children in Hospital See Metros Free

Arthur Lamb, branch manager, has placed the entire film library of the Los Angeles exchange of Metro Pictures Corporation at the disposal of the local children's hospital, to be used in fortnightly entertaining which are expected to brighten the lives of the afflicted little ones. George E. Pelton is handling the shows, and furnishing the projection machine and operator.

DeLuxe Issue of the Goldwynner Out

The current number of the Goldwynner, the exhibitor-organ issued semi-monthly by Goldwyn, presents a "close-up" of the first eight super-productions now ready, or soon to be ready, for inspection in the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges throughout the country.

The mechanical make-up is unlike that of the regular numbers, eight of the twelve pages arranged in an advertising style that gives striking pictorial layouts, plot synopsis, cast and salient exploitation angles on the first eight productions which comprise: Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside;" Tom Moore's "Lord and Lady Algy;" Geraldine Farrar's "The World and Its Woman;" Will Rogers' "Almost a Husband," Madge Kennedy's "Strictly Confidential;" Rupert Hughes' "The Cup of Fury;" Mabel Normand's "The Empty Paradise;" and Pauline Frederick's "Bonds of Love."

Good Supporting Cast for Tsuri Aoki

Tsuri Aoki, the Japanese actress, in private life Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa, is to be surrounded with a cast of prominent players for her first Universal super-feature, "The Breath of the Gods," which Rollin Sturgeon will produce from the novel by Sydney McCall. Stanhope Wheatcroft will be seen as her French lover; Ethel Shannon will play the American girl, her chum; Pat O'Malley will pla the American girl's lover; Arthur Carewe will be seen as Prince Hagane, a Japanese potentate, who becomes the Japanese girl's father; Marion Skinner as Mrs. Todd.

Minor parts will be taken by Mae Wells, Wedgewood Nowell, and N. Seki. Elaborate sets are now being built at Universal City for the production, the principal scenes of which are laid in Washington and Tokio.

Arrow Sells Hank Mann Comedies

The Hank Mann comedies that are now being advertised by the Arrow Film Corporation have been sold for every state in the Union with the exception of four. This selling campaign has been accomplished within a period of three weeks.

Urges Concentration of Ads

Joe Brandt Gives a Few Pointers on Exploitation; Speaks of New Serial

JOE BRANDT, who is to pilot the destinies of the new Western serial, "Lightning Byrce," starring Ann Little and Jack Hoxsie, has some sound advice to offer exhibitors on exploitation of serials.

Mr. Brandt's idea reduced to fundamentals is that you should concentrate your advertising largely to several days prior to playing the first episode, leaving no stone unturned to get every person possible out to see the initial chapter. This may cost more money than it would seem advisable to spend on one show, but in view of the fact that your advertising account will be divided over a period of fifteen or eighteen weeks, it is justifiable to make your appropriation many times that which you would feel that you could afford if the results were to cease after one showing.

Mr. Brandt also believes in showing the first number of a serial production as an extra attraction for at least double the period the subsequent chapters are to be run. By doing this the number of people who will become interested in the offering is multiplied, and then all these patrons can be induced to attend for future chapters on regular dates.

It is a fact that once movie fans begin following a serial that nothing will keep them away from the theatre when the continued offering is being shown.

Mr. Brandt also argues that an exhibitor is in duty bound, that he may protect his own financial interests to give the first number a big send off. Most serial productions are non-cancelable, and if the first number does not go over with a bang, the production is liable to be a liability to his program rather than an asset. He cites cases of where serials have been advertised thirty miles from the theatre which was to play them with excellent results.

When it comes to expressing opinions as to the dramatic merits of "Lightning Byrce," Mr. Brandt is enthusiastic. He says and believes it, that he has a serial which will interest from the first sequence and hold attention to the end of its eighteen weeks. He claims much that is new in the way of serial "stunts," with a logical story founded on probabilities unfolded in every episode.

A Widely Heralded Universal

"Right to Happiness" Praised in the West; Eastern Premier on August 30

ALTHOUGH the Eastern premier showing of one of the greatest photodramas of the year, namely "The Right to Happiness," has not yet been held, many prominent persons have expressed high regard for this latest achievement of Allen Holubar.

The production is to be given its first Eastern showing on Saturday evening, August 30th, at the Park Theatre on Columbus Circle where the run is to be indefatigable. Of more than unusual interest is the fact that Samuel Rothapfel has been engaged to present the production at the Park. Mr. Rothapfel, producer and manager, will include in the presentation many of his successful and long-admired musical and stage settings.

Mr. Rothapfel, considered by many one of the leading exhibitors in the United States has reviewed "The Right to Happiness" and has expressed the following opinion: "Allen Holubar has lived up to his first great effort, 'The Heart of Humanity,' in producing this Dorothy Phillips production. It is a picture that a great majority of motion picture patrons will want to see. A great many of them will want to live the scenes in the picture with the character. It is sure to be a big financial success and I would not be surprised if it breaks records for exhibitors."

In addition to the opinion of this eminent exhibitor may be added the opinions of the Los Angeles photoplay and dramatic critics who witnessed the Western premier showing of the production held in Los Angeles recently.

Novel Advertisement for Typhoon Fans

An interesting, not to speak of comforting bit of advertising is to be seen at the Pantheon theatre, Chicago—especially on a sizzling hot day. The Pantheon is filled with breezes, cool breezes, and a film despicting the work of assembling and installing the huge blowers used in creating these is shown. These seem to be as large as twelve feet in diameter, and are typhoons.

Toward the close of the picture, after the Typhoon Blowers have been erected in place and made ready, comes a most realistic piece of action. The biggest Blower is shown on the screen, with a motor controller beside it. As the controller handle is moved to throw on the power, the pictured fan begins to revolve, and simultaneously the real typhoons in the theatre are turned on. The result is as if the screened fan were actually blowing the breezes.

Extra Playing Dates a Tribute to "Sahara"

Further announcement was made last week by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of the success of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s big Louise Glaum production, "Sahara," in every section of the United States by a listing of the important theatres that have played, this being special for additional days over and above those for which exhibitors at first contracted.

In the nine weeks since its release "Sahara" is said to have done an unprecedented business for exhibitors; it has triumphed over weather conditions, has whipped the heat in certain torrid districts of the South, has brought capacity business simultaneously into the entire chains of big circuit theatres in New York, Pennsylvania, and Chicago during ten and fiftteen day periods of torrential and continuous rain.

Books "The Other Half"

Announcement has been made of the booking of "The Other Half," the Robertson-Cole feature distributed by Exhibitors Mutual for the Eighty-first Street theatre, the first picture to be booked for that house by the B. F. Keith management.

"The Other Half" has been booked four days and this will mark its initial Broadway presentation.

"Story Is Essentially the Thing"

Krellberg of S. L. K. Has Search for a Serial Plot

IN the opinion of Sherman S. Krellberg, president of the S. L. K. Serial Corporation, producers of "The Fatal Fortune" starring Helen Holmes, the story is the big factor in serial making today.

"When I set about to produce my present serial with Miss Holmes," said Mr. Krellberg, "my first move was to make a serial which would excel anything ever before produced in this particular form of entertainment. A serial which would equal any feature in point of logic, situations and excellence of production. There was only one way to carry out my intentions—secure the best story, director and actors to support Miss Holmes—this I finally accomplished.

"I realized, most of all, that the story was the biggest factor with which I had to contend in the making of my serial and after reading some hundred odd scripts, I began to fell discouraged as not one of the many stories I had read, embraced all the element so necessary in the production of a serial where the action can never slow down for a single moment, where situation upon situation must unfold itself, where every episode must contain a counter plot exclusive of the story's master plot, in which a charming romance must blend itself through all the intrigue and plotting, each episode should possess one or more hair raising thrills, the characters should be human and still each a distinct type in his or her portrayal of their part.

"This was the kind of story I sought when I went into the open market offering one of the highest prices ever offered for a serial story. This offer brought me "The Fatal Fortune" which I think is one of the greatest serial stories ever written. I immediately communicated with the author, Walter Richard Hall, whom it didn't take me long to find was either a better business man than myself, or a darn shrewd poker player—because he raised the price considerably over my original offer and beside made me like it. I wanted the story badly and I presume he wanted the money, although he didn't seem any too anxious, due, I suppose, to a snug little bank account derived from the writing of numerous successful features and a Broadway musical comedy which he has to his credit.

"I finally purchased the story—at his price. I looked about for the most capable serial director to produce it. Donald Mackenzie needs no introduction as a serial director as his "Perils of Pauline," "Shielding Shadow" and "Seven Pearls" are well remembered by every serial fan.

"With my star, story and director all lined up, I set about casting the parts with the best serial actors available. Securing such prominent players as Lieutenant Jack Levering, Leslie King, Frank Wunderlee, Bill Black. Floyd Buckley, Sidney Dalbrook and Nellie Lindrith to support Miss Holmes.

"In conjunction with the elaborateness of the settings and the minutest details given to every phase of the story, I am setting about to eclipse any exploitation and advertising campaigns ever before attempted on a serial production."

Jackie Saunders, who will soon appear in her latest World Feature, "Me and Captain Kidd"

New York Branch Plans for Paramount Week

Announcement comes that the New York Exchange has perfected the advertising and exploitation plans for the National Paramount Artcraft Week, which is to be held on August 31 to September 6 inclusive. Many special aides have been arranged and the exhibitor running a full week of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures is assured of a splendid cooperation on this week.

Arrangements have been made with the Curtiss Airplane Company whereby one of their newest and most modern machines has been engaged for the entire week. This machine will fly over New York City and surrounding territory every day during the week commencing Sunday and will take in all the prominent points dropping advertising literature for the various theatres participating in this drive for better motion pictures. Many of the theatres have also arranged with the Advertising Department to have passes good for that week dropped from the plane when it is flying over their theatre.

In order to demonstrate to the exhibitors the pulling power of Paramount Artcraft Advertising Accessories, the Company has planned to add one-third without charge to the accessories bought by the exhibitor for this week so that if an exhibitor decides to spend $15.00 on accessories for a certain picture for this week, the Accessories Department will add $5.00 more worth of accessories on the same picture, giving this to the exhibitor without charge.

MacGrath Novels Go to Wistaria

Five Stories in Deal; One by S. H. Adams Also Acquired

THE motion picture rights to five of Harold MacGrath's best known and most popular stories have been purchased by Lynn S. Card, president of Wistaria Productions, Inc., according to an announcement coming from the offices of that company this week. The works of this popular writer of contemporary fiction purchased are: "The Best Man," "Two Candidates," "Mr. 'Shifty' Sullivan," "The Place of Honeymoons" and "Parrott and Company." In addition to the works of this author Mr. Card also purchased the motion picture rights to Samuel Hopkins Adams's novel, "The Secret of Lonesome Cove," which went into ten editions and proved to be one of the best sellers of

It will be remembered that Harold MacGrath wrote the serial story of "The Million Dollar Mystery" from Lloyd Lonergan's scenario, from which Thanhouser produced one of the most popular of serials. Mr. Card in his purchase of MacGrath's works was influenced in a good measure by this fact, for it is his intention of adapting these works for special features. Mr. Lonergan will write the scenarios. MacGrath's name is recognized throughout all English speaking countries as one of the most popular of fiction writers, and his works, many of which have been adapted to the screen, have proved that his idea of actionable drama is as well founded as his romantic fiction has proved to be. MacGrath's name is a valuable asset to a screen production, according to Mr. Card's statement, and in closing this deal for the author's works he believes he has material for big productions unsurpassed by the writings of any other author.

Antonio Moreno, starring in Vitagraph serials

Samuel Hopkins Adams is one of America's best known authors and his works have served as the basic plot material for some of the screen's most succesful drama. His "The Secret of Lonesome Cove" is recognized wherever modern fiction is read, and according to Lloyd Lonergan, scenario editor for Wistaria Productions, Inc., this story serves excellent material upon which to build a drama of the most tense action.

Burton King, vice-president and director-general of Wistaria Productions, is now at work on the first serial production, co-starring Anne Luther and George Larkin. The idea for the story was suggested by Mr. Larkin and from these suggestions Mr. Lonergan wrote the working script which he says has action and thrills in every foot of the reelage, which will make for the fifteen episodes in which it will be shown. "The Lurking Peril" has been announced as the title. The story tells of the narrow escapes of the hero, a college graduate whose brain is pronounced abnormal and for which twenty-five thousand dollars has been offered by a group of scientists.

Mr. Card announces that distributing arrangements will be made with one of the largest distributors of motion pictures.

Augustus Thomas' "The Capitol" for Screen

Augustus Thomas' "The Capitol," a play of political and social Washington, which scored a distinct success for a season on Broadway, and later a powerful attraction in the larger cities of the country, has been selected as Leah Baird's next screen starring vehicle by Artco Productions, Inc., for W. W. Hodkinson distribution.

Mr. Thomas is now at work on the screen version of "The Capitol," which will be brought up to date, and in it will be revealed many angles of the present political situation at Washington.

George Irving, director of "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," "Daughter of Destiny," "To Hell with the Kaiser," and who directed the two previous Augustus Thomas-Leah Baird pictures, "As a Man Thinks" and "The Volcano," will be in charge in the protion of "The Capitol."

Bull's-Eye Is to Film "Tid-Bits"

A sixth short subject has been added to the already crowded Bulls-Eye Film Corporation's program. The newest "recruit" to the Bulls-Eye banner is a short-reel attraction of about 300 feet, to be marketed under the title of "Tid-Bits" on the state rights plan.

STATEMENT ON "BEATING BACK"

THE "Beating Back" Feature Film Corporation denies the truth of an advertising announcement of Capital Film Co. purporting to claim that the latter's picture, "The Lady of the Dugout," is based on the Saturday Evening Post story, "Beating Back," by Al Jennings. The Beating Back corporation claims to hold an exclusive contract for the rights to the story and also to the picture production entitled "Beating Back."

Three Bray Pictographs Weekly

Broadened Plans Made in Association with Goldwyn

CLOSELY following the enlargement of Goldwyn Pictures Corp., through the increase of the capitalization and the affiliation of the Shuberts, A. H. Woods and the Selwyns, came the announcement, as the last issue went to press, that the twenty million dollar corporation has scored another triumph by adding the Bray Pictographs and the entire product of the Bray organization to its unequalled list of attractions. This is regarded as an acquisition of the first importance, in that the product of the Bray Studios is unique even at the present time and will be greatly amplified under the contract with Goldwyn.

The Pictographs in single reels, which already have become popular, will be released weekly under the name of Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs, and the service now in force will be continued without interruption. The week beginning September 7, the releases will go through Goldwyn exchanges.

To more efficiently handle the growing requirements of the company, which after a time will supply Goldwyn with three reels a week, instead of one, the capital has been increased to $1,500,000. The new concern, henceforth to be known as Bray Pictures Corp., retains all the assets and the good will of the Bray Studios. Plans are nearing completion for the erection of a new studio and office building to house the production, sales and administrative departments. Also, the organization has been prepared to meet greater demands by the addition of a number of men, prominent in financial, scientific and artistic affairs. John R. Bray continues as controlling stockholder and as president.

The Short Reel Masterpiece was the productive goal of the company, according to a statement issued by Mr. Bray, and now it has been reached. Several distinct novelties are already under way and will be forthcoming early in the fall, while others are being developed for subsequent months.

One of the novelties will be the first comic cartoon in colors, an absolute innovation in screen entertainment which Mr. Bray has perfected and for which he controls basic patents that prohibit the imitation of these marvelous colored cartoons by any other producer.

Soon there will follow the first animated tragedy and the animated fantasy, also produced under basic patents controlled by the Bray corporation. The Bray organization has been working on these novelties for a considerable time and has perfected processes to such a degree that the figures on the screen appear absolutely lifelike, so much so that those who viewed the initial productions believed they were made with people instead of from drawings. Lieutenant J. F. Leventhal and Max Fleischer gave Mr. Bray valuable co-operation in bringing the pictures to their present state of perfection.

Under the direction of Waldemar Kaempfert, editor of Popular Science Monthly, and with the backing of that publication, the science, romance and adventure numbers of the Pictograph will be enlarged upon and made an even more striking feature of the Pictograph than they have been in the past. Here again the Bray Corporation controls patents that give it a monopoly on this form of screen production which opens up unlimited opportunities for the presentation of the Jules Verne type of story in which romance, adventure and science are combined in fiction of an intensely interesting nature.

Variety and human interest will be marked in forthcoming Pictographs, according to present plans. Sports will have their place, also travel subjects, intimate studies of world-famous personalities and curious novelties gathered by cameramen sent to all corners of the globe.

Sunshine Comedy Race Progressing Well

The laugh-producing contest which is under way at the Fox studios in Hollywood is causing more interest among the contestants than anything heretofore attempted. Each of the companies engaged in making Sunshine Comedies under the general supervision of Hampton Del Ruth, organizer of the famous "Beauty Brigade," is striving to make the greatest laugh creator.

The directors of these companies under Hampton Del Ruth are: Jack Blystone, Frank Griffin, Eddie Cline, Mal St. Clair, Vin Moore and Roy Del Ruth. All are pastmasters in provoking hilarity. Each believes that his company will be the prize winner. It looks as though all would be prize winners for the exhibitor. Mr. Del Ruth will be the referee of the contest, but he candidly admits that up to date he is perplexed. He is in favor of "passing the buck" to the exhibitor, the contest to be decided by the demands of the public.

It required weeks of labor to select Del Ruth's "Sunshine Beauty Brigade," but, according to him, they are well worth it. Never before, the Fox offices report, have the Sunshine Comedies been in such demand.

Moreno in New Serial

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has announced that Antonio Moreno, who has been visiting in the East, is to be starred in a new serial.

New Inter-Ocean Specials for Fall

Concern Is Lining Up Its Coming Offerings; "Long Arm of Mannister" First

THE inter-Ocean executive staff headed by President Paul H. Cromelin is busily viewing productions in the recently completed projection room at Inter-Ocean Building, 218 West Forty-second Street, New York. In attendance at these projections are: London Manager John H. Taylor and J. Rosen, Paris Inter-Ocean head, who have crossed the ocean to be present. Gus Schlesinger, E. H. Kaufman and Louis Brock, divisional sales managers, and Ricardo Castro, head of the Spanish department, complete the list of inspectors; and it is expected that the subjects decided upon for world release can shortly be announced. It is already known that the first of these subjects is "The Long Arm of Mannister," which has Henry B. Walthall as star.

"We know what we can do with Walthall in foreign fields," explained President Cromelin, "for Inter-Ocean released him in Paralta Plays with much success, and this is by far the best Walthall picture our committee has ever viewed. That was their unanimous opinion. But we are not offering this film primarily as a Walthall feature. The plot makes it a special feature, and, of course, Walthall's fine acting helps. But what made us top the list of Inter-Ocean fall specials with 'The Long Arm of Mannister' was the special nature of the theme.

"'The Long Arm of Mannister' is an adaptation of a novel of the same name by E. Phillips Oppenheim, which originally appeared in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post, and then as a book went through twelve editions. No story by an American or English writer in the last several years has had greater vogue in foreign countries than this of Mr. Oppenheim's, according to Inter-Ocean's information, and that impelled Mr. Cromelin to put the feature to the fore of his fall exportations. In the shape of a swift moving melodrama of both the good and bad passions and desires of the heart, the film moves forward through situation after situation of engrossing intensity.

"The blindness of love, the rashness of jealousy, the inevitableness of retribution, the tragedy of wrongdoing, and the evil monster of revenge are the powers which actuate the players in this dramatic expose of the human heart, states Inter-Ocean. Like everything else, they say, which deals with men and women it has a deep lesson of warning, but the primary purpose of this picture is to entertain and thrill. They claim that the production has not only been mounted with the greatest of discrimination, but that its settings are on a scale of richness and beauty that set a new standard in motion picture making.

Fast Progress Made on "Eyes of Youth"

Daily advices from Los Angeles, where Clara Kimball Young and her associates are at work on "Eyes of Youth," the first feature picture to be released by the newly organized Equity Pictures Corporation, indicate that the big picture will be ready for the market about the time originally planned, October 15. Work around the studio is well up to schedule and if no delays more serious than those which have been encountered up to the present time are experienced there ought to be no hitch in the extensive plans which are being made for the particularlly efficient and rapid distribution of the pictures.

Herbert Somborn, president of the Equity, is now in the West busily engaged in closing franchise contracts and Joseph I. Schnitzer, treasurer of the company, is busy at the New York offices of the company in Aeolian Hall.

Mr. Schnitzer said the other day that while most of the company's franchises had already been arranged for there still remained considerable choice territory which is available for distributing agencies which are in the market for pictures of the better type and are equipped to handle them.

Schomer Stars Emily Stevens in Drama

Abraham S. Schomer, author and director of many feature productions, has engaged Emily Stevens for the leading role in his next picture, which he starts shooting on Monday next. Mr. Schomer has chosen a very strong title for this production, "The Sacred Flame," and the story is the type of drama that will enable Emily Stevens to show her wonderful emotional abilities. Mr. Schomer will direct the production.

Mr. Schomer is the author of "To-Day," "The Yellow Passport," "The Inner Man," etc., and produced and directed "Ruling Passions," which was released through Select Pictures.

Favorite Players with "Blue Bonnet" Star

Billie Rhodes, the ingenue star, is accorded strong support by screen players of repute in "The Blue Bonnet," the first in her series of National Film Corporation of America productions for W. W. Hodkinson distribution.

Stanhope Wheatcroft, Ben Wilson, Scott R. Beal, Irene Rich, Lloyd Bacon, William A. Carroll, and Charlotte Merriam are well-known players in the cast.

Aids on Bara Picture

Unusual efforts have been made by the publicity and advertising departments of Fox Film Corporation in the exploitation of the Theda Bara superproduction "La Belle Russe"—screen version of the great play written by that Wizard of the modern stage, David Belasco. As remarkable as the production itself is the graphic press sheet prepared for the exhibitor and containing invaluable hints for "puting over" the superb picture.

Fairbanks' Release is Ready

Prints on "His Majesty the American" Distributed to All United Exchanges

PRINTS for Douglas Fairbanks' first release through United Artists Corporation, "His Majesty, the American" have been distributed to all of the Company's eighteen branch offices and everything is in readiness for release date, September 1.

"His Majesty, the American" will be released in eight reels. The picture is 7,900 feet long and is the most ambitious undertaking in Fairbanks' screen career.

The record breaking first run bookings, embracing runs of two weeks, three weeks and even longer periods, forecasted a production of unusual magnitude, for it has been known for many weeks that Fairbanks was going at the making of his picture with longer runs in mind.

Mr. Fairbanks likewise realized the responsibility that was his in being the first of the "Big Four" to release a production through the new organization and it has been an open secret in California, ever since production began, that the big star was putting every bit of energy, ingenuity and all of the resources of his company back of United Artists Corporation's initial release to make it his best.

It is felt by the officials of United Artists' Corporation that the extraordinanry booking record made so far by "His Majesty, the American" is the most powerful testimonial that could have been accorded Fairbanks. There is in this new high water mark in the rental of films, likewise, an endorsement of single picture booking that cannot be denied, for the leading theatres of the country have taken hold of this single picture with a determination to exploit, as is evidenced by the lengths of the runs, such as has rarely, if ever, been manifested in the show business.

All of the Company's exploitation matter is in the hands of the exchanges. The announcement that United Artists' Corporation would sell all of its accessories at cost has been greeted with tremendous approval by exhibitors everywhere. Departing from tradition in this instance, as in many other things, the "Big Four" has endeavored to put its exploitation aids and accessories on a basis that would impose no burden on the exhibitor whatsoever.

Cowboy Star Busy on New Fox

Tom Mix Is on Location in Oklahoma; Story Is to Be Another Big Western

TOM MIX'S next picture, which has not yet been given a permanent title, but which, according to Fox Film Corporation, is another of those smashing Western stories like "Rough Riding Romance" and "The Daredevil," is now in work at Ponca City, Okla.

A large company of supporting principals and scores of cowboys and horses have been transported to this location to secure the exact atmosphere and true local color for this picture, which is promised as the most sensational thriller in which Mix has appeared under the Fox banner.

According to the present plans, arranged by Sol M. Wurtzel, general superintendent of the Fox Hollywood studios—who is with Mr. Mix and Director Edward J. LeSaint on the Oklahoma trip—the production of this picture will require more time than the average, owing to the extent of the scenes pictured and the length of time which will be required to stage each one.

No better location than Oklahoma could have been selected for a Mix picture, for this is an old stamping ground of the famous cowboy star, and no one in the Fox forces could be better qualified to guide the company across the great open spaces of this picturesque country.

Dev Jennings, the regular Mix cameraman, is in charge of the photography, with the assistance of Ace Hunter and Roys Carpenter.

Simplex Notes

HIGH IN UNION AFFAIRS

The task of testing out every machine at the Simplex Factory is one that has been taken care of for the past seven years by Mr. Sam Kaplan, who has just been re-elected for the third consecutive term as president of Local 306, Moving Picture Machine Operators Union of New York City, previous to which he served one term as president of Auxiliary No. 35, also of New York City.

Mr. Kaplan has also represented his Local at various labor conventions, the last two occasions being the International Theatrical Stage Employes Convention held at Columbus and Ottowa respectively. On many occasions Mr. Kaplan has headed important conventions appearing before State and municipal bodies in an endeavor to procure progressive legislature covering the projectionists' part of the industry. The Simplex Company have at all times cheerfuly allowed the projectionists' chief to take all the necessary time required in attending to the various conventions and conferences, feeling that in so doing they were benefiting projectionists as a whole.

Since machine orders at the Simplex plant began almost tripling above normal Mr. Kaplan has been assisted in his important work of testing mechanisms by Mr. Edward N. Cannock, who is a brother of the late Francis B. Cannock, whose activities in the projectors' engineering and designing field are well known to intimate followers of Simplex progress. All Simplex mechanisms both new and those at the factory for repairs pass through the hands of these two capable men. Specially perforated black leader films are used for testing these machines at high, low and medium speeds where vibration jump and side-play is looked for and carefully checked up.

All parts are carefully looked over at this time even after the closest scrutiny to which they are subjected while being assembled has been effected.

In this testing room are also examined each week the weekly shipment of lenses from the Simplex Lens Plant at Morris Park. The same careful attention is given the inspection of lenses as that which attends the inspection of complete mechanisms. Each lens is minutely examined for chronotism and spherical aberration before being included in Simplex equipments.

MECCA FOR CHURCH FOLKS

Since the close of the Methodist Centenary at Columbus, Ohio, where nine (9) Simplex projectors were in use, the Simplex factory has been the objective of many of the delegates to the Centenary, all of whom were interested in the performances witnessed at the various Centenary Motion Picture exhibitions.

These visitors are invariably interested in the new Simple Mazda equipment, which is especially adaptable for church use, eliminating to a certain extent the prevailing fire hazard and being much more simplified as regards operation than is the arc lamp type.

Realart Heads in Two Cities Appointed

Albert W. Eden will be in charge of the important Northwest territory for Realart Pictures Corporation. His appointment as branch manager with headquarters at Seattle followed a visit of J. S. Woody, general sales' manager, who is touring the West, establishing exchanges.

Mr. Eden is said to have visited every motion picture theatre in the Pacific Northwest, and to be personally acquainted with practically every exhibitor in that territory. He has opened offices in Suite 216 of the White Building.

Jay Emanuel, who has been active in photoplay circles for the past ten years, has been appointed manager of the Philadelphia Exchange of Realart Pictures Corporation.

To accept his present position, Mr. Emanuel resigned from the city sales' management of the Philadelphia branch of World Film Corporation, after two years' service in this capacity.

Mack Swain Comedies in Great Vogue

The Merit Film Corporation have contracted with the New York Rialto and Rivoli theatres for the playing of the Mack Swain single reel Comedies produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Mr. I. E. Chadwick, the President of the Merit Film Corporation reports more than two hundred and sixty-five contracts signed on the mack Swain Comedies which reveals the fact that there is not a theatre in the greater City of New York charging an admission of fifteen cents or over that has not contracted to play the productions.

This showing appears to substantiate the judgment of William L. Sherrill President of The Frohman Amusement Corporation that clean and high class Comedies devoid of any semblance of vulgarity are in demand, and can be produced with profit to the manufacturer, the exchange and the theatre.

World's September Offerings

Five Big Releases Are Announced in which Popular Stars Are Featured

THE World Pictures program for the month of September includes five releases in which June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, Earl Metcalfe, Virginia Hammond, Arthur Ashley, and Dorothy Green are cast for the stellar roles. The subjects offer a splendid variety as regards themes.

Beginning September 1 the World offers "The Battler" a five reel picture in which Earl Metcalfe and Virginia Hammond are seen to advantage. Supporting these players are Harry C. Brown, Edwin Dennison, Frank Hageny, Irving Brooks, Florence Malone, Al H. Stewart and other prominent actors. The story was an original one by Forrest Halsey. The continuity was created by Harry O. Hoyt. Frank Reicher directed the production.

The next release is scheduled for September 8 with "His Father's Wife," in which June Elvidge is the star. Sam Hardy, late with Charles Dillingham's production of "The Canary," is featured. Mr. Hardy appeared in pictures some years ago. His most notable screen appearance was made in "Judy Forgot." Miss Elvidge is supported by W. T. Carleton, Virginia Valli, Ann Eggleston, David Davies, Marion Barney and other players of reputation. Frank Crane directed "His Father's Wife," which was written by Helen Cristene Hoerle.

On September 15 Arthur Ashley and Dorothy Green will be seen in the third of their series of pictures for World Film in "Forest Rivals," a tale of the Canadian woods. Harry Hoyt directed the picture. Jack Drumier, Kempton Greene, Clay Clement, Frank Montgomery are the best known of the supporting company.

September 22 marks the presentation of an Apfel production in which Evelyn Greeley is the star, and which bears the title of "The Oakdale Affair." This story was written by Edward Rice Burroughs, who is well remembered among patrons of picture theatres as the author of "Tarzan of the Apes." This production is said to be one of the most pretentious that World Pictures has made in the last two years. Miss Greeley was supported by a cast which included Reginald Denny, Maude Turner Gordon, Ben Johnson, Corrinne Uzzell, Charles Mackay, Eric Dalton, Albert Hart and twoscore more.

Virginia Hammond makes her second appearance on the World program in September, when on the 29th she will be seen in "Miss Crusoe," an original story by Roy S. Sensabaugh. Frank Crane is the director. The cast includes Rod La Rocque, Nora Cecil, Albert Hart, W. R. Randall, Irving Brooks and Edward Sturgis.

During the month Kinograms will offer on its De Luxe News Reel eight releases. Prizma will also be represented by several new natural color subjects.

Art-O-Graf Finishes a Long Western

The Art-O-Graf Film Company of Denver have just completed their big seven reel picture of a Semi-Western Feature "The Wolves in Wall Street" with Edmund Cobb as leading man.

Otis B. Thayer, the director, is at Steamboat Springs, Colorado, with the company filming their next big feature "The Last of the Open Range" which will be completed in about four week, and while the weather is good, will immediately thereafter make the mountain exterior of another big feature picture, as the Art-O-Graf is specializing in Western and Semi-Western features with Colorado mountain scenery as settings. These pictures will be released as soon as finished through The Arrow Film Corporation, Candler Building, New York.

The Bulls-Eye Film Corporation announces that the title of the third Charlie Dorety feature comedy has been changed from "The Sweet Shop" to "A Scented Romance."

West Reports Well on "A Man's Fight"

Telegraphic and other reports received this week following the release of "A Man's Fight" last Sunday, indicate that in his latest offering Dustin Farnum has scored another success, United Pictures Theatres points out. The first of these communications to be received came from the coast district, and in these the latest United attraction is praised both from the angle of a pleased public and capacity audiences, it is said.

"Just completed a most successful four days run of Dustin Farnum in "A Man's Fight," runs a telegram received at the United New York offices from Turner & Dahnken, "at our Oakland theatre. We considered the picture so good that we added another day to the booking. Dustin Farnum, in "A Man's Fight" is a splendid picture, which gives great satisfaction and gets the money."

Other reports received are to the same effect.

Lila Lee in Support of Wallace Reed

It has just been announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that dainty Lila Lee, star in Paramount pictures pending her appearance in another Cecil B. DeMille production, will be featured in the next Wallace Reid Paramount-Artcraft offering, "Hawthorne of the U. S. A." as chief support of the star.

Has Lead in an Alkire

Marshall MacKaye has finished his first comedy for the Alkire Photoplay Co., a two-reeler entitled "Love Apples." Work will immediately begin on the second, to be called "Five Yards of Lace," and by way of variety MacKaye will be seen as an old man afflicted with absent-mindedness. Pauline Curley, George Sheldon, Cecil Holland and others were in the supporting cast of the first picture.

Rowland Sees Big Chance Abroad

Says Europe Is Open for American Enterprise

Glowing reports of the opportunities awaiting American motion picture producers in Great Britain, France, and other European countries were brought back by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, when he returned yesterday after a ten-weeks' survey of the foreign field.

That Europe is hungry for American photodramatic productions; that there is a dearth of picture theatres abroad, especially in France, and that Europe offers a most fruitful field for the American picture producer's enterprise were some of Mr. Rowland's observations.

The Metro president returned with the manuscripts of five spectacular Drury Lane melodrama, which will be converted to the screen and produced by Screen Classics, Inc., of which Mr. Rowland is president also, with all-star casts and numerous companies.

These Drury Lane plays—virtually the entire available supply of them to be found in London—are "The Best of Luck," "The Hope," "Hearts Are Trumps," "The Great Millionaire" and "The Marriage of Mayfair." Before he left the British metropolis Mr. Rowland also negotiated for the purchase of a sixth of these stupendous spectacle dramas, the title of which he promised to make public when the negotiations for its acquisition are completed.

Mr. Rowland said that European picture theatres are doing tremendous business. The only fly in the ointment is the lack of theatres and the scarcity of American films of the newer and better class. It was with some advance knowledge of this situation that the Metro president went abroad last May, and it was to meet it that Metro planned its policy of "fewer and bigger" productions by Screen Classics, Inc., based on the world's greatest writings, both in dramatic and prose literature.

The Metro president found unmistakable signs of an improved public taste abroad. He found that old-fashioned photodramas, made from loosely-constructed stories lacking in the dramatic unities and even plausibility itself, have had their day.

"In the matter of theatres," said Mr. Rowland, "the situation is positively acute. Take France, for instance. There are something like 1,000 theatres, large and small, throughout the Republic where works of the camera are shown. These are always crowded to the bursting point, notwithstanding that some of the American pictures shown are months old.

"There is room for easily 5,000 or 6,000 photoplay houses, with an assurance of good business for all of them. Of course, we cannot expect to see new theatres spring up overnight. The havoc of war has been too thorough in France. The reconstruction will be slow, for Fritz left nothing undone in the way of complete devastation. But the field is there, and some shrewd Americans are going to go in with fresh capital and modern ideas and reap a golden harvest, unless the French beat them to it."

The British picture man Mr. Rowland found most cordial and enthusiastic over American photoplay products, notwistanding the recent "boycot" talk in cable dispatches from London. In France it was the same way, while the greatest eagerness and optimism were manifested in Italy and Belgium, two other countries included in Mr. Rowland's itinerary.

During his trip Mr. Rowland looked the entire ground over thoroughly, with an especial view to the reception of Metro's forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., productions de luxe. Work on three of these, "Fair and Warmer," Selwyn & Co.'s great stage success, by Avery Hopwood; "Lombardi, Ltd," by the Hattons, which Oliver Morosco produced on the stage, and "Please Get Married," another Morosco success, by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne, is under way at the Metro studios in Hollywood, Cal., with May Allison, Bert Lytell and Viola Dana as the respective stars.

The Drury Lane melodramas purchased by Mr. Rowland will be screened in conjunction with the famous stage plays and celebrated novels—thirty-six in all—which the Metro president announced prior to his departure for Europe.

Ochs Sees Return to Costume Pictures

After a visit to a dozen of the larger cities in which are located exchange offices for United Picture Theatres, Inc., Mr. Lee A. Ochs, vice-president of United, in a Los Angeles, Calif., interview asserts that the prosperity coming to the motion picture industry will surpass any previous condition in the history of the art.

"I have visited St. Louis, Chicago, Portland, Denver, Seattle and 'Frisco, and everywhere the Exhibitors report a heavy volume of business. All of our Exchanges report continually increasing bookings and the outlook is very bright indeed for every branch of the business.

"I look for a radical departure from the present run of stories. Dramas of present day life, while desirable, should be relieved by variety. I look for a return to the costume production and spectacular Indian stories, all of which will add variety to the screen and overcome any possible monotony of output."

New Bull's-Eye Studio Named "Argonne"

"The Argonne Studio" will be the name of the new Bull's-Eye comedies studio in Hollywood, ground for which will shortly be broken by Milton L. Cohen. Bull's-Eye president, who will come to the coast for the event. In announcing the name of the new studio, Nat Spitzer, west coast manager, stated that the Bull's-Eye trade name would in no way be affected. It is the intention of the Bull's-Eye comedies concern to perpetuate the memory of the men of the film industry who gave their lives in the Argonne forest offensive.

Advance Reports Please Greene

Paramount Official Has Good Reports on the Booking System

At the Home Office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New York City, Walter E. Greene, Vice President in charge of Distribution stated last week that reports from all parts of the country indicate tremendous business for the exhibitors booking Paramount-Artcraft pictures under the 1919-20 plan.

"Under the new booking policy exhibitors are invited to see their pictures before they book them," said Mr. Greene, "and the quality of our product for the coming year has excited the most favorable comment from exhibitors everywhere, who have already seen some of these offerings. Our confidence in the merit of these productions makes it most desirable for us to allow exhibitors to see their pictures before renting them and that this confidence is well founded has been evidenced most effectively during the past few weeks, ever since our exchanges began showing the new pro-

Mr. Greene indicated as an example of how the new booking arrangement communication from Sid Grauman, whose Million-Dollar theatre in Los Angeles has become established in the trade as one of the most successful institutions of its kind. "After having exhibited 'The Third Kiss,'" writes Mr. Grauman, "the first photoplay under the Selective Booking Plan to be played by Grauman's Million-Dollar theatre, I am thoroughly convinced that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has taken a vital step for the betterment of the picture industry including producer, exhibitor and the photoplay public.

"'The Third Kiss' was a complete success as an audience attraction, and from a box-office viewpoint it proved one hundred per cent. I was pleased to have had the opportunity of showing a photoplay of such high merit to my patrons."

On his desk Mr. Greene has countless messages of a similar nature from exhibitors in both large and small districts who have already viewed Paramount-Artcraft pictures for 1919-20.

In addition to these reports from exhibitors, Mr. Greene has a number of newspaper clippings from cities where advanced showings were held in theatres, and at which time all motion picture critics were invited. The most recent of these theatres trades showings was held at the Forsyth theatre, Atlanta, Ga., when Elsie Ferguson in "The Witness for the Defense" and Wallace Reid in "The Valley of the Giants" were put on. The presentation of these pictures was handled in a high-class manner and started at ten thirty in the morning until noon, the showing being resumed at two o'clock.

A report from the Atlanta office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation received at the home office expressed great enthusiasm over the manner in which the productions were received by the trade.

"When we first announced the release of the new year's product, we felt that the pictures already scheduled for September represented the very best that combined genius of the greatest artists could give," said Mr. Greene. "The day of loose praise and questionable business methods in the motion picture industry, is quite over. Pictures that are of merit will succeed, those that are below the standard will fail. The exhibitor of the future will buy his pictures as he does an automobile. He will be satisfied with the merit before he pays money for it. That our product for 1919-20 is as near 100 per cent. as is possible to make it is indicated by the manner in which it is being booked everywhere."

Little Star to Again Produce in East

On the completion of her present Paramount-Artcraft picture, "A Girl Named Mary," under the direction of Walter Edwards, Marguerite Clark, the popular little Famous Players-Lasky star, will start work on "All of a Sudden Peggy," and when this is completed will leave for New York to resume production in the east.

Song Tie-Up on Cosmopolitan Picture

Another song tie up is offered to Famous Players-Lasky exhibitors with the publication of "The Dark Star," by the Jerome H. Remick Company. The song is based on the Cosmopolitan production of Robert W. Chambers' novel, which stars Marion Davies and is released as a Paramount-Artcraft special.

The front cover of the song is made up of a splendid photograph of Miss Davies, and the lettering gives due credit to the picture.

Metro Publicity Staff Is Augmented

Dann C. Byck and Don Keyes are recent acquisitions of the Metro news department on the West Coast. Dann Byck, who recently wrote a series of articles on motion pictures for the Louisville (Ky.) Courier, and is on the staff of the University of Pennsylvania publication, Red and Blue, will write studio publicity. Don Keyes was an instructor in the United States Army School of Aerial Photography at Rochester, N. Y., having charge of 250 men during the war. He is news and publicity photographer.

Hamilton Thompson, present scenario writer associated with William Fox organization, has sold to World Pictures an original story which bears the working title of "Miss Captain Kidd." Evelyn Greeley will be the star.

Anita Stewart's Latest Soon Released

Anita Stewart's latest production, "Her Kingdom of Dreams," on which a quarter of a million dollars is said to have been spent by the producer, Louis B. Mayer, has reached the finishing stages of cutting and assembling and is now ready to be submitted to the acid test of the box office. The picture is claimed to be remarkable in many respects, but chiefly because of the great cast, which includes the names of more featured players than were ever before brought together in a single production.

It was produced under the direction of Marshall Neilan.

The production will have its first showing in New York at the Strand Theatre September 15.

"Topics of Day" Taken by Chicago House

"Topics of the Day" have been booked by the State-Lake Theatre, Chicago's two and one-half million dollar vaudeville playhouse, according to an announcement made by Timely Films, Inc., the producers. This popular attraction has been scoring a big success at the Palace Theatre, New York City, and in other vaudeville theatres allied with the B. F. Keith Booking Offices.

French Actress Appears in Truex Comedy

Miss Cyprian Giles, who plays the role Vera Vernon, the Vampire, in support of Ernest Truex, in "Too Good to Be True," his second comedy under the management of Amedee J. Van Beuren, recently arrived in America from Paris, where she appeared before the camara for Gaumont in a serial called "Judex."

Ideal Picture Location

It develops that the reason for Mary Miles Minter and her supporting company going to Dedham, Mass., to film the exteriors for her first Realart production, "Anne of Green Gables," is because the "location scout" of the company found there what is said to be almost a duplicate of the house described in the "Anne" books.

This is the Fairbanks' House, one of the oldest landmarks in New England.

Exploitation for Lee Kids

Rogers Plans a Campaign in Keeping with High Class Nature of Pictures

EXHIBITORS booking the new series of two-reel comedy playlets in which Lou Rogers is shortly to present Jane and Katherine Lee are to have every facility afforded them for a thorough local exploitation of that attraction, according to an announcement from the producer last week.

In keeping with the high class nature of the playlets advertising matter that is high grade is being prepared in anticipation of the release, and a thorough billing and press campaign throughout the country is promised. As a starting step the two-reel comedies are being advertised through the medium of attractive inserts in the NEWS which are of a class not usually found in the case of short subjects. These inserts are so planned that their appeal extends not simply to the exhibitor, but so that they may be of attractive interest to the ultimate consumer—the public, and to that end their design is such that they afford a concrete guide from the point of view of wording and design for the exhibitor to adapt to his use in his local advertising, it is pointed out.

With New York the great visiting city for so many of the public who ultimately form the audiences throughout the country, plans are under way for keeping the Lee Kids attraction prominently before visitors by means of specially selected electric sign locations, thus aiding the exhibitor by direct advertising to his ultimate public. Tie-ups with national advertising commodities are also promised, together with a billboard campaign.

"In story selection, direction and general treatment of production no pains or expense are being spared," says Mr. Rogers, "to make of the Lee playlets an attraction that shall be as unique and different from the general class of comedy as the young principals are themselves unique among motion picture stars. In this age of specialists we do not hesitate to claim that in the Lee Children we are offering a special entertainment in a class by itself. Our expectations of a large popular demand for the playlets are being well borne out by the large number of applications we have already received for play dates."

Upholds Author-Supervision

McLaughlin, Author and Producer of Feature, Remembers Early Experience

MUCH has been written in Motion Picture trade papers and press sheets in recent weeks of the organization of "Eminent Authors' Leagues," "Famous Authors' Corporations" and "Amalgamations of Playwrights" for the betterment of the motion picture productions. Several of the biggest film corporations in the country have apparently come to a realization that after all, "The play is the thing," and that in order to get the play, they must have in active association with themselves, writers of ability.

In this connection it is pertinent to know that one of the outstanding current motion picture successes, "The House Without Children," was produced on this basis by the Argus Enterprises of Cleveland eight months ago.

The Argus Motion Picture Company of Cleveland has for its President Robert McLaughlin, well known as a dramatic playwright. Mr. McLaughlin recently wrote and produced a play entitled "The House Without Children."

Coincident with the preparation of the play, he prepared a motion picture scenario which his company produced under his supervision, and the result has been an emphatic vindication of the "eminent authors" idea.

Mr. McLaughlin last week said that his introduction to the motion picture business occurred when one of his plays was produced in film form. His ideas and suggestions were waved aside, and on the screen he could not recognize his own creation. Another play met the same fate, and then he decided to produce himself in his own manner. "The House Without Children" resulted, and Robert W. Priest, agent for the Argus, is said to have disposed of the World territory for a sum approximating $250,000.

Vitagraph Has Signed Gypsy O'Brien

Gypsy O'Brien is the latest recruit from the legitimate field into picturedom. She has just been engaged by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, for a picture version of "The Day Resurgent," by O. Henry, and this will be her maiden attempt on the screen. Work has already been begun at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio under the direction of Joseph Byron Totten. Webster Campbell, formerly juvenile lead in many Vitagraph pictures, and just discharged from the army, will play opposite Miss O'Brien.

Poster Campaign on Pioneer Pictures

A simultaneous billboard showing of twenty-four sheet stands of the two next Pioneer releases, "The Boomerang" and "The Unpardonable Sin," is now under way in New York City, State and in New Jersey. This showing precedes the first runs of these pictures by about three weeks.

Bookings on these productions are now being received in New York and Buffalo exchanges as well as the exchanges handling the Pioneer attractions in other territories.

Conflict of Faith Seen in "Daughter of Mine"

How great a strain the faith of an orthodox Jew will bear has been revealed in Madge Kennedy's Goldwyn photoplay, "Daughter of Mine," a picture particularly suitable for the coming Jewish holiday season. The story is a reaffirmation of the blind faith of an old East Side pants presser for the religion of his fathers; and his faith remains true and firm, even when his only child falls in love with a Gentile.

Semon Busy on Comedy of Circus Life

Now that Larry Semon has made such a success of his comedy, "Between the Acts," with its locale in, of, and around the stage during a vaudeville performance, he has started another with "professional" surroundings. His new comedy, as yet unnamed, will have to do with circus life.

Arbuckle Wins a Bet

Immediately alongside the Henry Lehrman Studios at Culver City is an aviation field where machines carrying passengers at ten dollars per, land. The other day, George Bellman, photoplay editor of the Seattle Times, paid a visit to the studios, and was about to leave when Roscoe Arbuckle, who makes his Paramount Comedies at this plant, hove in sight. Roscoe urged Bellman to stick around, but Bellman had an important appointment with the Pacific Ocean on the Venice beach.

"I'll get you there in time," said the comedian, "so don't worry."

But Bellman did, and displayed his agitation by looking at his Ingersoll frequently.

"Don't look at that watch again," 'Fatty' said. "Calm yourself. I'll bet you ten dollars that I get you to Venice in time for your appointment."

A short time later, the newspaper man was urged to go over and see the airplanes. He was invited to get in and see how comfortable the seat was.

"I'll take your ten now. Driver, take this man to Venice, you've got ten minutes to get there, and you only need five."

Bellman paid the bet, and in turn Arbuckle handed the ten dollars to the aviator.

Dorothy Gish Appears in "Nobody Home"

Dorothy Gish's next Paramount picture "Nobody Home" will be released Aug. 24th. It is said to be the best picture she has yet produced since she became a star and is expected to win for her as well as for all who have had any part in the making of the picture, high praise and commendation.

Ralph Graves, Vivian Montrose, George Fawcett, and Raymond Cannon are among the leading members of the cast.

Ad Campaign on Lone Star Westerns

The two-reel Lone Star Westerns, featuring Harry Meyers, June Keith and Charles Graham, are being released by the Arrow Film Corporation. Practically all of the territory has been sold on these western dramas, and now the Arrow has started an extensive advertising campaign through the trade papers to exploit these pictures for the various exchanges.

Dintenfass Leaves for South

Producer of Cuckoo Comedies Tells of His Aims on These Two-Reelers

ON leaving for Jacksonville this week where he will take opportunity to go over the stories and production details of the second installment of the Cuckoo Comedies series, Mark M. Dintenfass gave out a statement bearing on the forthcoming releases to be made under his direction.

"For the Cuckoo Comedy productions I have been fortunate in closing yesterday a contract whereby we will secure for the comedy series the artistic services and marked histrionic ability of one of the best known comediennes of stage and screen," Mr. Dintenfass sets forth in his statement in part. "Because of the fact that this young artist has still some little period of her present contract unexpired, I am not at liberty at this time to announce her name, but when the time shortly arrives for that to be done exhibitors throughout the country will recognize in it one of the foremost feminine exponents of clever comedy with a well established name both on screen and speaking stage.

"I am leaving for Florida and the Dintenfass studios to personally supervise the several comedy productions shortly to be put in hand following the four two-reelers now completed Additions and improvements will be made to the plant to cope with the larger scope of production we have determined upon.

"A highly gratifying response to the announcements recently made through the trade papers regarding the Cuckoo Comedies has already come to hand in the form of a really extraordinary number of applications and inquiries from exhibitors for the comedies, the details of release and channel of distribution of which will be announced very shortly. I am able to state that considerable competition exists for the releases, several of the leading distributing firms being in the market for them. Negotiations are at the point where a decision can be made within a few days."

Allens Take "Virtuous Men"

S-L Feature Will Be Run Throughout Canada Over the Largest Circuit

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, of S-L Pictures, stated this week that a deal had been closed whereby "Virtuous Men," starring E. K. Lincoln, had been acquired for Eastern Canada by Jules and J. J. Allen, the leading showmen and distributers of the Dominion. The arrangements were consummated between Phil Kauffman, general manager of the Monarch Film Company and Mr. Sawyer, acting for S-L Pictures. The Monarch Film Company is the distribution branch of the extensive Allen exchange interests which handles the territory contained in Eastern Canada. Kauffman made a trip especially to New York in order to take up with the S-L executives the details of the broadcast exploitation campaign which he will inaugurate next month in behalf of "Virtuous Men." In addition to placing an order for large quantities of the various special aids for the S-L Picture, Kauffman also arranged during his stay in New York for the special appearance of Grace Darling in conjunction with the initial presentation of "Virtuous Men" at one of the leading Allen theatres.

The purchase of "Virtuous Men" by the Allens is in keeping with the unusual program of pictures which they have been offering to exhibitors of the Dominion during the past year. They have acquired every big subject of importance turned out by the leading producers, and Phil Kauffman has added the S-L Picture to this imposing list in the nature of an added attraction.

The owners of "Virtuous Men" in Eastern Canada at the present time control forty- seven theatres, are owners of five first-run houses in Winnipeg and are building new theatres in Montreal, Cleveland and Detroit.

"Daring Hearts" Attracting

Exhibitors Are Interested in Vitagraph Feature with Bushman-Bayne

EXHIBITORS throughout the country are daily displaying a stronger interest in "Daring Hearts," not alone because its joint stars, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, have not been active before the screen of late, but because of the general character of the picture. It is claimed to be one of the most pretentious ever made by Vitagraph and is shown in six reels.

"Daring Hearts" has the World's War as the background, being rather of the war than in it. The locale is in Alsace, near the German border and the beginning and end of the picture are the beginning and end of the war. The action begins the day war was declared between France and Germany and the final scene comes the day the armistice was signed.

This play was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady. The authors took every opportunity to provide beautiful and unusual settings and the camera man took advantage of the opportunity provided. While the scenes of necessity were made in this country they are replete with the atmosphere of Alsace. Scarcely two scenes were taken in the same place, but the general effect is one of perfect continuity.

In addition to giving "Daring Hearts" a fine production scenically, Vitagraph provided the stars with an exceptional supporting company. Jean Paige and L. Rogers Lytton have important roles. Others in the cast include Karl Dane, Arthur Donaldson, George Des Lyon and a score of others. The picture was made under the personal direction of Henry Houry, the famous French director.

The advance bookings for "Daring Hearts" were unusually heavy. Among the earliest exhibitors to appreciate the value of the pictures was Marcus Loew, who arranged to have the feature shown in all his New York theatres and in many near-by towns and cities.

Ennis Still with S-L

Bert Ennis, director of Publicity for S-L Pictures, wishes it known that he has not severed his connections with the firm of Sawyer and Lubin. During the past four weeks Ennis consented to handle some special exploitation work for a well known state right organization. This has given rise to the rumor that the publicist and Sawyer-Lubin had parted company. Ennis is permanently located with the S-L forces.

"Oh Boy" an Attraction to Detroiters

"Oh Boy," the Albert Capellani special, distributed by Pathe, is creating a veritable sensation in Detroit, according to Pathe and according to reports from the Michigan Metropolis, exhibitors are fairly clamoring for dates on the first motion picture ever adapted from a musical comedy.

For an entire week, the Adams theatre, where the initial filmusical comedy had its first run showing in Detroit, the house was crowded at every performance.

World Signs McKee

World Pictures announces the engagement of Raymond McKee, one of the most popular and best known light comedians on the screen. Mr. McKee's first picture will be an Oscar Apfel production in which he will play the leading role opposite Miss Evelyn Greeley.

Coming from Iowa twenty-six years ago, Mr. McKee commenced his career in the Alhambra Stock Company in Chicago, playing every type of part and thus acquiring the best schooling that the stage can afford. He has played with a number of picture concerns.

Did "Mickey" Please? It Did

THE following letter, sent by W. H. Wagner, Manager of the Carthage Opera House, Carthage, N. Y., to T. R. Gardiner general manager of the Gardiner Syndicate of Buffalo, and which finally made its way back to the home offices of W. H. Productions, speaks for itself regarding the merit of "Mickey."

"The last ducat has been copped and 'Mickey' goes down in history as the record breaker for this house, and incidentally, T. R. Gardiner is the biggest man in Carthage and they are interested in knowng whether you want to be elected Mayor or will be satisfied with Congressman from this district.

"The writer is about the only dissatisfied ndividual in this burg, when I copped a peak at this "Mickey' picture, heard what the people had to say about this "false alarm," saw them walk up and dig a half a buck for a ducat, and come back again the next day to see it again and not a squak, when I've been showing them the best obtainable and getting 15 cents, I'm sick, very sick.

"Hereafter its $1.00 worth of advertising and 5 cents worth of pictures for me, and I'm cured on this one day stuff.

"Seriously, the show went over big and while I know that our little gross is not to be compared with some of your big winnings, still I guess its not so rotten and I'll bet either your or Zimmerman a new hat that you don't break our record for attendance or gross in any town of the same population.

"Regarding this Zimmerman person, if he ever pays this town a visit, and flashes another 70-30 contract I'll step right on his neck; Jess James was a piker compared to him.

"We got into a jam on that orchestra stuff and I thought perhaps an explanation would be in order.

"We have always secured the services of this orchestra for $10.50 per night and supposed that the same prices would go, but when I asked for the bill they knocked us off for $40.00 for the two nights claiming that there were four shows.

"Your representative kicked on sharing on this but I made him come across and told him if you kicked very much that I would make it good and I will, on the same day that I make a bonfire of my liberty bonds and sign another 70-30 contract."

Third Goldwyn Anniversary

Exchange Men Preparing to Establish Records During the Week Sept. 8-14

EVER since the announcement of the enlargement of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation by the increase of the capital stock to twenty million dollars and the affiliation of the Shubert, A. H. Woods and the Selwyn interests, Golywyn Exchange men have been preparing to make Goldwyn's anniversary week, September 8-14, surpass all records.

Every member of the twenty-two exchanges is out to make the six days memorable. They mark the third anniversary of Goldwyn, and even more than that they stand as the beginning of a new era in the life of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, which now has unequalled resources in capital, play material, stars, directors and authors.

Immediately after the word of the Shubert-Woods-Selwyn deal had been wired to the exchange managers, meetings were called at the exchanges that the entire selling force might be made thoroughly familiar with the meaning of the new line-up and what it signifies for the future of Goldwyn Pictures. Several exchange managers suggested that a sales drive be made on the strength of the expansion of Goldwyn, and anniversary week, coming at the launching of the fall season, was selected as a suitable time.

The sales force has supplemented the slogan, "This is a Goldwyn Year" with "This is a Goldwyn Week." For six days every salesman is going to drive home the line, "Don't Book Goldwyn Pictures Until You Have Seen Them," which expresses the keynote of Goldwyn's new booking policy.

Each of the twenty-two exchange managers has wired the home office that his organization is going to make a fight for the place at the top of the list when the sales for the week of September 8-14 are totalled. The big drive will be aimed to get new Goldwyn exhibitors on the strength of the fall series pictures, Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside," Geraldine Farrar in "The World and Its Woman," Madge Kennedy in "Strictly Confidential," Tom Moore in "Lord and Lady Algy," Mabel Normand in "Empty Paradise" and Will Rogers in "Almost a Husband."

Initial McCarthy Film Ready

"Out of the Dust" Is Title Chosen; Is First of Six Planned Pictures

AFTER two months of intensive productive work, during which time the facilities of two studios were utilized and most of Southern California visited in order to obtain proper background for the exterior scenes, the McCarthy Picture Productions has completed its initial release and arrangements are being negotiated to market and release the six or more reels which will comprise this special feature.

In "Out of the Dust," the symbolic title which has been chosen for the picture, the producers have obtained a striking presentation of a romance of the early West of a time contemporary with the characters made famous by the brush of Frederick Remington, and much of the romantic atmosphere of that artist's paintings is said to be apparent in the pictorial beauty that embellishes the action of the story.

Specially strong, according to the producers, was the cast that made possible the graphic realism of its author's inspiration. An all-star company was selected by John P. McCarthy, who supervised and directed the production, for the characters of the story. These include Russell Simpson, Dorcas Matthews, Robert McKim; the talented boy-actor, Master Pat Moore; Bert Sprotte and Master Micky Moore. Each is said to be a perfect type for the role portrayed.

Although the basis of the production is a western story, it should not be confused with the usual drama of Indians, cowboys and soldiers, according to Mr. McCarthy, with whom was associated as his assistant his brother, Henry McCarthy. Instead, the picture has both a modern inception and epilogue and the drama revolves around the personality of a little group of pioneers and other early settlers of Western America.

"Out of the Dust" is to be the first of a series of six independent extra-length features which McCarthy Picture Productions are making in the coming year, and it is probable that extensive plans now under way by a group of Los Angeles capitalists for elaborate studio equipment soon will be carried out. Officers of the organization have been installed in the Laughlin Building, Los Angeles.

A New Photoplay Technique

A NEW technique of the photodrama is said to be displayed in the Helen Keller picture, "Deliverance," which is now on view at the Lyric theatre. George Foster Platt, producer of the picture, here uses for the first time on the screen a method approximating that of the speaking stage.

D. W. Griffith was much interested in Mr. Platt's work when "Deliverance" was in process of production in California, declaring that if he was successful in carrying out his idea another step forward would be taken in photo-dramatic art.

This new technique consists in playing each scene just as it would be played on the stage, without such immaterial padding as the indiscriminate coming and going of the characters, and without flash backs or unnecessary close ups. No person is shown walking down a street, or going upstairs or along a hallway, or even crossing a room unless that action has some specific dramatic purpose of its own. When a scene is begun it is played through and not interrupted two or three times to show what is happening elsewhere. The only exceptions are in the case of visions or to illustrate thoughts.

There is an almost complete absence of close ups in which the faces of the actors are shown several times larger than in life. All the action is at close enough range for the players to appear of normal size. In this way Mr. Platt has done away with the "Movie Face" and other exaggerations of appearance and manner which prevent so many pictures from ringing true, and in no case is any essential facial expression lost, or even imperfectly conveyed.

When Mr. Platt assembled his cast of actors and his technical staff in Los Angeles to begin "Deliverance," he addressed them at length upon his ideas, and told them to forget everything they had been in the habit of doing in pictures, and be prepared to adapt themselves to an entirely new order of procedure.

At first this was difficult for some of the experienced movie actors in the cast, like Roy Stuart, Edith Lyle, Betty Shade, Edythe Chapman and Elmo Lincoln to do. But, before the picture had progressed far, all were intensely interested in Mr. Platt's idea and were convinced of its dramatic value. Viewing the completed picture strengthened them in this belief.

Oklahoma Setting for New Mix Picture

Tom Mix, the William Fox cowpuncher star, and Sol. M. Wurtzel, general superintendent of the Fox Studios in Hollywood, California, have gone to Ponca City, Oklahoma, to make arrangements for the filming of a new Mix picture.

This picture, it is announced, will probably be the most sensational in which Tom Mix has appeared, and will contain stunts more dangerous and hazardous than any ever undertaken by the Fox star—more thrills than any picture he has heretofore produced.

Edward J. LeSaint, the director, and members of the Mix company numbering more than fifty persons, with all the horses which have become famous in the Mix pictures, including Tony, Aggie, Cloudy, Red, Eagle, Joe and Chub, will leave for Ponca City during the week.

Pauline Said to Screen Well

Hypnotist Who Appears in a Supreme Serial Satisfies President Reynolds

"THE producer who takes hold of some well-known star on the legitimate or vaudeville stage for the purpose of putting him across on the screen as a big attraction without giving the most ample consideration to the question of how that actor's personality will adjust itself to the screen," said Mr. Sidney Reynolds, president of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., "is making a serious error. Popularity on the spoken stage is of immense value and prestige,—but remember that the screen audience wants to see successful screen personality. Although Mr. J. Robert Pauline enjoyed an enormous popularity on the vaudeville stage and received, perhaps more publicity from newspaper and theatrical journals during his hypnotic performances than most stars, nevertheless this was only half the determining factor in placing him in our big 15 episode serial. It is his ability as a screen actor which we were anxious to determine and the initial screen tests showed us one of the most fascinating and interesting figures which had ever invaded the screen.

"This Supreme Serial, continues Mr. Reynolds," will, I admit, tax the histrionic capacity of Mr. Pauline. The powerful emotional situations with which it has been invested, the unique element of parental love, intensely developed, the terrific suspense of climaxes which we claim to be the most daring and original ever attempted on the screen either in serial or straight feature production are such as will readily disclose whether J. Robert Pauline is the great actor whom critics have claimed he is, and that, we believe, he will demonstrate he is."

"The Other Woman" Theme of Sullivan Story

The case with which a jealous wife can condemn to public ignomy an innocent girl as "the other woman" in a domestic controversy is taken as the underlying theme in Thomas H. Ince's latest production for Paramount, "The Virtuous Thief," in which Enid Bennett plays the stellar role. The picture is scheduled for release August 10th.

The author, C. Gardner Sullivan, seems to raise in this story a cry for justice to the girl who is accused by a passion inflamed wife. In this story, as is undoubtedly the case in many real instances, the good name of an innocent girl is publicly besmirched by a member of her own sex who employs neither reason nor justice in the fury inspired by the green-eyed demon.

Dietz Heads Goldwyn's Service Department

Howard Dietz, formerly of Goldwyn's publicity department and more recently assistant advertising manager, has been made manager of Goldwyn's exploitation and service department, a branch of the organization designed to be a right hand to exhibitors and one that promises to assume increasing importance under the present plans of the twenty million dollar corporation. Mr. Dietz assumed his new duties this week.

Young Writer Handling Player Publicity

Hadley Waters, one time reporter and recently connected with the Coburn's, has opened an office at 156 Fifth Avenue, where, he will secure publicity for a few stars of the legitimate and screen.

Though this young writer is still on the sunnyside of twenty five, he is the author of several short stories, photoplays and vaudeville sketches.

Buffalo Exchangeman Sees Big Season

The manager of the Buffalo Exchange of Realart Pictures Corporation, Henry E. Wilkinson, was in New York last week to consult with Arthur S. Kane, president of the company. He is reported to have brought in a stock of contracts for Realart Pictures.

"Everything looks rosy for the motion picture exhibitor in my territory," said Mr. Wilkinson.

Bee Hive Expanding; New Exchanges Very Soon

R. C. Cropper, President and General Manager of the Bee Hive Film Exchange Company, announces that on September 15 his company enters the Feature film field. Two pictures a month, of five or more reels, are to be released, from the established Exchanges in Chicago, Milwaukee and Indianapolis.

The first feature for release will be Texas Guinan's five-reel Western, "The She Wolf."

Bee Hive has also acquired the series of two reelers being produced by Capital Film Company, in which Neal Hart and Al Jennings are featured. It was the original intention of the Capital Company to distribute its own pictures, but the demand for them has been so great that Capital officials deemed it more profitable to manufacture and distribute through established and recognized exchanges.

Mr. Cropper also announces that he will soon have at least two or more exchanges in nearby states, which he hopes to invade with Bee Hive Service just as soon as deals are completed for the service.

First Release of New Scenic Changed

The premier release of the Burrud "Legends of the Wilderness" scenics is scheduled for October 15, instead of October 1, as previously announced, according to a statement issued by the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, which will market the "Legends" on the states rights basis. Leland J. Burrud, who is filming the "Legends," was last heard from in the northern American Rockies, where he is picturizing the second series of the "Legends," which are being released in one reel.

Non-Theatrical Distribution

Endorsements from Clergymen and Educators Are Received by Famous-Lasky

SINCE the announcement that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation had established a Non-Theatrical Distribution Department, for the production and distribution of pictures to churches, schools, clubs and other non-theatrical organizations, David K. Niles, general manager of the Non-Theatrical Department, is said to have received scores of letters from clergymen, educators and officers of women's clubs commending the enterprise in the warmest terms.

These letters have come from nearly every section of the country, and reveal, it is said, the deep interest which civic leaders have in the motion picture as a force for education and proper community development.

In nearly every case, the author of the letter stresses the point that non-theatrical exhibition of motion pictures cannot help but have a powerful effect for good on regular theatrical exhibition. Several clergymen, who have been leading in the fight to convert the various churches to the merit of motion pictures, declare that non-theatrical distribution will win a tremendous following for motion picture theatres that these theatres do not now enjoy.

David K. Niles, general manager of the Non-Theatrical Distribution Department, in commenting on the letters this week, said

"The response from clergymen, educators and others interested in civic affairs, which has greeted the announcement of the Non-Theatrical Distribution Department's inauguration shows clearly the tremendous field for development which the motion picture has not yet touched. And it also shows the great demand which exists for the exhibition of motion pictures by non-theatrical organizations.

"One of the results of the development of this field will be an immediate and vast enlargement of the public that already attends picture houses. Many pious people are prejudiced against anything savoring of the theatrical, but if they can see a good, clean, entertaining and instructive motion picture in their church, they are sure to be counted among the patrons of the regular theatres. Thus non-theatrical distribution acts as a great missionary force, to bring into the theatre people whom the exhibitors could never themselves reach.

"Her Purchase Price," Barriscale's Latest

"Her Purchase Price" Bessie Barriscale's latest B. B. production which is to be released as a Robertson-Cole feature and distributed by Exhibitors Mutual is said to be a new type of picture for famous star. In it Miss Barriscale plays the part of 'Sheka' who has been reared from childhood by a Bedouin bandit posing as a silk merchant, in an atmosphere of culture and luxury for the slave market. She is sold at a Cairo slave auction to Sir Derek, played by Albert Roscoe, and taken by him as his wife to England. The part gives some excellent opportunities for dramatic acting.

In her role, Miss Barriscale wears some gorgeous Oriental gowns, lavishly trimmed with jewels and spangles. Many of them were weeks in the making and are said to be among the best exquisite costumes of their type ever used in pictures.

Beck Buys Play Success for Leah Baird

Arthur F. Beck, President of the Artco Productions, Inc., announces the purchase of the Broadway success, "The Capitol," by Augustus Thomas, as the starring vehicle for Miss Leah Baird. This will make the third release of the Artco Productions, Inc., the first two being "As A Man Thinks" and "The Volcano," and Mr. Beck promises that "The Capitol" will mark a new epoch in photoplay presentation.

New Methods in Filming "Mutt and Jeff"

With the receipt by Fox Film Corporation, from London, of the first of the new series of Bud Fisher's motion picture cartoons of "Mutt and Jeff" based on their round-the-world tour, a new plan will be tried out by the Fox organization for animating these funny little characters on the screen.

Nothing short of perfection is the eventual aim of William Fox in reproducing these black-and-white comics. The technical staff of the Fox company for some time has been occupying itself with a plan aimed at perfect registration of these drawings with a limitation by gauge of less than five-thousandths of an inch. This will insure the same evenness of motion and continuity of line as is found in regular motion pictures of living characters.

The material upon which this new idea is to be worked out is said by the Fox Company to be the most humorous theme ever evolved by the comic artist whose drawings have become known the world over. "Mutt and Jeff" will be seen in and around London in a series of incidents which are bound to produce laughter from audiences throughout the world.

The process which has been decided on for this purpose is a mechanical one of such construction that it is entirely fool-proof and can be operated by hand, with the subjects in full view at all times.

Press Book on "Three Black Eyes"

Just in proportion to the merit of a picture should the advertising helps for same be, believes Triangle. And that's why this company is greatly increasing its aids to exhibitors on the next Taylor Homes special, the final title of which has been decided upon as "Three Black Eyes." The outsanding feature of the publicity on this Holmes production is a twelve-page plan book, which is being published by the Publicity Department. This will contain, in addition to advance press stories, synopses, reviews and current publicity, reproductions of ad cuts, posters, and many other promotion and advertising ideas.

According to the latest reports from exchanges the Taylor Homes vehicles are going strong.

Rolfe Titles First of Chambers Stories

The title of the first production of the Robert W. Chambers series of stories which B. A. Rolfe is picturizing for the new firm of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., is announced as "The Amazing Lovers." The production is based on Mr. Chambers story "The Shining Band," with adaptations for the screen by Charles A. Lyons.

Adventure, romance, intrigue—all these elements are woven into "The Shining Band" with that piquant style for which Robert W. Chambers is noted. It is a story of a group of fifteen wordly, selfish, cynical characters on one hand of an eccentric recluse, his pretty daughter, and a band of fanatics on the other. The group of fifteen comprise the elect of the Sagamore Club, a paradise in the Adirondacks, who, by the power of money, put a fence around God's country. In the midst of their exclusive social barrier lives O'Hara, recluse and man of mystery, who guards his holdings in the heart of the club's preserves against intrusion with a fiery hatred for all society because he has suffered by society's hands.

Upon this foundation Mr. Chambers has built his story.

Holubar Starts Directing "Ambition"

After personally supervising the world premier of "The Right to Happiness," his first big super-production since "The Heart of Humanity," which took place recently at the California theatre, Los Angeles' newest and largest picture playhouse, Allen Holubar is now preparing to start immediately upon "Ambition," a new feature drama with Dorothy Phillips as the star.

Miss Phillips will be seen as a country girl who is fired with ambitions to become the greatest opera singer of the age.

Real Exhibitor Aids at Cost

United Artists Depart from Custom and Offer Helps That Will Be Welcome

EXHIBITORS who still resent the practises of some of the film producers in the matter of individual "little things," after some years of having these practises inflicted upon them and who have felt that the publicity aids that the exchanges prepare for their use failed in their mission, are going to be interested in certain of the policies adopted by the United Artists Corporation, which will soon be a reality to the exhibitors rather than a name in the trade papers.

The organization which will market, the forthcoming productions of Griffith, Fairbanks, Pickford and Chaplin, meaning those which have not already been contracted for, the first one which is "His Majesty the American," with Fairbanks, has announced it's selling policy and is now ready to present its exhibitor aids for inspection.

To begin with the paper on "His Majesty, The American" advertises the star and the title only, seven words, with no mention of the producer the author or anything else and this idea is to be followed out in all the other forms of advertising. This paper is to be sold to the exhibitor at seven cents per sheet, actual cost it is claimed. In the same manner other publicity matter is to be sold without profit, with lobby photos, listed (the ordinary size, 8 x 10) at twenty five cents per set and the larger sizes at a like reduction. All this publicity matter is of more than excellent quality, and presents Fairbanks name above everything else.

Another departure that promises to prove popular is the preparation of newspaper helps. In the use of cuts every exhibitor has been handicapped by poor producers material, especially in the matter of those designed for newspaper display. The United half tones come in different screens, those which will print well for newspaper displays being marked, as also are those suitable for program and other glazed paper work. These cuts all have two mortises instead of one, do not have any trade mark or producing firm lettering and with them a display may be prepared by the insertion of such added matter as the exhibitor desires and still have the ad look well.

Complete press stories for the theatre's newspaper campaign have been prepared covering the time when the booking is announced to the day of showing, and is very complete in every way.

There are many little helps that United Artists have planned for the exhibitor some of them perhaps trival but which all in all will go to cement closer relations between exhibitor and producer than has in many cases existed.

It may be argued that United Artists can well afford to be generous in small matters which is without doubt true but nevertheless the fact remains that the general plan outlined completely in the various pamphlets which go to make up its exhibitor's aids would seem bound to convince that this firm is going to treat the showman with fairness which is all the average theatre manager expects.

Thanhouser Plant Renamed Fischer

The name of the studio and plant built and formerly occupied by the Thanhouser Film Corporation at New Rochelle, N. Y., has been changed. It is now known as the Fischer studios, after A. H. Fischer, who recently acquired the property by outright purchase to be the home of B. A. Rolfe productions. Thus passes from film history a name that was identified with motion pictures since the days of the single reeler.

Since purchasing the property, Mr. Fischer has spent thousands of dollars in adding equipment and making improvement to accomodate Mr. Rolfe's producing policy, which calls for the picturization of specials.

Sunshine Comedy Bands in Race for Laughs

A race which is unique is now at a dead heat at the William Fox studios in Hollywood, Cal., where the Fox Sunshine comedies are making films for live exhibitors.

The contestants in this novel race are many. They include the entire personnel of five Sunshine comedy companies which are working under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth, director-general of this branch of the Fox business.

The record for laughs which has been established and maintained for some time by the Sunshine comedies was the cause of the race, and Mr. Del Ruth is responsible for the interest and excitement aroused over the possible outcome. Each of the five companies entered is striving with might and main for a total of more laughs per reel than its four competitors, and with this keen struggle in the field, each company director is extending himself in an effort to win the verdict—which Mr. Del Ruth will render on the completion of the pictures now in the making.

"Bonds of Love," Heart Interest Drama

That there are still possibilities for novel twists in the treatment of the eternal triangle, is illustrated by Louis Sherwin in his first Goldwyn story, a drama replete with heart interest in which the star, Pauline Frederick, has every opportunity to reveal her powers as an emotional actress. The picture is entitled "Bonds of Love" and is in the fall series list announced by Goldwyn.

Director Reginald Barker found in "Bonds of Love" a scenario that strikes out along new lines in the building up of a story of love, jealousy and sentiment—the kind of sentiment that rings true because it is founded on traits of human nature.

Tom Gibson to Direct Hank Mann Comics

An announcement from Morris Schlank of the Hank Mann Comedy Company conveys the information that Tom Gibson, well known on the Coast as a writer, has been engaged to direct Hank Mann in the series of one-reel comedies being made for the Arrow Film Corporation.

HERMAN C. RAYMAKER, relative of the famous cartoonist, has been engaged as director of the Gale Henry comedies, being made for release by the Model Comedy Company. Mr. Raymaker formerly was a director at the Mack Sennett studios and was with the Triangle Corporation making comedies when the latter was dissolved.

Agnes Johnston, a recent acquisition to the scenario staff of the Thomas H. Ince studio, is the author of the story in which Charles Ray is being starred.

Douglas MacLean, playing opposite Doris May in that Ince star's picture, "Twenty-Three and One-Half Hours' Leave," has had too much, he says, of Southern California's most widely known fruit. During a recent scene in the filming of the picture he was bathed in orange juice as a result of a pitched battle with oranges provided for by the script.

Gladys George is the latest Ince player to be placed under contract, her services having been secured for a limited period by the widely known producer, as a result of her highly successful work in support of Charles Ray.

Friends of Enid Bennett are receiving several interesting snapshots of that star's activities during her vacation from work at the Thomas H. Ince studio, which she is spending at Topango Canyon, near Los Angeles. She has established a cabin there and has surrounded herself with all the comforts of metropolitan existence, aside from the diversion of "roughing it."

Suggestions for the name of her new home will be gladly received by Louise Glaum, star of productions by J. Parker Reed, Jr., according to word which she passed around the studio. Her residence, purchased recently, is perched upon a little knoll adjoining the golf links of the Culver City Golf Club.

One of the most elaborate street scenes ever erected in the Western Vitagraph studios, according to the management, is that which has been built for the use of Noel Smith in his direction of his newest comedy, which will be based upon the amusing episodes of life in a city tenement district. A practical horse car will furnish material for several of the fun-provoking happenings in the picture. Smith has just completed five of his Vitagraph comedies, having Babe Hardy as his featured comedian.

Full of enthusiasm both for the possibilities of the story material he has been furnished and the talented ability of his star, Rollin S. Sturgeon, has begun at the Universal studios the filming of "The Breath of the Gods," from the novel by Sydney McCall, and featuring Tsuri Aoki, the wife of Sessue Hayakawa. "It is the best story that I have been able to obtain for several years," said Mr. Sturgeon, "and I am highly pleased at the opportunity of directing Mrs. Hayakawa, in whom I have lots of faith for the production."

After an absence of six years spent at other studios, Harry Mann has returned to Universal City to produce and play the principal roles in a series of comedies to be built up from a novel newspaper humorous feature. The secret of his success in these, he believes, will lie in the uttermost seriousness with which he will portray the personage whose misadventures are widely known among newspaper readers.

Eugene Mullen, Universal screen editor and formerly connected in the same capacity for many years in the Eastern Vitagraph studio, has resigned his position with the "U" and is returning to New York City, according to an announcement coming from the studio the week of August 4th. Definite arrangements had not been made then for his successor.

William Dowlan, Universal director, has begun preparations on the script of his next feature production, having completed the filming of "Loot," the story by Arthur Somers Roche in the Saturday Evening Post. Among the actors prominent in Dowlan's latest picture were Darrell Foss, Ora Carewe, Arthur Macklin and Joe Gerrard.

Harry Carey and Kathleen O'Connor again are the prominent players in Jack Ford's latest production at Universal. The director, who collaborated on the script with his star, recently returned to Universal City after having gone with his company to Big Bear Lake in the San Bernardino Mountains, where those scenes requiring the atmosphere of a rugged wilderness were filmed. The story is to be named "Pay Day."

Light comedy drama is occupying the attention of Tod Browning of the Universal directoral forces, to the exclusion of heavy themes which previously he has handled with Mary MacLaren as his star. Browning's latest picture story is an attractive whimsy called "Old Jeremiah," in which, in addition to Miss MacLaren, were prominent Spottiswoode Aiken, Dave Butler, Fred Turpin, Arthur Carewe, Eugenie Forde and Clarissa Selwyn. Next in course of production by the Browning-MacLaren combination will be "Myself, Becky," a story of a New York Winter Garden show girl.

Kenneth Harlan is vacationing between pictures at Catalina Island, having completed his work as the featured player in "Who Knows," which is not a riddle, but the name of the production directed by George Siegman, with Helen Eddy playing opposite Harlan.

Charles Brabin's Ideas on Directing : : : : :

HAVE you ever been lucky enough to hear Charles Brabin talk? Really talk, when he's in the humor for it, and feels like giving vent to some of the ideas that he keeps stored up in his mind for just such occasions? If you have, we know you'll agree with us that he is one of the most interesting directors in the profession, and if you haven't, you've missed an unusual treat. Mr. Brabin has apparently read every story and novel that has ever been written, he knows fiction characters just as he knows people, and, being one of the real pioneers of the Industry, he knows everybody worth knowing in the film world. He worked in the now famous old Biograph studio on Fourteenth street, and he was part of the Essanay colony when it manufactured nearly the entire screen output for the United States. Best of all, he knows how to tell about past happenings, in such a way that you feel that they were certainly history making events; or else he gets you into such an absorbing discussion of some curious question of psychology, that the minutes and the hours fly by unheeded.

So that when Mr. Fox went off to Europe and gave him carte blanche to make any sort of a picture he wanted for Theda Bara's next production, we rather expected something good as the result of his long experience and vivid imagination, combined, of course, with natural talent and a keen sense of beauty. But the parts of "Kathleen Mavourneen" that we saw run off in the Fox projection room, the other day, surpassed our wildest expectations.

"The director's fondest dream is to have free scope with a production at least once in his life," Mr. Brabin said seriously, "and it was realized for me in this instance. I chose the story, worked out the continuity, wrote the titles, designed the sets, and I'm watching the cutting very carefully, so that if you don't like it, I haven't a single alibi to stand on. My heart is in this picture, and I've enjoyed making it more than anything I've ever done in my life."

"Kathleen Mavourneen" needs no alibi. It is one of the really great pictures that come as such a source of encouragement to those who are always hoping for better films, the sort that will rouse enthusiasm from the legitimate stage lovers. You can take the skeptics who condescend to visit the movies only once in seevral years to see it without fear of disproving your assertion that the movies have improved, and with the full assurance that they will enjoy five reels of absolute and unbroken beauty.

Even the poverty stricken home in Ireland, with the bony horse and the hungry goats and chickens living in the hut like members of the family, but with light that you will vow is real sunshine pouring in through the little window beside the huge, black fireplace, brings out the artistry that can be found in desolation, if one knows where to look for it. The confessional in the old abbey with its bare walls and flagged stone floor looks like a perfect charcoal drawing, due again partly to the marvelous lighting effect. The scenes of the county fair, the cows following one another through the cool, clear water of the little stream beneath magnificent trees and into the daisy field fresh with morning dew, the moonlight in the castle garden with its glorious shrubbery, will satisfy the heart of any nature lover.

Then comes the wedding in the magnificent cathedral, which looks like a set that must have cost at least a million dollars, as prices go these days, but which Mr. Brabin assured us is nothing more or less than an enlarged photograph of the superb interior of one of the world's famous churches, double exposed in some way that we shouldn't like to have to explain too technically, with the wedding party in the foreground. We ran completely out of adjectives when we saw that scene, and then, as though that weren't enough grandeur, there followed the ball room set with the walls lined with mirrors, so that the dancers in the lights of the enormous candlelabra were reflected again and again, all having the most beautiful time except the poor little bride, whose slippers were so tight that she defied her lord and took them off, to his amazement and indignation.

It's a simple story, that of the little Irish girl who loved her girlhood playmate, but thought she had to marry the dreadful old Duke to save her family from eviction and starvation, with the old, old struggle between Love and Duty, which only goes to prove that it's the oldest themes and the simplest stories that make the greatest plays. The horse's tears when Kathleen bids him farewell and her vain effort to wake up when the Duke comes the next morning, are such touches as one usually attributes only to Griffith's imaginative powers, while the interest in the story never lags for an instant, each scene furthering the emotional intensity of the drama until—but we aren't going to disclose the end.

Averse as he is to publicity, we think Mr. Brabin will find himself famous after the reviewers have seen "Kathleen." MARGUERITE JONES.

Paths to Stardom Easy for Lucy Cotton : : :

"NO, I didn't just happen into pictures," Lucy Cotton told us in the most melodious of voices, when we found her in her dressing room at the Biograph studio, "and I didn't run away from home after suddenly making up my mind that I was destined to be famous either. Perhaps my chief claim to distinction lies in the fact that I've always had my mother's full approval and encouragement. My mother is English and she always longed to go on the stage herself, so that when she married and came to America, she made up her mind that she would give her daughters the opportunities that she had missed. She talked to us about the stage and took us to see the best plays and to hear the best operas, whenever it was possible, and [illegible] she placed me under Mrs. Alma McDonnell, one of the best known dramatic instructors in the South.

"Then when she thought we had outgrown Texas she brought us to New York, and we studied under Theodora Ursula Irvine at Carnegie Hall and at the Aton Diehl Conservatoire of Music. You see she doesn't think one should take up a profession by chance, and I've been steadily preparing for my life work ever since I can remember."

"And I've invested all my money in Cotton," Mrs. Cotton exclaimed laughingly from her seat near the window, "always drawing interest, but never touching the principal."

"We think you've made a wonderfully good investment, now that we've seen the finished product," we said truthfully, "and we think it's perfectly lovely for a daughter to fall in with her mother's wishes so exactly. Do tell us about some of your little girl thoughts, Miss Cotton. If they were at all like the atmosphere you've just described, they must have been charming."

"Oh, all my ideas have always been centered on the stage, and I used to act out the stories my mother read to me even before I was old enough to read them myself. One funny practice of mine that I remember quite clearly, was, whenever I had heard anyone sing, to turn on all the faucets in the bathroom till the noise of the running water was just as loud as I could get it. Then I pretended that it was my accompanying orchestra, and tried to sing loudly enough to hear my voice above it. The louder I sang, the happier I was."

Miss Cotton is a real Southern girl, born and reared in Houston, Texas. She has wonderful, dreamy brown eyes and very heavy lashes, and exquisitely soft, white shoulders, and besides having her intelligent mother to decide what is best for her future, she has a French modiste, who with two assistants, does nothing but plan and execute fascinating costumes that are suited to Miss Cotton's own individuality. For her part in Gerald Bacon's "Sun-Up" she had nine frocks, and for her present one in the International Special production of "The Miracle of Love," under Robert Leonard's direction, she has no less than fourteen new gowns. Lucky girl?

"Yes," she will tell you, "I am lucky in having such a mother, but, further than that, there's no such thing as 'luck' in one's success. I'm just beginning to reap the results of patient work, and it's the most wonderful feeling in the world to discover suddenly that your efforts have amounted to something, and that you really have the inborn gift of acting that training will bring out, but never create. I've been so happy in my last two parts, both my directors are splendid to work under, and everybody has done so much for me. Isn't it marvelous to grow up and find out that you have the ability you've been striving so long for?"

Miss Cotton's first part was on the legitimate as understudy for Ina Claire in "The Quaker Girl," and she played the role twice at the Park Theatre. Then Mr. Brady engaged her for Meg in "Little Women," after which came important roles as Alice Fenton in "Polygamy," Betty in "Turn to the Right," and last winter, as Martha in "Up in Mabel's Room," she scored heavily. When speaking of "Little Women," Miss Cotton told us of an interesting coincidence.

"Grace George and Olga Nethersole were my two heroines ever after I first saw them," she said, "and I remember watching Miss George in 'The Divorcee' and wondering if I ever could possibly be anything in the least like her. Just five years later, in the same theatre I had my first real part as Meg, under Mr. Brady's management. I was thrilled at even playing on the same stage that Miss George had played on."

"And now other girls are going to watch you with envious eyes," we replied. "Yes, truly, we haven't the slightest doubt of it. You've only begun, and if our judgment is worth anything, there's a tremendous future before you."

Barent with Aywon

Here and There with Players

WHILE on location in the famous Hood River Valley, Oregon, Mitchell Lewis, famous for his characterizations of the French Canadian type, journeyed recently to Portland, Oregon to make personal appearances in the Columbia and Majestic theatres there, where his recent releases, "Jacques of the Silver North" and "Children of Banishment" were being shown. Mitchell, who is making independent productions, is nearing the final scenes of his forth-coming feature, "The Last of his People." Immediately upon his return from the northern location, Mitchell accompanied by Eddie Hearn, who plays the "heavy" role, Harry Lonsdale, Joseph Swickard and twenty others journeyed to another location at Big Bear Lake where the final scenes are being made.

Production of the work of a noted author will be begun by Henry B. Walthall in the near future as the first of his independently made subjects in which he is is starring under the management of N. W. Aronson with whom Walthall now is associated following the expiration of his contract with the National Film Corporation. Walthall has decided that in order to make the pictures which suit him best, it is necessary for him to have his own producing unit.

Having completed the production of "Letty," the Pinero comedy, starring Pauline Frederick at the Goldwyn studio, Frank Lloyd departed the week of August 11th for Bellingham, Washington, accompanied by several members of his company, where he will start production of "The Silver Horde" first of the Rex Beach special features to be offered by Goldwyn as one of its Eminent Authors productions. For two weeks prior to his departure, Mr. Lloyd and the author were in nightly consultation over the story.

Scott Dunlap, Fox director, is at work on the script of a new comedy the name of which has not been chosen, in which Elinor Fair and Albert Ray are having the leading roles.

Tom Santschi at present has the leading part in a big feature being produced at the American Studios, Santa Barbara. The picture is one regarding which the American Company has succeeded involving in secrecy.

Two daring horsewomen are having opportunity to do all the riding they wish at the big Irwin ranch in Wyoming, where Fred Stone, the noted stage and screen comedian, is playing the leading role in "The Duke of Chimney Butte" under the direction of Frank Borzarge. Josie Sedgwick and Vola Vale are the two riders who are playing opposite him, and they they having a very cowboy-like existence.

The connection between screen villainy and motion picture direction is not easily ascertained, but that the one calling is preparatory for the other became apparent again in the announcement made during the week of August 11th, that Robert McKlim, who has made a specialty of "heavy" parts, is to direct for the Great Authors Company under the supervision of Jesse D. Hampton.

In oder that he might collaborate with his wife in the study and preparation of his script for his next production without the interruptions of civilization, Clarence Badger, Goldwyn director and Mrs. Badger are in seclusion somewhere in the vicinity of Big Bear Lake in the San Bernardino mountains sixty miles from Los Angeles, where, according to word at the studio, they will remain until Badger is ready to begin putting his story on the film.

After her strenuous work in "A Woman of Pleasure," being filmed by Jesse D. Hampton for Pathe, Blanche Sweet, who has the stellar role, is taking a much needed brief rest before she begins work in her next picture. The story is one which is declared to have much unusual atmosphere and a tensity of action which should provide a remarkable vehicle for Miss Sweet. It was written by James Willard, and has been given wide stage presentation.

Wilfred Lucas recently had all the experiences of the sensations of an elevator man whose apparatus has gone insane. In one of the episodes of "A Woman of Pleasure" in which Lucas played a leading role supporting Blanche Sweet, Jesse D. Hampton's star. The story required Lucas to make an ascension in a captive balloon of the old-fashioned spherical style. Adjustments were made to hold the balloon stationary at a certain altitude, but atmospheric conditions were such that the balloon rapidly rose and fell in as many seconds every time

Jane Novak, who appears in support of Wm. S. Hart

Lucas attempted to regulate it by throwing out sand bags. The actor declared afterwards that it was bad policy to eat a heavy meal before undertaking a similar experience.

Rita Stanwood has been engaged at the Jesse D. Hampton studios to play opposite Henry B. Warner in the noted stage star's screen version of "Maruja," the story of Southern California life by Bret Harte. Miss Stanwood has had other roles opposite Warner in previous engagements, having appeared with him in several stage and screen plays.

Thomas Holding has been engaged in support of Louise Glaum in her latest production by J. Parker Reed, Jr., of a story by Louis Joseph Vance.

Mrs. Louis J. Gasnier and her seven year old daughter, Maude, have joined Louis Gasnier, Astra film producer, at his home in Hollywood, following a decision by the head of the Astra and Lou Cody Productions to sever all production connections in the east, and establish his business permanently in California. Mrs. Gasiner was induced to take part in some of the scenes made at the beginning of "The Third Eye," the fifteen episode serial which James W. Horne is directing with Warner Oland and Eileen Percy as the featured players.

Mary Thurman, who recently deserted comedy for dramatic roles, has a prominent part in the support of William Desmond in the newest Desmond feature, "The Prince and Betty," being made at the Jesse D. Hampton studios under the direction of Robert Thornby. The story is a comedy drama by P. J. Wodehouse. It is possible that Miss Thurman may be engaged for the stage presentation.

Changes in Officers at World Studio

Several important changes have been made at the World Film Studio at Fort Lee during the past few weeks. Robert McIntyre having resigned as casting director a successor in this position has been secured by the engagement of Priestly Morrison. Mr. Morrison comes to World Pictures with an acquaintance with the work of actors, second to no man in America. He has been an actor of prominence in companies under the management of Charles Frohman, Klaw and Erlanger, Liebler and Company, Messrs. Shubert, Henry B. Harris and other managers who have produced the biggest successes of the stage during the past decade. Mr. Morrison will also assume the duties of assistant studio manager, working in association with William Fischer, who has been appointed studio manager.

Reichenboch Promoting Equity in West

Harry Reichenboch arrived in Los Angeles from the east a few days ago and concluded negotiations with Manager Harry Garson of the Clara Kimball Young Company to handle the promotion work throughout the country for Miss Young's coming releases, which are to be handled through the Equity Film Corporation. This is an added office to the organization, and will not in any way interfere with the work of William Rudolph, who is to continue as New York representative.

Henabery Secured to Direct Mrs. Chaplin

Following his announced intention of securing the best possible director for his new star, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Louis B. Mayer has just signed a contract with Joseph Henabery to direct all the future Mrs. Chaplin Productions. Henabery has the distinction of being chosen to direct the first Big Four Production of Douglas Fairbanks "His Majesty the American."

Rolfe Chooses a Strong Cast

Players in Chambers' Series for A. H. Fischer Features All Well Known

B. A. ROLFE'S announcement that only players of solidly established reputations would appear in the Robert W. Chambers series of features which he is producing for A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., is borne out by the list of those engaged for "The Shining Band," the first production of the Robert W. Chambers series, now in process of picturization under Mr. Rolfe's supervision and direction, with Chester DeVonde as co-director, at the former Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle. The cast secured for "The Shining Band" is made up of such well known players as Grace Darling, Ramsaye Wallace, Sally Crute, Marc McDermott, E. J. Ratcliffe, G. V. Seyffertitz, John Goldworthy, Robert Paton Gibbs and John L. Shine.

Grace Darling, who is widely known, first came before the public eye through a transcontinental trip made in the interest of the Heart-Selig weekly.

Though a comparative newcomer to the screen, most of his years having been spent on the speaking stage, Ramsaye Wallace has already created a large following for himself among film fans.

The screen has known Sally Crute for the last five years, during which time she has played prominent parts, besides being featured in scores of pictures.

Marc MeDermott, like Miss Crute, has been appearing in pictures for years. He was a featured player in Edison releases almost from the inception of the company until its dissolution.

E. J. Ratcliffe, who appears as the leading "heavy," has filled many important engagements in both stage and screen productions.

The other players are all well known, having scored in many screen or stage successes.

By reason of the fact that every one of the players is of established reputation, no one of them will be featured over the other in the billing.

Story Bought by World

World Pictures has purchased from Edwin August the screen rights to his original story called "The Pointed Pen" and will be put in story form immediately so as to make it possible for production during the coming month.

Katterjohn Contest on for Alaskan Tales

Offers of prizes ranging from $200 to $10 are being made through daily newspapers and various magazines by Monte M. Katterjohn for the best letters telling the most memorable incidents of the gold stampede to Alaska in 1899 and 1900. The author-producer, whose photoplays, "Carmen of the Klondike," and "The Flame of the Yukon," were notable for their fidelity to Alaskan atmosphere, explains that he wishes to obtain striking material for his forthcoming production now under way at the Garson studios in Edendale.

"I am seeking the 'sourdough's' individual opinion of what was memorable," exclaimed Mr. Katterjohn, "and incidents to be suitable may be deep with pathos or rib-tickling in their funniness. Actual names and dates should be given, though these will not be made public. Every letter received will be seriously considered. The incident is the thing, and anyone who was in Alaska during that stirring time may be able to furnish just what is wanted."

For the incident deemed most suitable for screen production will be paid $200, the second prize will be $100, the third fifty dollars, and payments of ten dollars will be made for the next best fifteen accounts. All names should be mailed before October 1, 1919.

Irene Castle Finishes F. P.-Lasky Picture

Irene Castle has completed her second Paramount-Artcraft production, "Should a Wife Forgive?" for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and with her husband, Robert Treman, has gone to her home in Ithaca, N. Y.

The scenario of "Should a Wife Forgive?" is taken from the well-known novel by Sophie Kerr, "The See Saw," and Charles Maigne both adapted it and directed the production.

At the Ince Plant

PRODUCTION of the screen version of "Mary's Ankle," which has been adapted from the stage comedy of the same name, has been begun at the Thomas H. Ince studios with Douglas MacLean and Doris May in the leading roles. The co-stars have just completed their work in "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours Leave," the film version of the Mary Roberts Rinehart story of army camp life which ran in the Saturday Evening Post.

A majority of the members of the technical and production staffs of the Ince studios were engaged at San Pedro, California, during the week of August 11th in collaborating with Irvin Willat in that director's staging of some elaborate submarine scenes which are to be used in the special Ince production now under way. Many special devices were taken from the studio to the harbor for the underwater scenes, and even more striking results were obtained by Mr. Willat than those shown in his recent production, "False Faces."

The next of the features in which Dorothy Dalton is to be starred for the Ince-Paramount program is "Black is White," a screen version of the popular novel by George Barr McCutcheon. Charles Giblyn has been engaged as her director.

Word was received at the studio from its New York City headquarters to the effect that "The White Rook," the latest Dorothy Dalton picture, has been completed. Final scenes for the subject were made in Brookline, Mass.

Christie Activities

AL CHRISTIE has selected the title, "Wilder and Western" for the two-reel comedy coming up from the Christie studios. This gives Fay Tincher the role of an Eastern girl who comes West and takes the position of athletic director in a Y. W. C. A. Many of the scenes are laid in a gymnasium and a new line of fun has been conceived for these scenes by Director Christie, Earle Rodney, Eddie Barry and Neal Burns, all of whom have been seen in Christie comedies for the past several years, and the other principals of this two-reel subject. Neal Burns returns to the Christie organization after a year and a half in the army and several months in comedies at Universal.

Many improvements are being made at the Christie plant which include the enlargement of the stage space that will accommodate larger sets and the erection of a new two-story building which will house publicity, art, title, scenario, and a portion of the business staff. The stages have been completed and these provide that every foot within the area covered by the plant is now utilized for shops or buildings with a mammoth stage in the center, which at times is taxed to capacity.

FINAL scenes of "The Black Gate," in which Earle Williams stars, have been filmed under the direction of Theodore Marsten. The story was written by Hilliard Booth.

Adventures of a revenue officer with a band of moonshiners are displayed by Larry Semon in his newest comedy, "One Wild Day" for which he is making final scenes.

Antonio Moreno, under the direction of William J. Bauman, has begun production of his new chapter-play from the story by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Pauline Curley plays opposite Moreno, while Brinsely Shaw, J. Morely and Sam Polo also have prominent parts. The production of "Regeen," from the book of Ellis Hoyt Brainard soon will be begun under the direction of David Smith as the next stellar vehicle for Bessie Love. The scenario is by William Barbarin Laub.

About Metro Players

SIX celebrated Drury Lane melodramas, it has been announced by Maxwell Karger, have been purchased and will be filmed with all star casts. In addition to these, the new forthcoming productions will be "Maison de Dance," starring Mme. Nazimova; "The Willow Tree" with Viola Dana, and "Along Came Ruth," with May Allison. Ray Smallwood, formerly head of the photographic department, is to direct one of the forthcoming productions.

Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of the Metro organization, left on August 6th for New York city to meet Richard A. Rowland, president of the company, on the latters return.

Fox Studio Doings

TWO feature productions were put under way at the Wm. Fox studios the week of August 11th, as vehicles for Gladys Brockwell, and the co-stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, while the same players are featured in productions just completed.

Under the direction of Frank Beal, Miss Brockwell has begun the first scenes of a picture, "The Devil's Riddle" by Edwina Levin, a story largely concerning an artist and his model. The latest Brockwell release has been named "Thieves" which was also under Beal's direction, and has been shipped east for release.

Scott Dunlap, directing Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, is at work on a scenario by J. Anthony Roach for his two leading players. His fifth feature with the two, "The Lost Princess," he made in fifteen working days, and believes that this is a record in fast production for comedy drama.

Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of Sunshine Comedies, has engaged Vera Stedman, widely known in comedy work, to lead a new comedy

Bob Reeves in "The Radium Mystery," a serial produced by the Pacific Producing Co.

Jack Hoxie, in stellar cowboy parts in films produced by National now being made by Frank Griffin.

Jack Blystone is completing a Sunshine Comedy in which Maude Wayne has the leading role.

Sol M. Wurtzel, general superintendent, has returned from Ponca City, Oaklahoma, to which place he accompanied Tom Mix where that feature player went to stage his next western picture.

The J. P. Lasky Studio

The third comedy by Roscoe Arbuckle since the making of the new contract with Famous Players-Lasky, was finished during the past week and has been titled "The Hay Seed." This comedy is laid in a small town, and contains a very unique country store set. The interior of the store is sixty feet deep, with a stock of everything from needles to baled hay. Buster Keaton and Molly Malone are the principal supports of Arbuckle.

When D. W. Griffith and a company of about fifty people arrived at Sonora the other day to take exterior scenes for his latest Artcraft which is to be a western picture, all were surprised to see a string of limousines lined up at the curb near the frame station which has stood since the days Bret Hart visited the mining camps here and wrote some of his western stories. Mr. Griffith had made accomodations at the hotel for the company and one Congressman, state senator, the mayor of Sonora, delegations from the Chamber of Commerce, the County Board of Supervisors and many other dignitaries of the village were on the reception committee. Griffith and the company were banqueted and following the welcoming address, the producer was presented with the last nugget found in "them thar diggins" known as Jack-Ass Hill. Two million dollars worth of gold have been taken from the hills about Sonora. Griffith remained in the mining country for more than a week and has just returned to the studio to make interior scenes for this western story, as yet untitled.

Kathlyn Williams as she appears in "A Girl Named Mary," a new Paramount-Artcraft production

The new Dorothy Gish comedy drama being made at the Griffith studio by Director Elmer Clifton will be started this week. This subject is more or less western, but no title has been determined upon. The cast is rather large and contains an array of very well known players such as George Fawcett, Ray Cannon, Kate Toncray, Porter Strong, Rhea Haynes, Francis Parks, Norman McNeil and others.

Universal Newsettes

PRODUCTION of "The Strange Case of Cavendish," the novel by Randall Parish, with Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin, has been begun under the direction of Jack Wells, at Universal City. The novel was adapted by William Piggott and Joe Brandt, and the continuity is by Karl Coolidge. The supporting cast includes Barney Sherry, Robert Walker, Gertrude Astor, and Henry Barrows.

"Wild Lions and Loose Bandits" the five reel animal comedy starring Joe Martin, has been finished under the direction of William S. Campbell and Harry Burns.

"The Gift of the Desert" is to be the title of Harry Carey's next starring vehicle. It is being adapted from a story by Peter B. Kyne, and the continuity is being prepared by H. Tipton Steck.

Monroe Salisbury has completed "The Divorced Wife" under Douglas Gerrard's direction. The story was adapted from Elliott Peake's magazine novelette, "The Altar on Little Thunder." Alice Elliott plays opposite Salisbury.

Allen Holubar is making elaborate preparation to start soon on the filming of "Ambition," in which Dorothy Phillips is to be starred.

The final scenes were taken this week for "The Winged Trail," the aerial melodrama starring Lieutenant O. L. Locklear, by Director Jacques Jaccard.

Here and There

HENRY LEHRMAN, producer of Lehrman Comedies, returned to Los Angeles the week of August 11th from Colorado Springs, Colorado, where he was attending a meeting of the executive officers of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Mr. Lehrman stated that he has made releasing arrangements with First National, and that work on the next two comedies will be begun immediately at his studio at Culver City.

Patents have been applied for by E. V. Morris, head of the electrical department at the Lehrman studios for a new switchbox and connection board, which, it is said, removes the present dangers of shock and fire in the use of studio lighting equipment. The appliance is being used at the studio, and arrangements are being made to market it elsewhere.

Mitchell Lewis, accompanied by Eddie Hearn, Harry Lonsdale, Joseph Swickard and twenty others of his company, are on location at Big Bear Lake, California, where an elaborate hunting lodge has been constructed for use in scenes of the latest Lewis production "The Last of His People."

The first of the eminent authors series to be put in production is "The Cup of Fury," adapted from the Rupert Hughes story of the same name, and the cast for this announced includes Helene Chadwick, Rockcliffe Fellows, Florence Deshon, Sidney Ainsworth, Kate Lester, Herbert Standing, Frank Leigh, Clarissa Selwyn and Dwight Crittenden.

George Larkin who is co-star with Ann Luther in "The Lurking Peril" a serial to be produced by Wistaria Productions, Inc.

Preparations for the making of other eminent author stories are going forward in the scenario department which is under the management of J. G. Hawks, who this week engaged Bess F. Hass as his assistant. Miss Haas has been scenario writer at several of the west coast studios, and is the author of a number of original plays.

Ground will soon be broken by M. L. Cohen, Bulls Eye president, for the company's new studio in Hollywood, which is to be known as the "Argonne" in honor of the many ex-service men employed at the studio.

Title of the latest Charles Dorety comedy has been changed from "The Sweet Shop" to "A Scented Romance."

An addition to the Bulls Eye releases has been made of a one-reel subject of about 300 feet to be marketed under the title of "Tid Bits" on the states right plan.

Equipment Service

News and Gossip in the Equipment World

The Berger Manufacturing Co., of Canton, Ohio, has found other fields so much more lucrative that it has practically dropped the manufacture of sheet metal theatre fronts.

In the same city is a plant that seems in a fair way to be the successor to the Berger Manufacturing Co. This is the Kanneberg Roofing and Ceiling Co., J. E. Milner, general manager. Kanneberg theatre fronts and metal lobbies are found in a very large number of amusement houses in the middle west.

That $10,000 projection room at the new Newman Theatre which was described in the Projection Department several weeks ago has caused a good bit of comment. It is a fact that there is not a theatre in the world at the present time so well conceived, designed, constructed and above all, equipped as this Kansas City house insofar as the projection is concerned.

And for this reason there are a lot of hungry eyes looking toward Projectionist Ransdell and his job. Who wouldn't envy a fellow with a lay-out like Ransdell's and a manager who knows what he wants and gets it.

Besides the old established lines of goods there are any number of new devices and machines that have poked their heads above the surface and are taking a look around before emerging and challenging the rest.

F'rinstance there is the Replogle Portable Projector, a machine of the usual suitcase type. Then there is the Projecta-lite equipment for Mazda lamp installations. And many more. If you'll keep an eagle eye on these columns in the weeks to come you will hear from all of them.

Last Week We Met—L. C. Porter

IT was over in Harrison—Harrison, N. J.,—that we caught up with the subject of this sketch. And when we say "caught up" we mean it, for L. C. is a hard man to catch. What with working on a couple of hundred lighting questions and following a similar number of propositions through the factory his time is fairly well consumed.

It wasn't so many years ago that Porter first saw the Light that he has been following ever since. We have it on pretty good authority that his first words were along these lines: "Say, Dad, old top, the intrinsic brilliancy of that illuminant you have there is too concentrated at the point from which the rays pass into my retina. Douse it!" From which you may glimmer that L. C. Porter became and is an authority on illumination.

Back in the year 1907 the faculty of Sheffield Scientific School gave Porter his cap and gown and a strip of parchment and told him to beat it. He did—as far as the General Electric Company. After two years in the Test Course, he went with the Edison Lamp Works at Harrison and has been there for ten years, first in the Sales and then in the Illuminating Engineering Department.

Since being in the latter department "L. C." has spent his time developing new applications for the Mazda Lamp. While engaged here he became convinced that the greatest of these new fields was that of Projection and has accordingly specialized in that work.

In his spare time, so to speak, Porter has developed such other illuminants as locomotive headlight lamps, stereopticon lamps, flood lighting lamps, daylight signals for railroad work, aeroplane signals and high speed signal lamps for Navy work.

Last fall he went into the Service doing Research Work on signal equipment at the U. S. Naval Experimental Station at New London, Conn. If he could but tell of the many things developed there it would prove to be the most interesting of reading but John J. Censor has sealed his lips tightly on those subjects.

But even though Porter thrives wonderfully well on illuminating problems there is a side to his nature that others may not know about. A student of psychology, through an examination of his picture on this page, could detect this strain of which we speak. F'rinstance—he runs a lodge of his own at his home. Most of his friends have been initiated—Once. After that, when requested in terms of sugar sweetness to have a chair the visitor says "No, no, thank you, I prefer to stand." The mystery behind it all is confined in a contraption hidden in the base of most of Porter's chairs; a device which speaks plainer than words and says "He who sits will surely rise again and quickly too."

Mrs. Porter says that HE is the handiest THING she has around the house. Resourceful? That's him all over. Here, sometimes ago he built a wireless telephone which could be attached to the baby's crib so that when the Porters went calling on their neighbors it was necessary only to take the receiver with them, hitch it to a water faucet in the neighbors home and find out whether or not the youngster was crying.

Then there is the automatic color combinations which are produced from an indirect fixture in the center of his living room. By mean of this affair the room is suffused in various color combinations automatically. But listen, that ain't all the truth. The darned thing makes so much noise that no one can talk while it is operating. We're not so sure but that this device like the other was developed for its effect on visiting neighbors but Porter will not corroborate our surmises.

Jersey is full of funny things, tis said (last two words put in for safety's sake) but Porter is hoping to pull some more peculiar ones on the populace across the river. If for example you happen to be motoring along Jersey roads and you see ahead of you what appears to be the Tower of Jewels or the Machinery Building hitting the pavement at 30 per and bathed in a blaze of brilliant light just say, "Humph! That's Porter with is auto and his anti-glare devices." You'll be right.

Those interested in these devices should get details from the inventor writers. At many gatherings he was often called upon to take up the duties of toastmaster and invariably "came through" in royal style.

By the time this is in print Will Smith of the same firm will have safely passed the customs officers (at least we hope so) and assumed his duties as Gen. Mgr. At this writing he is reported on the seas and due to pass Sandy Hook about August 16th. If he did no other business in France than to buy post-cards that country should feel enriched as "Bill" remembered all of his huge number of friends with a card or two from Le Place de la Concorde, etc.

We'll separate the two items by a couple of lines of nothing and then talk about the———

Last thing we knew Francke was still on the job down there. At least he was until he left for Rochester to represent Simplex at the grand convention of notables.

Before leaving Francke confided that he wasn't taking along much extra money. What he meant by that can only be assumed. As far as is known only honorable gentlemen were in the party.

Still, those little games are sometimes bad ones.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

More Machine Suggestions

IN an issue of the NEWS, several weeks ago, there was published a letter from a group of projectionists on the Pacific Coast in which an appeal was made to machine manufacturers to "get down to earth and put out a machine that will be simple yet durable." Before many more issues are out we are in hopes of getting several of the officials of some of the more prominent machine companies to say a few words on this subject. Perhaps these experts who have lived with their pet machines and who in many cases have designed them, will explain away the feeling that now seems to be current amongst projectionists that present-day machines "are made to sell repair parts."

Such a condition cannot be true, although to all appearances it be a fact. Perhaps when the situation is analyzed the fault lies with the manufacturers, who either have not had the time or have not seen the necessity of enlightening and educating the projectionist in the proper care and upkeep of projectors. If machine manufacturers will take unto themselves the task of putting the facts in the case right up to the projectionists the whole industry will be helped.

After the publishing of the letter referred to in the first paragraph, another letter was received from Gilbert P. Miller, of Delphos, Ohio, in which the writer took sides with the Pacific Coast exponents of better machines. Mr. Miller's letter is an interesting one and adds a few more specific arguments to those already put forward.

Probably this letter will spur some of the rest of you who have, mentally at least, cussed a machine because it lacked something in the way of an attachment or in the manner of its performance. If this is true, set yourself down and send in a letter on it. We believe we are safe in saying that the machine manufacturers will be watching for all that you men have to say.

Mr. Miller's letter reads as follows:

It is with the greatest interest that I read your Projection Department, and in your August 2nd issue was tickled to death to see that the Los Angeles trio registered a "kick" against the modern machines. It is a little unkind to call them a "bunch of junk," but I cry with them, "Why cannot some one manufacture a real machine?"

My idea is that a machine should be compact without sacrificing accessibility and should be correct in mechanical principles. A friction operated fire shutter is a drag on the machine, so why have them. It seems to me that framing can be accomplished without resting the hand on a part of the machine to insure perfect register on the screen; a knob would be more suitable.

As an innovation I suggest the following: Why not include the condensers, carrier and common telescoping tube as a part of the lamp-house, being divided into two compartments with separate doors. Thus all stray light is kept from spreading about in the booth and when you run slides, open the door and run them inside the lamp house. The "push-through" carrier would not have to be used and when not in use it and the mat (oblong aperture) are elevated exposing the who condenser face, allowing all the light from this source to be used for film projection.

Another thought is this: when framing, is there any need for the upper and lower loops to grow or diminish? A sliding sleeve with spiral slot would advance or retard the sprockets, keeping the loops uniform. This is perhaps a minor fault, but suppose you are running close to a roller or flapping wildly as the result of a frame-up and the value of the idea will be seen.

Perhaps the day is coming when framing rods are unknown.

I have just read over what I have written and I suppose you think I am picking on the Powers, but I meant it as being general.

As to Powers, why focus in front, tear the machine apart to get at the intermittent, have speed control on floor (or near there), use only a few teeth on the intermittent sprocket and have that abominable bend in the film caused by the idler at the top sprocket. Why should the Simplex thread on the opposite side of the intermittent sprocket as compared with all the other makes. The "Simplex Patch," as it is called, is eminently unsuitable to pass through other machines if the film has acquired upturned edges.

Do not think that I am soured at the profession and am taking out my spite in "grouching" about present conditions. I sincerely hope with other projectionists that the ultimate in projectors will soon be available not only in the high-salaried man's booth but in the small owner's as well.

Yours for the best in projection,

GILBERT P. MILLER,
214 West 4th St., Delphos, Ohio.

Says a Good Word for Mazda

JUST a few lines as to the Small Town Exhibitor. Some people may think that in the small town, especially where there is no electricity, that there can be no motion picture shows. But I am here to tell you it can be done. I am operating at the Victor theatre, Cooks Mill, Ill., a town of about two hundred people, and can truly say we are doing good business, running two nights a week, Tuesdays and Fridays. We had good business last week, considering everything, as there was a carnival in Mattoon about nine miles away. I will also tell you about our house and equipment, as it might interest some of your readers.

We have a house which used to be a church building. It will seat about 250 people. Have the latest seats and everything that goes to make up the best theatre. Am using a 32-volt Lalley light plant, with a Powers 6-A machine and a 600 candlepower Mazda lamp with the Argus unit, Argus Scheck universal adapter and Argus current regulator, carry 21 amps. at the light all the time, and with our 55-foot throw get as fine a picture as I ever saw in this town. Our screen is a white surface painted on the wall. Get a picture about 7½ by 8½; carry 21 amps and burn four lights at the same time without one bit of trouble.

Am cranking at the present time, but will soon install a motor. Then the city operator will have nothing on the Victor theatre. The booth is about 6 by 8 by 10, is equipped with two benches, one seat for operator, a good supply of announcement slides and extra supplies. It has a window in the north and one in the south which keeps it always cool.

Am using Triangle film. Our first night was William Desmond in "Master of His Home," and a one-reel comedy. On Friday night we run "Law's Outlaw," also a one-reel comedy, and I sure wish that someone else had been in my place, as it certainly was punk film. I had about six stops in the first three reels and although I am a member of the N. A. M. L., I sent it back the way it was, as there was nothing to do to it but junk it. I am also sending in another name for the N. A. M. L. Will you kindly send membership card at once. Also bring to the attention of Triangle the kind of stuff they are sending out. Am looking for packed houses this week. I will be ready to answer any questions concerning equipment anyone cares to ask. Would like to hear from any other small-town exhibitor.

Yours for success,

JAMES A. CHEEK,
M. P. M. O., 809 South 14th St., Mattoon, Ill
Member N. A. M. L. 612.

P. S.—There cannot be enough said for the Mazda lamp or the Powers machine.—J. A. C.

Answer: At last we make connections with a man who is using an individual light plant. Although it is known that thousands of them have been sold it has been a difficult job to get a few words about their operation from projectionists who are using them. There is a big demand for these light plants. The theatre located in the town of a few hundred population must depend on some such a plant for its "juice." And when we say "depend" we mean it. An individual plant that would choke up, cough and back-fire when the projectionist tried to push a few more amperes through his arc could hardly be called dependable. But here is a letter from a man who has a lighting plant that evidently is more than satisfactory.

Your installation is an interesting one, Cheek, and the readers of this department would like to hear more about it. Tell us what length of life you get from your lamps and any more of the same general line of data you have at hand. Send in some photographs of your plant and of your projection room. Though you may be in a small town you are certainly getting results that will interest others who are now putting on much larger pictures in a much larger town.

We are sure that the Mazda lamp people and the Powers company will be glad to read your wholehearted recommendation of their respective products.

Your membership card and a supply of labels are being sent you by mail. Your membership button will be sent later when the new supply is received.

Any Opportunities in South America?

MR. BRAGDON, Tech. Editor,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

Your letter of July 30 informs me that I started off on the wrong foot in regard to joining the N. A. M. L., but when I wrote you before I had a copy of the NEWS of July 14, in which I was unable to find the printed pledge of which you spoke. However, in the issue of July 21 I found the blank and the pledge which I now enclose.

Trusting I will now be admitted to the League, I remain, sincerely yours,

E. R. WALLACE, Projectionist,
Edison Theatre, San Francisco, Cal.

P. S.—Can you tell me where I can get information regarding opportunities for projectionists in South America?

Answer: Glad that you found the blank at last. Due to a press of other matter it has been necessary in several recent issues to omit the pledge and membership blank, but we will endeavor from now on to see that they appear at least in every other issue.

We cannot give you a single ray of hope on that South America proposition. It is very probable that theatres down there are worked much as they are here. This would mean that a projectionist in most cases would have to be right on the spot to get a job. If you are going down that way guess the only thing to do is to walk up to the various theatres and ask for a position. Perhaps, though, some of our readers have had some experience in this line and direction and can help you out. If so, will they kindly communicate with the NEWS and we will pass the good words on to Wallace in San Francisco?

From Local 360

JUST a few lines to yet you know that although the new press agent has been asleep, Local 360 is very much awake, so is the press agent now, so here goes.

Our late press agent, Bro. Chas. Stuckey, has gone back to his old job of dealing out juice in Sulk at Niagara Falls Power Plant and the entire membership regrets his departure. He was the most advanced and efficient projectionist that ever carried a card in this local and was the most devoted worker in the cause of better projection I have ever met. In electing yours truly as his successor as press agent, our business manager states I have the following very necessary qualification, "Premier Artist in the Local at throwing the bull."

Funny how the war cast its spell over everything, isn't it? Notice how it affected us. We elected our officers for the year as follows: President, W. B. Allen; vice-president, E. Grace; business manager, F. Pacherbush; secretary-treasurer, A. Malley; then taking a lesson from the other big four at the Peace Conference, they elected themselves "Executive Board," "Examining Board," Delegates to the "Theatrical Federation," "Alberta Federation of Labor," Trades and Labor Council, and will settle all Union affairs as a Standing Committee.

Tom Campbell, our genial maker of hats, says he is having trouble making hats large enough. I could tell him the reason.

At the last regular meeting we were pleased to have Bro. B. Miles back in his old seat. He has just returned from overseas, having seen service in both France and Russia. He discovered on his return that two of our projectionists getting tired of leading a life of single bliss had taken advantage of his absence to commandeer his two sisters, so before settling down to civilian life again Bro. Miles is on the war-path looking for someone else's sister to fill the vacancy; being good looking, he is making good headway.

A little of the advanced legislation passed at that meeting included a raise in dues, methods for the stricter enforcement of the constitution and by-laws, both local and provincial. A few of the men holding first-class certificates felt aggrieved at the president's appointing a third-class man as Projection Inspector, but as long as we get better projection, why worry? The Lecture Society proclaimed a holiday as the recent hot weather has evaporated the enthusiasm of its members. However, by October we expect to have the society on ice and going normal.

Fraternally yours,
ERNEST PALMER, Press Agent,

PROJECT-A-LITE

Gives an even, steady light, at all times uniformly covering the screen. The pictures "stand out" better, have an individuality to them that is not found in carbon projection.

Operation is much simplified, thus giving the operator more time to attend to running the reel. The lamp Adapter can quickly and easily be installed in the carbon lamp house, it is not necessary to go to the expense of buying an entire new outfit in order to enjoy the satisfaction of using Mazda Projection.

The quick change lamp holder, which we furnish without extra charge, is a helpful factor; when a change of lamps becomes necessary, changes can be made almost instantly.

Then think of the ACTUAL SAVING to you in the cost of electricity. You will use but 900 watts an hour, less than one-third the amount used in carbon burning machines.

That MEANS MONEY TO YOU. Money is what you are working for. You are ahead in two ways. Our Adapter saves you buying a new outfit in the first place and Mazda Projection saves current constantly, after you install the Project-A-Lite. You are sure of a good picture all the time, too.

The Standard Film Perforating Machine

By Chas. E. Marshall

THE stability of the present day perforator has proven conclusively that the greater problem incident to the design and perfection of a machine to perform this duty have been in a great measure solved. While the basic principle has remained the same as in earlier models very radical changes have taken place in many of the minor details of construction and operation, building up these weak points which were evidently touched upon none too seriously by the pioneers, their object being principally to solve the problem of actually perforating the film rather than to include other features that culminate in the economical operation of a perforator.

When one stops to consider the vital part taken by this machine in the art of film making it is readily seen the high degree of precision demanded of it, which is greater in proportion to its cost and size than any other mechanical unit in the industry. It is an established fact that high screen quality is largely the result of the success of applied mechanics to the stages of processing which the film undergoes, and with this end in view the manufacturers of the Bell & Howell Film Perforator have strained their efforts toward the complete standardization of every step in the handling of film and have built their entire line of motion picture machinery to adhere strictly to this standard which is now recognized throughout the world and to which ninety per cent of the world's supply of film is perforated.

The benefit of this standardization is obviously mutual and meets with hearty response from both the manufacturer of raw stock and the Producers of motion pictures in general, who, heretofore, had to deal with film perforated to various standards maintained by the earlier manufacturers.

It is to be noted that manufacturers supplying machines in the earlier days of the industry's growth adhered to the policy of perforating but one hole on each side of the film at each stroke of the punches, thus entailing the forward movement of the film four times for each picture's space or sixty-four times per foot. This policy, however, was soon discarded not only because it imposed unnecessary wear on the moving parts but made necessary the employment of an excessive number of machines for a given output.

In the machine in question the perforating mechanism consists of a machined casting called the ram whose movement is in a perpendicular direction and in the base of which is located both the punches and the registering devices called the pilots. The punches consist of four sections of fine tooled steel, hardened and ground to conform to the existing standard for sprocket holes. The completed punching element is made by clamping these separate units together with the proper spacers between, thus making a punch assuming the shape of a letter "H" with both legs on the top and bottom available for service. In operation, when one side begins to show wear it is only necessary to reverse the entire element in the ram, bringing the other side into service and allowing practically double life before being resharpened.

The construction of the pilots are identical to that of the punches except that the radial diameter of the projecting units are two thousandths of an inch smaller than the corresponding diameters of the punches and the points are tapered to a 3½ degree angle extending ⅛ of an inch of their length. This registering device is also clamped in the base of the ram alongside of the punching element and in operation these pilots, embracing one whole picture space at once, are lowered and enter the film in advance of the punches. It is quite easy to see how this arrangement tends to preserve absolute registration, namely by first allowing the pilots to enter the entire eight holes (previously punched in the film) before the punches actually come in contact with the film to punch the eight succeeding holes. The next step taken up is that of moving the film between each successive movement of the punch; this is accomplished by the employment of a shuttle with eight teeth projecting upward which grasp one entire frame at once. The movement of this shuttle is both horizontal and vertical and is main cam shaft. It is to be noted that throughout the entire construction of this perforator all devices used in the movement and punching operation engage and punch the film not by one sprocket hole but by one entire picture space, thus insuring uniformity in perforation.

In order to hold the film flat on the die plate during the punching operation a stripper plate is employed whose operation is independent of that of the punches and pilots. This stripper plate descends on the film, holding it perfectly flat from the beginning of the punching operation until after the punches and pilots have been raised clear of the film. It then raises one-sixteenth of an inch, allowing the free movement of the film to the next position. With reference to the various surfaces presented to the film in its travel through the machine and with a view to minimizing the danger of scratches and abrasion marks, pressure plates have been discarded and instead the film channels are lined with guide rollers throughout their entire length. In other words no friction whatsoever exists between the moving film and the paths over which it travels as a rolling surface is at all times presented. It is also interesting to note that at all times during the operation a free loop of the unperforated stock is maintained between the feed roller and the punches, thus assuring a uniform supply of stock without the jerky movement present when feeding direct from the roll of film. Owing to the precision attained in designing the various movable elements and the fact that the film is advanced one frame at each movement of the punches, a normal output of 1,700 feet of positive stock per hour or by shifting to a lower speed from 500 to 800 feet of negative can be attained.

Of the exclusive features inherent in this machine none is more conspicuous than the means by which dust particles are kept from adhering to the film while passing through the mechanism. This is accomplished by passing the stock through suction cleaners employing rotating brushes to thoroughly clean both surfaces of foreign matter which is in turn carried off by a vacuum.

The auxiliary equipment furnished for use with an installation of this type of perforators consists of an electrically driven air exhauster which supplies the necessary suction for the rotary cleaner attachment. These exhausters are built to accommodate an installation of any number of machines. Another striking feature is the automatic stop device whose purpose is to stop the mechanism at the end of each roll of perforated film. This operation is accomplished by an audible signal and makes it possible for one attendant to handle a large number of machines with ease.

National Anti-Misframe League Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Musician La Vigne at Liberty

SPEAKING of prominent musical directors the name of Mr. J. La Vigne cannot be overlooked. Mr. La Vigne has conducted orchestras in the foremost theatres, such as the Strand theatre, Portland, Me., etc.

During his stay at the Strand theatre, Mr. La Vigne has established a name of reputable standing. He had an organization of fourteen skilled musicians and to my knowledge there are very few musical organizations consisting of fourteen men who can accomplish such wonderful feats as the organization under Mr. La Vigne's direction.

Mr. La Vigne has severed his connections with the above theatre, and is at present open for a new engagement. The reason I have mentioned these facts about this gentleman is because I feel that there are an innumerable amount of exhibitors throughout the country looking for capable music directors.

As the music editor of this page, and a strong advocator of perfect musical interpretation for the film, I earnestly suggest that exhibitors avail themselves of this opportunity to secure this able and first-class musical director.

Musician La Vigne, of Portland, is at Liberty

The Wail of the Organist

I'm still on deck—like the old seafarer,
Vamping in G for Theda Barer;
Or chasing the cactus all over the chart,
On a four legged critter, with Billum S. Hart.
Making the pipes go—"fish—fush—fish"
For a bob and a wiggle of Dorothy Gish,
Sounds like a "string bean"—some folks say,
When I walk down the road with Charley Ray.
Then we pull off a stunt that would sure floor Barnum,
One sweep of the arm—down goes ten—with Bill Farnum.
Still we have moments of pleasure and bliss,
In the dainty scenes of the sweet Ferguson Miss;
And loads of others—in variety there's spice,
How I wonder that some actors get their price,
But I'm sure if there's ever a Judgment Day,
Some of the stars will be made to pay.
I'm only human—yet it's true,
Some of the things I'm forced to do
To put pictures "over"—the tones I must toss,
Is like cranking a "Ford" or "curryin'" a hoss.
Since the organ is larger—I can do any stunt
From a "cootie bite" or "flea hop" to an elephant grunt.
But the bench gets harder and the varnish is gone,
Still Ill do my durndest—till the last reel is done
If only the blower will keep on blowing;
The rats stay away, so the pipes can keep going,
I'll stick till that phrase—with each picture doth blend;
The words that are sweetest—'tis only "The End."

Synchronized Music Score for "The Gay Old Dog"

A SPECIAL synchronized music score has been arranged by Messrs. Winkler and Levy, for the Hobart Henley production entitled "The Gay Old Dog." Mrs. Sydney Drew wrote the scenario for this excellent production. It was shown to a private audience on Tuesday morning, August 12th, at the Rivoli theatre, of New York City, N. Y., and scored a tremendous success in conjunction with the music score which is a masterpiece in the strictest sense of the word.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"My Daddy Long Legs," a waltz written in conjunction with the film production "Daddy Long Legs," featuring the great star, Mary Pickford. (Waterson, Berlin & Snyder.)

2—"Madgrigal of May," a beautiful waltz from the season's play, "The Jest" (J. W. Stern & Co.)

3—"Golden Gate" (Open For Me), by Kendis and Brockman, the writers of the famous "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles." A new sensation arranged for fox-trot or waltz. (Kendis Brockman Music Co.)

4—"Shadows," a melodious waltz by Howard Lutter. This arrangement was featured in conjunction with the Goldwyn production, "Shadows," starring Geraldine Farrar. (Vandersloot Music Co.)

5—"Oasis," the fascinating oriental fox-trot by Henri F. Klickman. A dance novelty also published for band and orchestra. (McKinley Music Co.)

6—"Russian Rag," by G. L. Cobb. A novelty "Concert" rag and the "Jazzation" of Racmannioff's "Prelude." (Will Rossiter.)

7—Mandarin Dance by Kempsinki. An eccentric Chinese novelette of concert value and admirably suited for the modern jazz craze. (Belwin, Inc.)

8—"Constance," by Ernest S. Golden. This is the best emanation from the pen of this world famous writer. (Belwin, Inc.)

9—"Tears," a fox trot by Art. Hickman, writer of the famous "Rose Room" fox trot. One of the most catchiest and snappiest fox trots of the year. (Sherman Clay & Co.)

10—"Behind Your Silken Veil," an Oriental fox trot by Vincent Rose, writer for "Mummy Mine." This proved to be the best Oriental fox trot published tnis year. (Sherman Clay & Co.)

"Close-Ups" of Songs in Pictures

CERTAIN songs in certain pictures constitute the basic element or the theme for certain individual scenes. Sometimes they interpret the idea of the entire film, and wherever such songs are employed in the above-mentioned capacity, they can be considered indispensable not only to the film but also to the musical director playing for such productions.

No matter on what screen this film is thrown, whether in a first-class house, or in a nickeldom, the song must be played. It's on the screen, everybody sees it, and it is therefore of vital importance that the film directors select such material which is playable and obtainable.

Judging from past and present experiences, I have come to the conclusion that most film directors are using song material for the above purpose which in many cases is 100 years old, is either not obtainable or subject to restricted performances. I have recently reviewed a production in which the star asked a violin player what he was playing. "The Meditation from 'Thais,'" was the answer, expressed in ten-inch letters on the screen. I immediately called the film director's attention to the fact that this particular musical composition is subject to a tax payable to either the French or American Society of Authors, Publishers, and Composers, and that many theatres throughout the country are not in possession of such a license which would permit them to play this number without confliction with present copyright laws. I suggested the "Elegie," by Massenet which can be played in any part of the world for the purchase price only.

The gentleman in charge of this production accepted my suggestion and assured me that all titles in the outgoing films would be changed. I therefore considered the matter settled and mentioned the "Elegie" by Massenet as the proper cue, on my musical suggestion sheet.

Several weeks later I received letters from various parts of the country asking me whether I was drunk when compiling the music for this production. I carefully investigated the matter and found that the films were sent out with the "Thais" title and the musicians were playing the "Elegie" as suggested on my music cue sheet. This is an example of superlative negligence on the part of some film gentleman, and I can cite many instances showing gross ignorance on the part of those concerned in directing the films. Recently I saw a picture where the director used a song in a close-up, which never existed. In directing this particular film, he had an idea that a song would make the situation go over clearer, so he made up a condensed song title of the predominating situation, followed by a few lines of music which he picked at random, and probably constituted a part of an Arabian cheese dance. I at least was never able to trace the origin of this piece of music.

What is a musician to do in such a case? There is only one way out of it; to ignore the whole affair, irrespective of the consequences that may arise from such an act.

I have witnessed hundreds of such cases, and it is indeed high time that the film directors consult some prominent musician or music publisher before using certain songs as "close-ups" in their films. Such action would result in a more distinct transmission of ideas from the film director to the musicians, and from the musician to the public. In brief, it would establish "perfect harmony" among all parties concerned.

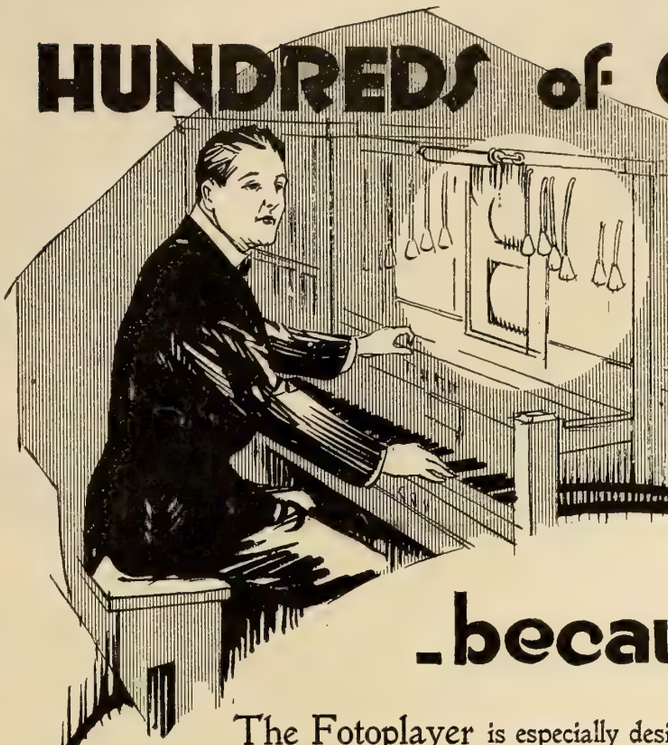
HUNDREDS of Operators Praise Fotoplayer excellence



because

The Fotoplayer is especially designed for motion pictures; it provides a piano, organ tones and orchestral effects.

The Fotoplayer is a marvel of simple, sturdy construction — designed to withstand the wear of continuous use — and requires little skill for operation.

The Fotoplayer may be played by hand or roll.

The patented double tracker device controls the use of the two rolls — providing an instant change to fit the mood of the picture.

The perfect tonal qualities of the Fotoplayer interpret the crashing melodies of a band or the power and variety of a symphony orchestra—expressed in a real human performance.

Continued testimony from keen exhibitors reveal Fotoplayer installation an artistic and economic success.

"Hearts of the World"
(D. W. Griffith Production)

D. W. GRIFFITH'S great war epic, "Hearts of the World," still leaves an indelible imprint upon the mind months after its first presentation—but an imprint which has mellowed with time. When it was first shown it acted as a powerful stimulus to patriotic emotions, for we were at war on April 4, 1918. Now that peace has come the massive spectacle appeals to the observer in quite a different way. What dramatic and human incidents it contained (and they were many) a year ago were not generally appreciated by its audiences who were stirred by the passions of war. Now these elements stand out vividly and the war episodes are subordinated because the average mind is reconciled to peace.

Thus Mr. Griffith again demonstrates what a master builder he is. In creating the work he looked into the future; his object was to establish a thing which would endure because of its simple message of love and faith. So the "peace edition" of "Hearts of the World" comes not as any pictorial diatribe against war, nor as a new arrangement of the picture itself, but instead it strikes most of us as a glorification of peace through its theme and the tragic presentment of the horrors of war. He probably constructed better than he realized at the time.

The picture is practically unchanged except for additional subtitles which emphasize the value of peace and the concluding scenes which reveal why we fought. What stands out vividly are not the powerful scenes of armed conflict with all of its naked brutalities, but the human appeal of the love story. The tension is lifted. Love and laughter reign. The war is over. Thus the romantic moods are heightened.

It is worth seeing again if only to realize your reaction toward peace. It is spectacular and the scope and magnitude of the battle scenes are impressive. But as big as they are they are insignificant now as compared to the tender passages of romance. And there is the "peace edition." The interpretation seems mellowed too. Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Robert Harron, Robert Anderson, George Fawcett and the others bring out the new note which was there all the time, but out of harmony.—Laurence Reid.

"Close to Nature"
(Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in a Two-Reel Capitol Comedy—Goldwyn)

IT'S a vacation problem faced by all young couples. He wants to go to the countrified mountains and she wants to go to the oceanized seashore.

She loves the beach and he loves the beechnuts. They finally leave for the country and every time they meet with one of the many discomforts and inconveniences she taunts him with the remark, "Oh, isn't it lovely to be so close to nature?" They find that the landlord arbitrarily rules that every guest must retire at 9 P. M.

When the hotel burns they agree to leave for the seashore, but on arriving at the little way station find that the train just runs twice a week. The hero is now well cured of his former infatuation for the country and buys a second-hand car to take them away.

A great deal of comedy is secured with his contrary car, but they finally arrive at the seashore and she points to a number of pretty bathing girls in one-piece suits and again taunts him with: "Oh, isn't it lovely to be close to nature?"

This comedy will entertain and amuse generally and is particularly appropriate for high-class audiences.—Tom Hamlin.

"The Second Chance"
(Educational—One Reel)

EDUCATIONAL has in "The Second Chance" a Y. M. C. A. picture which should create a lot of interest since it depicts the reclamation to society of army prisoners. The average person has never known the life of these unlucky individuals. Perhaps he has given no thought to the question because the army has kept him in the dark. But in "The Second Chance" the veil is lifted and he is conducted through an army prison. The picture has Castle William, the prison at Governors Island, for its background.

The war is being hotly waged at the front. A fighter becomes a coward and shirks his duty. Courtmartialed, he is given ten years and brought to the Island for confinement. We are conducted inside and shown the Salvation Army workers and the Y. M. C. A. keeping the prisoner's spirit up. Their plan is to make him interested in life through the idea that he is not a criminal. Amusements are provided for his recreation hours. And for his work he can take his choice of several vocations. The honor system is well established and if he toes the mark he will be at liberty in no time.

Constance Binney, starring in "Erstwhile Susan," a Realart picture

The picture attempts to impress that army prison life is not severe and that the officers in command are determined to reclaim their men not only for society but for the army. The subject should have value at the present time because of investigations taking place to discover the drama behind the military curtain. A screen actor interpreted the part of this particular prisoner. His spirit seemed to be stronger than was noticed in several men who worked beside him. But then they were prisoners and he only acted the part.—Laurence Reid.

"The Mother and the Law"
(D. W. Griffith's Revision and Additions to the Modern Episode in "Intolerance")

D. W. GRIFFITH has selected the modern episode from "Intolerance," and with some additional scenes and sub-titles has envolved a strong drama of especially timely significance.

And exhibitors and the public will remember that this cast contains such prominent names as Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Miriam Cooper, Vera Lewis, Walter Long and Ralph Lewis.

The characterizations of "the uplifters" in their "busybody" attempt to impose their narrow minded wills upon all the people is so topical these days that one sub-title states: "My way of thinking, eating and drinking is the only way."

The sister of an industrial magnate finds herself a wallflower at social affairs and is easy prey for professional "uplift" agitators. Her "benefactions" are widely publicized and her brother is finally so hard put to supply the necessary funds which his sister requires that he cuts the wages of his workmen.

After the big strike scene in which the militia and company guards use machine guns, several of the strikers and their families move to nearby towns. But the great "charity" work of the industrial magnate's sister goes on and on with its great "foundation."

One girl alone and friendless becomes the paramour of a gang leader. The hero quits the gang and marries the heroine, another strike victim. When the gang leader is shot by his paramour the hero is accused and about to hang, when the now half-crazed girl of the slums confesses.

The automobile race with the train to secure the Governor's reprieve is thrilling. During the hero's incarceration the busy-bodies of the "Foundation" take his baby from the mother and place it in an institution where it dies from neglect.

All the sorrow, tragedies and pathos finally end happily for the two principals and all in all the production is so closely akin to the happenings of today that the film will certainly have a universal appeal, and the theme is so timely that the might have been produced yest

Hamlin.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last fifteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 18, 1919.

(INCE-PARAMOUNT)

Wholesome and Entertaining Comedy Drama

A COMEDY drama set in a small-town hotel of the south with the star an unsuccessful peddler of electric vibrators and later a hotel clerk. This is a typical Charles Ray role and has a charming appeal. The action is never permitted to flag. Direction, continuity and photography up to standard.

The story is a very slight one to hang five reels upon, but it is comedy drama with the love element and the plot is cleverly developed by several pathetic and a great many comedy situations which register. Wholesome and entertaining.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for the respective patronages are:—Cosmopolitan, good puller and nicely pleasing; Elite, good puller and highly pleasing; Family, good puller and wholly pleasing; Labor, average puller and fairly pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 10.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Bill Henry" is the title of the Ince-Paramount feature coming to the ——— theatre begining ———with Charles Ray in the title role.

This is described as a delightful and typical Charles Ray comedy drama and Lois Zellner is the author.

The country boy starts selling electric vibrators without success for ten days and after losing his bicycle he becomes a clerk in the country hotel of his uncle in a small southern town nearby.

It was here that he met the girl from Iowa who came south to claim the land willed to her by a distant relative. When she finds the land is swampy and considered of no value she becomes heartbroken but our hero wins enough money in a poker game to buy the land without her knowing who the purchaser is.

There is plenty of comedy and pathos wedged about among these several incidents and situations, and also a charming love element. In the delightful characterization of "Bill Henry" Mr. Ray then manages to stage a fight with a scoundrelly real estate agent that is thrillingly realistic. And of course he wins the girl.

For after Bill buys the land and the girl gets her $350.00 he finds that a certain company is after it and sells it for $1,400.00. When he places this money with the real estate agent with instructions to also give this additional money to the girl the agent craftily gives him a blank receipt for the money and afterwards claims that he never received the cash.

It is this situation that riles Bill and inspires in him the desire to square himself before the girl and his uncle. With the aid of his electric vibrator as an instrument of torture he forces the villain to confess and all ends happily.

PROGRAM READER

He was only a simple country boy.

No—on second thought he wasn't so simple.

It simplifies matters to the point of simplification to simply state that he simply looked simple.

Charles Ray in an Ince-Paramount picture will appear at this theatre next week.

"Bill Henry" is the name of this delightfully human young star has the title role.

When he loses his bicycle he stops selling electric vibrators and becomes a hotel clerk.

Besides, there wasn't enough vibration in these vibrators to shake the shimmie on a Broadway sofa lizard.

As soon as Charles Ray, or rather "Bill Henry" became a hotel clerk he started to play poker.

Then he fights a villain and saves a girl's 'n' everythin'.

You owe yourself a lot of chuckles and a bunch of laughs and you can collect them at this theatre next week.

Charles Ray, in the Paramount feature, "Bill Henry"

SUGGESTIONS

The exploitation possibilities of this picture outside of building on the star's following and the fact that it is an Ince-Paramount production are many. If something special is wanted by the exhibitor in street work he could hire a commonly dressed and slightly soiled youth with a stiff hat riding a bicycle to parade the town. A box-like affair could be strapped over his shoulder to represent the electric vibrator and a placard on his front and back could announce as follows:—"'Bill Henry' electric vibrators for all that ails you. Charles Ray, representative at——theatre."

Emphasize in all your advertising that this is a wholesome comedy drama and you might create considerable excitement and certainly obtain a lot of boosters who meet many persons daily if you announce that "Bill Henry" invites all the hotel clerks in town to meet him at the ———thetre next ———where it is intimated as probable that a hotel clerks' union may be formed. If you are in a fairly large city you should issue a personal invitation to all the hotel clerks to attend the show and send them free tickets. They can be made good boosters for this show as Charles Ray appears as a hotel clerk.

CATCH LINES

His electric vibrators were guaranteed to make a bunch of shimmie dancers out of a community camp meeting.

When the final test came for the electric vibrator it couldn't even shock an unsophisticated preacher.

His fall was rapid. He became a hotel clerk and then learned to play poker.

Yes—Bill Henry certainly could fight. But you had to get him awful riled first.

The villain thought Bill Henry was awfully simple but soon found out that he was simply awful.

"A SOCIETY EXILE"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

A Wholly Satisfying Society Drama

A SOCIETY drama with locale in London and Venice. A first class leading man augments the very good cast in support of the star. The story is an exceptionally good one and the director and continuity writer brings it out clearly and artistically in every detail.

A double tragedy and many tense situations afford the star wide scope for her emotional talents, and the romance is charming. The scenic effects are excellent and this is a wholly satisfying society drama.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for the respective patronages are:—Cosmopolitan, big puller and entirely pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, good puller and wholly pleasing; Labor, average puller and fairly pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 17.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Elsie Ferguson in her latest Artcraft picture, "A Society Exile," comes to the ——— theatre beginning ———.

In the role of a charming young American heiress she visits England and is courted by Lord Bisset who is heavily in debt. When she hears the young nobleman and his sister discussing her and the need of her money to replenish his waning fortune she spurns them and takes a cottage near by.

A successful playwright, Sir Harold Furnival, collaborates with the young American heiress to prepare for the stage a successful novel which she has written. This is kept a secret from his wife Doris as she is cursed with a very jealous disposition.

The spurned suitor, Lord Bisset, secures a page of manuscript from the prospective play which contains some very endearing terms in the American girl's handwriting and just to cause trouble he gives it to the playwright's wife Doris alleges that it is a love letter to her husband.

This leads to the double tragedy which takes away Doris and her playwright husband. And the young American heiress is blamed and ostracised. She changes her name and goes to Venice where she meets a young English army officer and they become engaged. Before marriage she confesses who she is in a letter which he never receives.

When they return to England she learns that her husband is the brother of Doris. And then Lord Bisset again appears to create more trouble. For her husband hated and cursed the woman who had caused his sister's death. And of course Lord Bisset told him that the woman was his wife.

Here are some intensely compelling dramatic situations which unfold and are most artistically handled. The romance is described as charming and in the finale the scene again reverts to the witching fascinations of Venice in which the lovers are reunited.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture the fact that it is an Artcraft Picture which brand is so strongly advertised, and also the fact that Elsie Ferguson is the star, and has a large following, should be utilized in all your exploitation. The picture should be exploited in a high class manner and not "circused" in any way.

Therefore the material contained in the "Program Reader" should also be used in your display advertising. And the catch lines should be used wherever possible. Many attractive cuts of the star should be used and a good lobby display of photographs with a large cut-out of the star would be attractive.

And you can safely bank on the fact that this author and his plays are well known. "A Society Exile" was taken from Henry Arthur Jones' celebrated play, "We Can't Be as Bad as All That." If you have a good Blue Book list of your leading society people you should send them an invitation by mail.

Elsie Ferguson, star of the Paramount feature "Society Exile"

PROGRAM READER

She was ostracised. So she changed her name and moved from London to picturesque Venice in Italy.

A double tragedy which swept away a young husband and wife was blamed upon this young American heiress during an England visit.

And she craved quiet and changed her name.

When a young English officer awakened her from her morbid spell and self-imposed seclusion she became engaged to him and before they were married she confessed her innocent part in the great double tragedy.

—but he never received the letter.

And later, when they moved to England, she learned that her husband was the brother of the woman who had shot her husband and killed herself.

Her husband had many times cursed the woman who had caused the tragedy which took away his sister. And so the wife was in a terrible predicament.

Elsie Ferguson portrays the role of the young American heiress who is so wrongfully misjudged.

And the Artcraft Picture which so dramatically unfolds this intensive drama comes to this theatre next week.

It is entitled "A Society Exile."

CATCH LINES

Lies, jealousy and deceit are overwhelmingly defeated by romance.

A double tragedy—and an innocent victim is ostracised socially.

Is Venice really a safe and sane place for a beautiful young woman to spend a voluntary exile?

She found that her husband was the brother of the woman whom she was accused of indirectly killing.

After losing home, friends and honor she also forfeit love?

"THE FOUR FLUSHER"
(METRO)

Star's Personality Lifts Frail Picture

HALE HAMILTON exudes enough personality to give any picture a broad outline. Usually he dominates a story and it is a good thing that he does when one of weak dimensions is given him. Then entertainment can be found in his portrayal. Take "The Four Flusher," for instance. Here is a picture which is long on characterization but short upon plot, and because it expends itself early the burden that it carries of keeping the spectator interested falls upon the star. And, being a comedian, he never fails.

The piece is patterned after his own stage success, "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," in that it presents a study of bluffing one's way to the top. But the action is so well planted at the start and zips along so merrily that it loses its punch at the halfway mark. But Hamilton jumps into the breach and reinforces it with his comedy values. And so it finishes with its introductory speed.

The humorous note is not so emphatic, however, as in previous Hamilton pictures. The star gets every measure of strength from his role and really carries the whole thing on his shoulders. It is well staged, the subtitles are pithy and to the point, and it will undoubtedly please the average audience.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Hale Hamilton, the Metro comedian, will come to the ——theatre on——of—— week in his latest comedy-drama entitled "The Four Flusher." The picture is reminiscent of the star's sensational stage success, "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford" in that he forces himself to the top with very little financial backing but with a great gift of "gab." It is a diverting entertainment of a human kind and one which should meet with universal approval.

Mr. Hamilton is seen in the role of Lon Withers, a clerk in an exporting house. But though he is a clerk he carries himself like a banker. With a small salary he pushes himself ahead through sheer nerve and a power of conversation. He has his worries and when he confides them to Suzanne Brooks, his sweetheart, she urges him to keep a stiff upper lip and profit by the tip extended to him by a friend and former employee who has struck it rich in South America. The tip is to wear a bold front and get in the good graces of Senor Gomez who is coming to the States to pick out a real, live American representative.

So Lon borrows money from the head bookkeeper, Ford, and takes him along as his secretary, hires Jimmie, the office boy, and employs his fiancee as his stenographer. Together they put up at Gomez' hotel. And Lon cuts a wide swath. Of course he impresses the traveler but before he puts his stock, F. F. Inc. (Four Flusher, Incorporated) before the public he is forced to have his bluff called by a fellow employer. So Lon goes back to his furnished room to be rescued by Gomez who thinks he is the logical man for the place.

PROGRAM READER

Lon Withers was a happy-go-lucky fellow who never had to worry about money. In fact this important asset wasn't necessary because he was thoroughly schooled in the art of bluffing his way. He could worry along on a nickel and not do much worrying at that. Now Lon was a bookkeeper and a lively one. He didn't like to work. He didn't have to—not with his gift of gab. But his sweetheart was provoked with him because he didn't want to improve himself. So she urged him to accept a tip from a friend in South America who informed him that a rich importer was coming to the States to pick out a real live American to represent his interests.

How Lon took advantage of his opportunity, how he borrowed money right and left to swing a bluff, how he worked his conversational powers and made everyone sit up and listen, how he met with reverses but finally landed the job through sheer bluff are events which are amusingly told in "The Four Flusher" which comes to the —— theatre next —— with Hale Hamilton.

Hale Hamilton finds a suitable role in "The Four Flusher," Metro film.

SUGGESTIONS

Hale Hamilton pictures have become favorites with film patrons through their generous display of comedy and the personality of the star. So in advertising them you don't have to extend yourself in making them popular. Still "The Four Flusher" can stand exploitation from several angles. First mention that it is similar to "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," the play upon which created such a sensational success upon the stage with the star in the title role. Bring out with emphasis the theme of the story—of how it features the game of bluffing. It is real and human. Everybody likes to bluff if it is possible.

Tell that it is a good old-fashioned American game. Bring out in your copy that the hero forged ahead by sheer bluffing or four flushing. Lay special stress upon the star and his popularity. Bring out that he was the star of "In His Brother's Place" and "Full of Pep." Patrons will remember those pieces. Play up the title and treat the subject in a humorous vein. Use Metro's suggestion for a circus stunt. Send out a flashy dressed fellow in an automobile flying a banner on the car—"I'm not the Four Flusher." It will keep people guessing.

CATCH LINES

Four Flushing is a great game if you can get away with it. Some men are lucky to rise to the top with nary a cent in their pockets. Such a man was Lon Withers as interpretd by Hale Hamilton, the Metro comedian. See "The Four Flusher" and find out the art of getting rich.

He could talk you deaf, dumb and blind. That was his gift. He couldn't make money. He didn't have to for it came to him through his art of bluffing. Would you like to be a bluffer too? You can learn how when you see Hale Hamilton in "The Four Flusher."

"THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS"
(JEWEL-UNIVERSAL)

Big Dimensions in This Rich Entertainment

"THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS" will be one of the most talked of pictures of the year. You have not seen the opening chapter before you realize that you are in the presence of a rich subject—a subject which presents a powerful theme, is dramatically told, and one which sweeps forward with a mighty crescendo. If you have been skeptical of Allen Holubar's ability as a director even though he sponsored "The Heart of Humanity," you can appreciate now that his talent is no mere flash. He reveals himself as a born story teller, a gifted dramatist, and a master director.

It is a rare entertainment he has achieved here. To force the moral home he has made it timely through economic and social problems which are facing the world today. The conflict of Capital versus Labor, the menace of red revolution, the cause of the downtrodden, are themes which are deftly interwoven into the framework.

And the moral is emphasized throughout. No loopholes are discernible. Mr. Holubar has builded well. And to present it forcefully the emotional talents of Dorothy Phillips are called upon.—Length, 8 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Right to Happiness," the special Universal production, will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— and ——— of ——— week. This picture is conceived and produced by Allen Holubar, who was the sponsor for "The Heart of Humanity." It offers a tremendous theme — a theme which is always close to the heart, and as it is worked out it sounds the entire gamut of emotions. To emphasize properly its message the author-director has utilized the age-old conflict between capital and labor, and, keeping abreast of the times, he has presented an indictment of profiteering and Bolshevism.

The story opens in Russia with a Jewish massacre. Sonia and Vivian are the twin children of the American, Hardcastle. They are safely hidden and escape harm, though the former is separated from her sister and is adopted by a poor Russian family. Hardcastle returns to America with Sonia with the belief that his other child is dead. Twenty years elapse. Vivian is a popular member of society, with no knowledge of the social problem of the day. Sonia and her lover, Paul, have migrated to America as the emissaries of Lenine. The girl has no idea that she is not a Russian. So she takes up her duties to spread revolution. She is successful for a time until she appreciates the spirit of democracy abroad in the land.

Meantime Hardcastle has not kept abreast of the times. He is obstinate against any solution for the working man. And the drama builds to an inexorable climax when his own daughter, Sonia, leads his workmen against him. A shot is fired. She is mortally wounded. And in her father's house she learns her identity. So Hardcastle's soul is purified. He offers his workmen the right to happiness by giving them decent hours and a living wage. Dorothy Phillips gives testimony of her powers as an emotional actress in the dual role of the sisters. And a splendid supporting cast renders fine assistance.

SUGGESTIONS

In "The Right to Happiness" exhibitors have a splendid chance to gain big box-office receipts if they gauge the dimensions of the picture correctly. It is one of the biggest things of the year, written and directed by the man responsible for "The Heart of Humanity." So by playing up this point you are off to a splendid lead. But make a special angle of the story. Lay stress upon its tremendous theme, which is expressed in its title. And this could be emphasized in no better way than by catch lines and teasers written on attractive cards for window display or to be tacked on billboards. Such a line as "Have You the Right to Happiness?" would be an excellent spread.

Jewel, through Universal, presents Dorothy Phillips in "The Right to Happiness"

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ——— theatre will be pleased in the announcement that Allen Holubar's big Universal pictureplay, "The Right to Happiness," will be presented on ——— of next week. This picture is Mr. Holubar's successor to "The Heart of Humanity." In it he has drawn a powerful theme—the oldest theme in the world, the right to be happy. Happiness? Why, the entire human race is ever in search of it. Some people find it; others search in vain. It is everywhere if your heart in in the right place. Right thinking, right living, coupled with charity for all, brings happiness. So come and see this powerful picture on a mighty theme.

Happiness cannot be achieved through revolution. It cannot be gained in the conflict etween Capital and Labor. But it can be had if there is communion of spirit and love of mankind abroad. The picture is intense and soars with tremendous situations and climaxes. And the star is Dorothy Phillips. Remember the date. It is THE picture of the year.

CATCH LINES

Happiness is the most valuable asset in the world. It is striven for constantly—even more than money. Gold cannot bring happiness. The heart can. And everyone has the right to happiness. See the biggest picture of the year, "The Right to Happiness."

The rich man attempts to buy happiness, and fails. The poor man often finds it because his heart is in the right place. It is the eternal theme of the story of life—happiness. Every thought, every move, rests upon it. But can we always find it? See how it is solved in the powerful drama, "The Right to Happiness."

"The Right to Happiness" will appear the ——— theatre on the first thr of ——— week. It should h
every man, woman and child

"THE CLOUDED NAME"
(WORLD)

Conventional Drama Lifted by Snow Scenes

NATURE has done it's very best for this conventional picture, builded from all the traditional episodes which could be brought together for one offering. It has been photographed amid some very wonderful snow scenes, with forests and a lumber camp, as a back ground and enacted by a cast which in minor roles consists of excellent types, giving the picture a merit from the angle of characterization. The hero is John Lowell, a new name to us, and bears a rather striking resemblance to William S. Hart. When not the subject of too much direction and except times when he is decidedly camera conscious, his work in a role which presented little opportunity, is rather pleasing. Handicapped by a story which is ancient and suspenseless the whole cast worked hard to make the sequences hold, but with the exception of Edgar Kellar as "Baptiste," their efforts were fruitless.

There is a slight mystery element, created by "Baptiste," but this is dissipated before the end of the fourth reel and the picture finishes with its outcome plainly in view at all times.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

"Slug" Reager.....Case Russell
Joe Pidgin.....Charles Robbins
Chris Tarsen.....Charles E. Edwards
"Bill".....John Lowell
Edith Barnett.....Corene Uzzell
Baptiste.....Edgar Kellar
Directed by Carl S. Fleming.
Story by Case Russell.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

World Pictures will present John Lowell, supported by Corene Uzzell, Edgar Kellar and a strong cast of types at the ——— theatre, beginning ———, in a story of the great Northwest, entitled "The Clouded Name."

Surrounded by scenes of great natural beauty and photographed in the midst of raging winter blizzards, "The Clouded Name" tells the story of the romance of "Bill," big, gentlehearted and rough but with a heart of gold, and the daughter of one of the owners of the logging camp where "Bill," known by no other name is working. Into this country of snow and great forests have come city people, a girl and her lover, son of the other camp owner, and here is enacted the drama of a man and his mate.

Clyde Van Allen, the lover forms a liason with a dance hall girl and promises to take her to civilization. Edith Barnett the girl, and "Bill" are strangely attracted to each other, and to protect his interests Van Allen, attempts to besmirch "Bill's" good name. He tells Edith of Bill's clouded ancestry and also hires one of the lumbermen who has wronged a woman of the camp, to lay the blame for her shame at Bill's door. This is believed by Edith because Bill is taking the woman food. Bill's court is denied and Edith becomes engaged to Van Allen. Van Allen and Edith go on a hunting trip and Edith becomes lost in a blinding snowstorm. Her companions are unable to find her and return to the camp. Bill goes to her rescue. He finds her nearly frozen in the snow and takes her to an abandoned lumber camp.

Because Edith's father is in bad health, the wedding ceremony is hastened and Edith becomes the bride of Van Allen. In the meantime, Bill has discovered through the camp cook, that the elder Van Allen is his father, and that he legally married his mother, but believing that Edith loves Clyde Van Allen he burns the marriage certificate and leaves for other parts. On his way he finds his father perishing in the snow and brings him to safety. They arrive just after the marriage has taken place.

Baptiste tells Edith and the others that Bill is the legitimate son of Van Allen. The girl of the dance hall has learned that Clyde will not fulfill his promise and hastens to the scene of the wedding. She shoots Clyde Van Allen and then herself. Edith is free and now that Bill's name has been cleared of its cloud, she becomes the agressor in love making and will marry Bill.

SUGGESTIONS

You should emphasize the beauty of the snow scenes used as a background for this picture and also make capital of the fact that John Lowell, the hero of the story bears a striking resemblance to William S. Hart.

Describe the offering as a story of primitive passions in the lumber camp district, with melodramatic action as the keynote. Call attention to the work of Edgar Kellar as "Baptiste." You may liken him to George Beban and tell your people that in this feature you will introduce a new character man who is an artist.

A strong scene from "The Clouded Name" a World feature

Use the stills you can obtain at the exchange freely on this picture. They will give your patrons an idea of the kind of story presented and there is always a great interests in productions which are enacted about the forests.

"The Clouded Name" is a title which sounds mysterious and you may bill your picture as a mystery offering. Suppose you were to have a head cut made of John Lowell selecting the photograph accompanying this review and use it with the following teaser head line: "Who is he?" Then follow with "See The Clouded Name." Promise that you will show your patrons some great types in the characters representing the woodsmen, but do not say too much regarding the story as it is very conventional.

PROGRAM READER

"The Clouded Name," the World feature picture which comes to the ——— for a ———engagement beginning ———, is a story of the great Canadian forests, where is enacted the romance of Edith Barnett and "Bill," just Bill, as he states to all who inquire of his ancestry.

It is a story of primitive passions, of love and hate far from civilization where right and goodness triumph in the end, over wrong and villiany.

In the leading role is John Lowell, a newcomer to this theatre but an actor who will win you from his first scene. In his support is Corene Uzzell and Edgar Kellar entitled to stellar roles which they have in this picture.

How "Bill" wins the hand of Edith, in spite of the machinations of her Eastern lover, who stoops to every despicable trick imaginable to accomplish his purpose, that of marrying Edith, is an interesting tale which you will enjoy.

CATCH LINES

He was nameless yet he won the heart and hand of a beautiful girl against great odds because he was a man while his rival was a cad and a villian. See "The Clouded Name" for a great story of the forests when the snow lies deep on the ground and death lurks in the shadows.

A Passable Western Melodrama

A MELODRAMA with the star as a waitress in a Western town which has as its chief characteristics the cowboys, miners, sheepmen, etc., with the center of attraction the ever familiar "Honky-Tonk," embellished with bar, dance hall and gambling paraphernalia.

Director and continuity writer evidently strived to improve on the well-known theme, but the story uncovered nothing new, novel or unique, and they simply met with but a fair measure of success. Nothing vulgar. Will entertain many. A passable Western melodrama.

The pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities, according to the particular patronages, are about as follows: Cosmopolitan, less than average pull, will fairly please; Elite, weak pull, will not satisfy; Family, average pull, will get by; Labor, good pull, will satisfy.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 10.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Fox presents Gladys Brockwell in "Chasing Rainbows" at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

The star appears as a man-hating waitress in a railroad lunch room and in a small western town near Death Valley. As there are very few women in the new town her attitude toward men does not popularize the attitude but certainly does popularize the pretty little waitress.

When she finds that Jim Lacy, a traveling man who has been courting her, has deserted a wife and child, she becomes a man-hater and asked for employment in some town in the far west and this brought her to Bagdad.

In spite of her determined desire to hate all men she just can't help liking the youthful and aggressive young manager of the lunch room where she worked. And when they jointly rescued a young Mexican girl from her paramour, their little romance ripened.

Several exciting events then came into their lives. A gold strike is reported nearby and the young manager determines to stake a claim and attempt to wrest enough of a fortune out of mother earth as will permit him to marry the heroine.

It is then that Jim Lacy again enters the heroine's life. He confesses to shooting a man and pleads with her to help him get east to the wife and child he had deserted so long ago. And she permits him to win the necessary money for this laudable purpose by manipulating a crooked roulette wheel.

Then she finds that the man whom Lacy had shot was her lover. But through all these exciting events, the lovers emerge and find happiness in the end.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture its strongest and most natural exploitation angles will be the straightaway announcement that "William Fox presents Gladys Brockwell in 'Chasing Rainbows.' The producer and the star undoubtedly have a good following. This should of course be augmented by the catch lines which this very elastic title inspire.

If you have a desire for special lobby lay-outs you can secure an array of restaurant cards such as "Ham and Eggs, 40 cents," "Not responsible for umbrellas and hats," etc., etc. Then a centre placard bearing the words, "Don't try to jolly the pretty little waitress, as she is a man-hater." If you are a believer in the so-called "circus" stuff or ballyhoo for the lobby you can secure a pretty girl dressed as a waitress. "She is reducing the high cost of living by dealing squarely off the arm, but is not responsible for the cost of high heart action among the males."

Beauty conquers lawless men in "Chasing Rainbows," Fox production

PROGRAM READER

She was a man-hater.

But she was a beautiful girl and the men would not permit her to hate them.

And she weakened in her determination to hate ALL men. Because you know really there are a few good men in the world.

But she received her jolt early in life when she found that the man who had been courting her had a wife and child whom he had deserted.

Now wouldn't this upset any young lady's equilibrium?

Gladys Brockwell is the star of a William Fox feature coming to this theatre next week. It is entitled "Chasing Rainbows."

It is not only a colorful title but a colorful drama. And Miss Brockwell appears in the role of a waitress. She asks her employers to send her to one of their railroad lunch rooms in the very far west where she can get away from unreliable designing men.

And it is there in a little desert town where she meets with adventures galore and finds her romance.

CATCH LINES

She deals squarely off the arm to help reduce the high cost of living.

"DELIVERANCE"
(LEIBFREED-MILLER)

Helen Keller Scores in Film

MARK TWAIN said: "The two greatest characters of the nineteenth century were Napoleon and Helen Keller." Napoleon attempted to conqeur the world with his army. Helen Keller has conquered it with her mind.

She also conquered her first night audience who witnessed her performance in a new photoplay, "Deliverance." Rounds of applause greeted each act as it ended.

A girl born into the world, deaf, dumb and blind. Could there be greater handicaps? Yet she has succeeded in overcoming every obstacle and is a graduate of Radcliffe College.

The photoplay in which she appears portrays the story of her life. The film is intensely interesting and makes a comparison between knowledge and ignorance by introducing into the story another character, a child born of foreign parents who is reared in ignorance, hating life and doubting and disparing its material prospects.

This picture is lifted from the plane of mere entertainmnet by Miss Keller's portrayal of herself. By it is set an example which is an inspiration to those who falter when the way is hard. It should be seen by all classes because of the message it carries and the lesson it teaches.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Helen Keller comes to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in what is said to be one of the most human interest stories ever thrown upon the screen.

"Deliverance" is the title and the star portrays the story of her life, which she says is "My Message to the World."

The feature is in three episodes and covers three periods of her life.

The story opens with Helen's birth in Tusumbia, Alabama, and shows the bitter disappointment of her parents in discovering that she is blind, deaf and dumb. When she reaches the age of seven, her parents decide that although she is terribly handicapped, she must be given an education and procure the services of a young lady, who is none other than the famous Anne Sullivan, played by Ann Mason, who has been with her for the past thirty years, to give her this advantage.

At this early age, Miss Keller is pictured as a very incorrigible child and Miss Sullivan at times almost despairs of her, but with wonderful patience and perseverance her mind is gradually developed and kindness and ambition takes the place of her former wilfulness.

To give the story contrast another young child is brought into the film. She is Nadja, daughter of an immigrant whose father is killed and whose mother declaring that the world is "all wrong" instills these thoughts into the child, causing her mind to be blind to the good there is in life.

In the second episode we see Helen preparing for college, assisted by the faithful Anne Sullivan and a very touching moment is shown when Helen enters the college examination room alone, while her teacher remains outside in suspense, awaiting the outcome.

Miss Keller appears herself in the third episode as a graduate from college and the episode shows her life up to the present, and the wonderful work she is doing for the uplift of humanity. Her accomplishments are also shown, such as riding, dancing, etc., and her method of speech.

PROGRAM READER

Helen Keller will appear in "Deliverance" (her message to the world), at this theatre on ——— of ——— week. It is said to be one of the most powerful human interest stories ever written and carries with it one of the greatest lessons ever told.

This is the life story of the famous Helen Keller, who, although born blind, deaf and dumb, succeeded in mastering the intricacies of a college education.

The film takes us back to her early childhood when with Anne Sullivan, her wonderful teacher, she began her studies. It carries us through her maidenhood days and shows us the struggles she went through in order to accomplish her object and the unbounded joy she felt on passing her college entrance examinations.

A scene from "Deliverance" starring Helen Keller, to be released for state rights

CATCH LINES

Although born deaf, dumb and blind she succeeded in mastering the intricacies of a college education.

At the ——— next ——— see Helen Keller in "Deliverance," and see how she did it.

Helen Keller has a message to deliver to you in "Deliverance." See it at the ——— next ———.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a number of selling points in this feature. First, concentrate upon the star and play her up in all your advertising. Send out human interest stories telling of the wonderful feat she accomplished in graduating from college, although she was born deaf, dumb, and blind. Tell of the tremendous task it was to accomplish this and the years of hard work that went with it, and remember also that she learned the method of speech and that she dances and rides horseback. Let your patrons know that they will be inspired to do greater and better work after viewing this picture. And they will, of that there is no doubt.

And do not forget to mention Miss Anne Sullivan, her teacher, who struggled with her for thirty years, from the time she was seven years old. Tell of her patience and perseverance and her never failing effort to give the blind girl an education. Feature the lives of these two women struggling together until their object was accomplished.

"HOME"
(JEWEL-UNIVERSAL)

Human Story Has Heart Appeal and a Moral

LOIS WEBER'S latest contribution to the screen, "Home," is a human little play and one that is founded upon an excellent moral. The value of home, that there is no place like it in the wide, wide world, is woven into the pattern with rare delicacy, if not a great deal of dramatic force. It is such a simple story that the author-director's gift of compression might have been used to advantage, for it would be dramatically stronger in three quarters of the footage. However, Lois Weber always has something to say and something with a moral. So "Home" has its appealing qualities even though it isn't big in any way.

Two homes are contrasted to emphasize its theme. One is a princely palace where wealth and luxury rule, the other is a modest cottage which generates love, faith and happiness. The object of the drama is to point a lesson—a lesson which places a value on home whether it may be a manger. The action drags when the heroine persists in staying at the house of wealth when she has realized its shortcomings.

The story is in no way novel nor dramatic, but it interests because of its human quality. Mildred Harris brings out its values excellently, assisted by a well rounded cast.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Elmer Lacy .....Frank Elliott
John Deering .....John Cossar
Mrs. Deering .....Clarissa Selwynne

Written, adapted and directed by Lois Weber.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story full of heart throbs about a small-town girl whose mind is filled with visions of marrying a rich man is told in "Home," the latest Universal production, starring Mildred Harris (Mrs. Charles Chaplin), which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. It was written and directed by Lois Weber, one of the leading figures of the screen world and who was responsible for Miss Harris's entry as a star in the production of "The Price of a Good Time."

Two homes are contrasted in the play. One is the home of Millicent Rankin, wherein dwells love and happiness; the other is the home of Beatrice Deering, a daughter of luxury, whose home is the gathering place of wealthy idlers. Through an unusual chain of circumstances Millie finds an excuse to leave her mother and a sick sister in order to visit her school chum, Beatrice. There at the latter's home she meets Elmer Lacy, who ends his intrigue with Mrs. Deering to devote attention to the small-town girl. Millicent almost compromises herself and then nobly steps in when the husband of Mrs. Deering is about to discover his wife's liaison with Lacy.

Then comes the awakening. She goes home, where pretense is thrown aside, and is happy to be with her small-town boy again. It is a human play and its humanity is admirably brought out by the author-director. Miss Harris gives a creditable performance. A capable cast renders good support.

PROGRAM READER

A fashionable boarding school and the association of rich girls distorted Millicent Rankin's good judgment. First she wounded her mother's pride by making her feel that she was ashamed of her home. Then she went to a summer house party on the invitation of one of her wealthy girl friends. She was intent on capturing a rich man for a husband. She was ashamed of her parents and her own modest little home. But amid the sneers and the snubs that a pseudo aristocracy knows so well how to administer, Millie learned her lesson.

How she became humbled in pride, how she realized that her home and her parents meant everything to her, how she discovered gold from the dross are the events which provide the dramatic threads of this little human play, "Home," which will come to this theatre in the near future with Mrs. Charles Chaplin (Mildred Harris) as the star. You must see this picture—it is a gem.

SUGGESTIONS

In all your exploitation of this picture concentrate entirely upon the theme. Bring out that a home is everything in the scheme of life. There we go in sorrow; there it is we find solace. So play up the theme strongly. Bring out its human appeal and the sentiment. Bring out that a home may be a princely palace if one's heart is in the right place. Use the title for catch lines. Such as "There's No Place Like Home." Bring out that the wealthy may build their palaces, but they cannot make them as homey as the little cottage of the working man unless their hearts are good. Bring out the contrast of a selfish home, where luxury and vanity are worshipped and a generous home where love and happiness reign.

Tell that the heroine never appreciated her home until she found herself in the home of others. Bring out that it is real and human. And make mention of the author's name. Lois Weber is one of the commanding figures of the screen world. And feature the star in every way possible. Use her married name (Mrs. Charles Chaplin). Make the picture a sort of old home week in your theatre.

Mildred Harris appears for Universal in "Home"

CATCH LINES

She came from a modest home and when she went to a fashionable school she met several girls who lived in villas by the sea. She longed to visit them. And she had to keep up appearances by impressing upon them that she also lived in a palace. But a time came when she learned to love her home. See "Home."

Her home was a modest little cottage and her parents were poor. But one day she was invited to a palace of the rich. But with all its splendor it could not compare with her home. For there happiness could be found. See "Home."

She didn't appreciate her own home until she had found herself in a palace. Here luxury and vanity reigned. And her own home was a haven of love and happiness. See the Universal picture "Home."

She was ashamed of her home and parents. Then through sneers and she learned something that

"THE TRAP"
(UNIVERSAL)

A Passable Regular Program Type

A DRAMATIC story of the Yukon, with the last half of the story set in New York, and devoid of many intense periods or melodramatic thrills. The only suspense is the maze of doubt for a few reels as to which of two very estimable young fellows, the leading woman will be tied to in the final close-up. But the fourth reel graciously provides another sweetheart for the disappointed one. A passable regular program type.

Direction, star and cast as a whole do not measure up to the possibilities of the story. The fight is poorly handled and the really big scene misses entirely.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities of this picture according to the respective patronages are:—Cosmopolitan, average puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, less than average puller and not generally pleasing; Family, good average puller and generally pleasing; Labor, average puller and not generally pleasing.—Length, 6 reels.—Released August 25.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Jean Carson.....Olive Tell
Bruce Graham.....Sidney Mason
Ned Fallon.....Jere Austin
Doc Sloan.....Rod LaRocque
Helen Carson.....Tallulah Bankhead
Henry Carson.....Joseph Burke
Steve Fallon.....Earl Schenck

Story by Richard Harding Davis and Jules Eckert Goodman.
Scenario by Eve Unsell.
Directed by Frank Reicher.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Olive Tell is the star in the latest Universal Special Attraction, "The Trap," which comes to the ——— theatre beginning ———.

Richard Harding Davis and Jules Eckert Goodman wrote this compelling drama of the Yukon and it is heralded as an intensely human story of the gold rush days.

A New York school teacher accompanies her father to the Yukon and he prospects for gold in company with Ned Fallon, an estimable young fellow, with a renegade brother, Steve. During their absence on a prospecting trip the young school teacher is lonesome and agrees to marry Steve Fallon.

Afterwards he comes home drunk and boasts that he has another wife in Seattle. When he leaves the house for good she determines to say nothing to her father or to Ned, the brother of Steve, about the marriage. Ned Fallon returns from his prospecting trip sucessful and deeds half of his claim to the girl. She confesses that she cannot marry him now and tells him of her marriage to his brother.

A visiting New York broker accompanies herself and father back to New York and she marries the broker after hearing that Steve is killed. When Ned Fallon finally visits New York he finds that his brother Steve's old partner in crime, was blackmailing the young wife. He lays a trap for him which reveals one of the most tremendous scenes in the production.

And he also wins for his very own the heart of the young broker's pretty sister. The jealousy of the broker when he first learned that Ned Fallon had deeded one-half of his mining claim to his wife is another big scene and is responsible for many misunderstandings and heartaches until he finally discovers that the love of the young miner is really for the broker's own sister and that the deed to the mine had been made out years before under Klondike skies.

PROGRAM READER

Marked bills were passed to the blackmailer and the detective was concealed in the clothes closet all ready and anxious to leap upon his prey and arrest him.

Just then he heard the hero cry, "Look out, Kelly, he's locked the door."

And the detective found himself locked in and helpless.

There were sounds of a terrific scuffle. And then, a deep silence, while the detective struggled frantically to free himself from the confines of the stuffy closet.

Five shots rang out and he heard the sound of a body falling.

He was happy to see that it was the hero who freed him and that the blackmailer lay helpless on the floor. There was a bullet hole in the sleeve of the hero's coat where a bullet had grazed him.

And the hero was acquitted by a jury as the detective swore that he had killed this blackmailer in self defense.

But the peculiar part of it is that the hero did not kill the blackmailer and this was but the working out of a trap.

And—"The Trap" is the title of the Universal Special Attraction coming to this theatre next week with Olive Tell as the star.

Olive Tell is star in "The Trap," a Universal feature

The plot and action of this dramatic story of the Klondike up to the final scenes in New York City places it among the very best of the Richard Harding Davis stories.

SUGGESTIONS

Several angles can be used upon the exploitation of this picture when you have booked it. You should mention that the star, Olive Tell, has already registered heavily and will be well remembered from her great work in "To Hell with the Kaiser," "Secret Strings," "The Girl and the Judge," etc., etc. Also make the fact prominent that the authors are Richard Harding Davis and Jules Eckert Goodman.

"Who Killed Doc Sloan?" is a good wording for your center lobby card. And underneath these words should appear: "Everybody is guessing until the final of 'The Trap,' which is shown here with Olive Tell as the star." Impress upon your prospective patrons that this is a stirring and unusual drama of the Yukon in the gold rush days.

CATCH LINES

A stirring trail of love and hate from the Yukon to Manhattan.

Five shots, a heavy fall, and "The Trap" has sprung.

Echoes of Cain—"His renegade brother had robbed him of his sweetheart.

The very day he discovered gold he lost his great love.

"The Trap" was his trap and he thought he was guilty. But he was innocent.

"UPSTAIRS"
(GOLDWYN)

Amusing and Ridiculously Funny

A COMEDY with every scene an interior, and set in the several departments of a modern big-city hotel. The star runs the gamut from kitchen scullion in boys' clothes to society bud on the dance floor in a stunning gown. The slight plot gives zest to the swift-running comedy.

The star is at her best and has most capable support. This photoplay is not only amusing, but ridiculously funny. Both direction and continuity are above par in every detail for such a lively comedy offering.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for the respective patronages are:—Cosmopolitan, big puller and greatly pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, big puller and wholly pleasing; Labor, good puller and entirely pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 3.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mabel Normand is coming to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in her latest Goldwyn picture entitled, "Upstairs."

All the scenes in her new comedy portray life in a big-city modern hotel, where the star first appears in boy's clothes as the kitchen scullian until the finale, when she emerges dressed like a society debutante on the ballroom floor.

"Upstairs" is described as one of the most ridiculously funny comedies that Mabel Normand has ever appeared in. In the garb of a boy she labors in the kitchen of a large hotel and often steals toward the upstairs where a jazz band is oozing noises for the society dancers. She attracts the attention of a nice youth of wealth, but the only way he can become acquainted with her is to exchange positions with one of the regular bell boys.

He smuggles to her a handsome gown which he was supposed to take to the dry cleaners, and she dons it. This is to be just for an hour or so to permit her to do some dancing on the ballroom floor upstairs. How she obtains the shoes to go with the gorgeous gown is one of the funniest incidents of the photoplay.

The house detective mistakes the girl for the owner of the gown, who it seems is eloping with her chauffeur against her father's wishes. This leads to a great many more amusing situations. When the "bell boy" wants to warn the girl that she is really talking to the detective of the hotel he pages as follows, "Miss O. B. Carefull."

So therefore the heroine does not compromise herself. In the final mix-up which ensues when the father of the would-be eloper arrives the girl is able to save the young society miss from making a terrible mistake and succeeds in unmasking the real desires of the chauffeur.

This earns for her the gratitude of the father and the slavey is assured of remaining "Upstairs" for keeps.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a picture, star and title here that can be successfully exploited many different ways. It is the custom of some exhibitors to refrain from exploiting comedies to the great extent that they go into exploiting dramatic photoplays. This is undoubtedly a mistake and any good comedy will stand your limit of exploitation and make many new additions to your regular patrons.

Call their attention to the fact that this is Mabel Normand of "Mickey" and "Tillie's Punctured Romance" fame. Both of these pictures registered so heavily and had so many repeat dates that if you emphasize this fact it should prove to be a wonderfully strong puller. Use the material in this "Program Reader" and also the material from these "Catch Lines" for your newspaper advertising and also on snipes, throwaways and long quarter-sheets.

Mabel Normand, starred in "Upstairs," a Goldwyn feature

PROGRAM READER

She was of the lower twenty and wanted to associate with the upper ten.

The jazz of the upstairs ballroom was too alluring to resist.

So she came out of the kitchen and discarded her boy's clothes.

And appeared among the elite gowned as a budding debutante.

There's only one girl in the whole world that could do this and get away with it. The ethics of the kitchen comes into contact with the decorum of the parlor.

Who is this bold minx that dares to trespass the dignity of the mighty?

Why, it's none other than that effervescent comedienne Mabel Normand.

And Mabel evolutes from soup to jazz.

Democracy again victorious against autocracy and striking on all fourteen points.

Laughter comes high in these days of war, strikes, and high cost of living.

But at our regular prices the people of this city can be entertained next week by that leading screen comedienne, Mabel Normand, in her latest rollicking Goldwyn picture, "Upstairs."

CATCH LINES

She pulls herself "Upstairs" by the straps of another woman's shoes.

Camouflaged in another woman's gown she evolutes from kitchen slavey to social butterfly.

Mabel Normand gallivants from soup tureens downstairs to jazz tea "Upstairs."

She was only a kitchen mechanic, but carved her way "Upstairs" among the upholstered vamps.

One girl just jazzes her way fr lowly mop to the highly perfu puff.

S-L Guessing Contest in Full Swing

The guessing contest inaugurated several weeks ago by S-L Pictures in connection with the title of their state right's production, "Virtuous Men," has grown to widespread proportions throughout the entire country. The various state right's distributors controlling the S-L picture from coast to coast have placed the contest in full swing through the medium of their exhibitors and the local newspapers. Unusual interest has been manifested in the contest on the part of motion picture patrons and thus far more than one hundred thousand interpretations of the meaning of "Virtuous Men" have been forwarded by buyer and exhibitor to the S-L New York offices.

The participants in the guessing contest in many instances have gone to great lengths through means of the dictionary and research work to prove their contention as to the meaning of "Virtuous Men" as applied to the story told by the production. Strange to say, thus far all of the answers received have been far wide of the mark, as the great majority of theatre patrons immediately jump to the conclusion that the word "virtuous" pertains only to matters of sex.

The guessing contest will close on the first of September and it is believed that before that time close to one million patrons will have placed their "guess" as to the real meaning of the title.

Good Word from Mutt and Jeff in London

Great things are promised by Captain "Bud" Fisher, the famous comic artist and creator of "Mutt and Jeff," who is on a tour of the world in the interest of Fox Film Corporation, for whom he is making exclusive original drawings of these funny little characters for the Fox weekly issue of Animated Cartoons.

In quest of brand new material for the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, Captain Fisher recently arrived in Europe, and the results of his visit to London and other cities in England have convinced him that he is well on the way to providing exhibitors in the United States with better, funnier Mutt and Jeff cartoons than ever—as he promised to do.

"The Bandbox" in Big Tie-up

Nation-Wide Bookshop Link-Up Is Planned for Hodkinson Release

W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION, distributor of all future productions made by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., announces that "The Bandbox," first of the powerful Louis Joseph Vance series starring Doris Kenyon, now nearing completion, will be ready for release in the latter part of September, preceded and followed by a heavy advertising and exploitation campaign and by book publisher link-ups of an unusual character.

In keeping with other campaigns devised on the big productions released through Hodkinson nation-wide arrangements have been made with book-stores for the liberal exploitation of "The Bandbox," and already publisher advertising of this production has been arranged by Arthur F. Beck, treasurer of the Dietrich-Beck, Inc., and president of the Artco productions starring Leah Baird, to include all of the book selling mediums both of the wholesale and retail book trade.

"The Bandbox," in the opinion of Theodore C. Deitrich, president of Deitrich-Beck, Inc., is Doris Kenyon's greatest screen achievement. Never before have her well-known dramatic talents been given such wide scope as in the Louis Joseph Vance story, which also provides her numerous opportunities for her original comedy bits that have endeared the beautiful star to thousands of admirers both on the stage and screen.

Supporting Miss Kenyon in "The Bandbox" are the following prominent players: Alexander Gaden, Grota Hartman, Walter McEwan, Helen Montrose, Maggie Weston, Edward Keppler, Logan Paul, Lorraine Harding and William Brotherhood.

"The Brat" Nazimova's Best

Star Herself and Metro Officials Say It Is Her Greatest Production

NAZIMOVA'S power as a mistress of the tragic moods, which in her portrayals of Norah, in "A Doll's House" and Hedda, in "Hedda Gabler," by Henryk Ibsen, brought her fame overnight with her New York debut as an English-speaking actress, has an outlet in "The Brat," her newest, and in her opinion her greatest screen production. "The Brat" is to be a first of September release by Metro, under its "fewer and better" pictures innovation.

Tragedy stalks into the life of "The Brat," although the picturization of Maude Fulton's stage play is mainly humorous — whimsically humorous, with most clever character drawing.

Nazimova and Charles Bryant made the screen adaptation of "The Brat" from the script used by Oliver Morosco in his stage production of the piece. And they introduced a number of situations that were not shown on the stage. One of these was the scene wherein "The Brat" takes her life with a shot from an automatic pistol.

Metro officials who saw a projection room showing of "The Brat" declare that Nazimova performs the suicide scene with such realism as to cause a thrill of startled terror in the beholder. And the feat was done with some risk to the brilliant Russian star. For she placed the steel weapon to her side, muffled under a fur piece, and fired a blank cartridge. The jet of flame burned her gown, but she had taken the precaution to protect herself.

Kremer on a Tour of Eastern States

Victor Kremer has left his Chicago headquarters and started a whirlwind campaign of the Eastern states for the Victor Kremer Film Features. He expects to spend a month or more in the various states between Chicago and the Atlantic coast.

Mr. Kremer has just completed a tour of the western states and southwestern Canada, where he had success in disposing of the various features and short reel subjects he controls to state right distributors.

"I hope and expect that my eastern trip will be as prolific as my western," said Mr. Kremer. "If such is the case, as I am confident of from the number of inquiries I have already received from State Right buyers, I shall have the country pretty well sold. Business is coming in splendidly from all directions."

The features which Mr. Kremer is putting the most stress upon are a new picture by Crane Wilbur, entitled "Stripped for A Million," a thrilling feature, "Strife" starring George Le Guere, "When Arizona Won," with Shorty Hamilton and ten Essanay multiple reel plays, including features starring Henry B. Walthall, Bryant Washburn, Richard C. Travers, Jack Gardner and Taylor Holmes. The short subjects include three blocks of ten pictures each, the Broncho Billy western dramas, the Snakeville western comedies, and the Fables in Slang by George Ade.

Real Press Sheet on "Thirteenth Chair"

Exhibitors who have been denouncing press sheets of late because they contained material that was not fit for publication in newspapers, are referred by Pathe to the special sheet just issued on "The Thirteenth Chair." This press sheet was "published by Pathe in the interest of motion picture editors," and was written with an especial appeal for use by the most discriminating writers on motion pictures.

The press sheet is being issued by Pathe as an adjunct to the campaign book issued on "The Thirteenth Chair" and which contains among much other valuable matter, publicity material to be used before and during the run of the picture.

Pathe frankly admits that "this sheet is composed mostly of facts, but with some fancies. The facts are real facts.

Blackton on Third Feature

As Yet Untitled, Production Will Be an Original Story for Sylvia Breamer

Yvonne Delva, co-starring with Creighton Hale in "The Thirteenth Chair," a Pathe

FOLLOWING the announcement that "My Boy" has been definitely selected as the title of the first production of The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., and that Commodore Blackton has completed filming of "Dawn," the second in the series, comes the news that he begins work this week in his Brooklyn studios on the third production for the new organization of which he is president and director-general.

The story of this third picture is an original one from the pen of Stanley Olmsted, who has also written the continuity. The title has not yet been selected and probably will not be decided upon until the film is well under way. For a time it will belong to the catalogue of "nameless pictures," though while in production will probably be referred to as "Sunset," the name under which Mr. Olmsted has been writing it. This single title will not be retained for the production, however, since it does not adequately suggest the type of story presented. The plot has been developed around the personality of Sylvia Breamer, who, with Robert Gordon, will again be featured. Mr. Gordon has what might be termed the "fattest" role in "Dawn," so now it is Miss Breamer's turn—"turn about being fair play" with co-stars—and this third production contains a leading role which promises to give her an exceptionally good emotional opportunity it is said.

The supporting cast has not been completed by Commodore Blackton, though it is announced that Fannie Rice, the comedienne, who makes her screen debut in "My Boy" and will also be seen in "Dawn," continues under the Blackton banner, as will also Gladys Valerie, who appears in "Dawn," the two having been retained for important roles in this third production. Commodore Blackton will again personally direct the picture, with Jack Martin assisting and William S. Adams at the camera.

Artist Makes Sketches of Goldwyn Stars

William Gropper, one of the most brilliant and original of the younger group of American artists, has been secured by Goldwyn to make impressionistic sketches of the Goldwyn stars —Geraldine Farrar, Madge Kennedy, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Will Rogers and Tom Moore—as they appear in their different characterizations. These sketches have been made a part of the unique publicity service which Goldwyn is furnishing newspapers and fan magazines throughout the country.

E. K. Lincoln Signed

Walter F. Niebuhr, president of the American Cinema Corporation has just signed E. K. Lincoln to appear in a series of photoplays. Mr. Lincoln will begin work about September First.

Realism in Settings of New Triangle

In keeping with Ellen Terry's long and interesting career as one of the foremost stars on the English-speaking stage, the ambitious screen offering in which she will soon appear under the Triangle banner, is a stage story with the atmosphere of the theatre, both before and behind the footlights, maintained throughout on an unusually elaborate scale.

Not only is the atmosphere of the theatre maintained throughout but the retired star actually plays the greatest performance of her wonderful career —plays it in private life to expose a murderer and save her son from prison.

Leading Metro star, Nazimova, now starring in "The Brat"

Bonus for Local "U" Exchange Men

Beginning this week and continuing for the next five weeks Universal film salesmen in the New York office will receive a bonus on their gross sales for the week. This is in keeping with the activities of several of the other Universal exchanges.

According to Sam Zierler, exchange manager who announced the plan, the amount of bonus the salesmen receive is up to them entirely. The bonus system will probably be continued after the five weeks has elapsed, although a different plan will be made.

Latest Ford Weekly

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces for release on September 7, "The Anglers," the latest Ford Educational Weekly, a story of trout fishing on the Ausable River in the Adirondacks.

UNASKED—UNSOLICITED

THESE VOLUNTARY

Simplex Tributes

FROM MEN WHO KNOW

REACH US EVERY WEEK

August 5th

F. G. Fleishman, Mgr., Novelty Theatre, Portland, Oregon, writes:—

* * * "Am using three of your machines in two houses * * * one I bought six years ago which has been in constant use THIRTEEN HOURS A DAY FOR SIX YEARS WITHOUT ANY REPAIRS." * * *

August 9th

G. A. Grider, Lyric Theatre, Stockton, Cal., writes:—

* * * "It may interest you to know that your machines No. 1549 and 1550 installed in 1912 have been running continuously since that date and are still projecting a good picture. THE ONLY NEW PARTS THAT HAVE BEEN PUT IN ARE SHOES AND NEW SPROCKETS." * * *

August 10th

Harry E. Smith, Orpheum Theatre Company, Topeka, Kans., writes:—

* * * "The Orpheum Theatre of which I am the operator has just installed two new Type "S" Simplex machines and I have rebuilt my old 1913 model Simplex that we use in one of the other houses. THIS MACHINE I RAN FOR SEVEN YEARS STEADY WITHOUT ONE CENT FOR REPAIRS—SOME MACHINE!" * * *

July 14th

W. L. Keyser, Pastime Theatre, Iowa City, Ia., writes:—

* * * "The Simplex we installed two years ago last February HAS BEEN RUNNING SEVEN AND A HALF HOURS EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR AND HAS NOT LAID DOWN ONE SECOND. I am using the same star and cam that came in the machine and the picture is absolutely steady." * * *

July 1st

Herbert L. Graf, Alamo Theatre, Washington, D. C., writes:—

* * * "We have used your Simplex Projectors for over four years and I take pleasure in saying that the service they have rendered CANNOT BE EQUALLED BY ANY OTHER MACHINE, the upkeep of your machine is very small in cost, smaller than any other machine I have ever worked on and I MUST SAY I HAVE RUN EVERY MAKE MACHINE SO FAR." * * *

July 30th

Sam Schwartz, Owner, Aztec Theatre, Eagle Pass, Tex., writes:—

* * * "I have tried five other different makes of machines and THE SIMPLEX IS THE ONLY ONE WITH WHICH I AM ABSOLUTELY SATISFIED IN EVERY WAY, NOT ONLY AS A MATTER OF ECONOMICAL OPERATION BUT OF PERFECT PROJECTION AS POSSIBLE." * * *

Does their experience with SIMPLEX convey anything to you?

Dorothy Phillips

America's Greatest Emotional Actress in

"DESTINY"

PLAYING to millions all over the world in that tremendous success, "The Heart of Humanity," the marvelous art of Dorothy Phillips has made her one of the best known and best loved figures on the screen today. Good showmanship says —show her now in "DESTINY"—a great drama of the mystery of Fate which Dorothy Phillips makes supremely human.
